But the great objection to this proposition is the one suggested by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, and that is the amount of correspondence to and from the Army. It is certainly very great now; and it is carried on in a great measure between people not very well able to pay an increase of postage. How it would be received and what would be its effect in relation to that large branch of the present correspondence, I am unable to say. I am not sufficiently convinced of its impolicy to throw any objections in the way of the Senate adopting it, if in their opinion it ought to be adopted. I think it somewhat a doubtful problem, a questionable policy. That is all I can say about it. I am not so far convinced of it as that I would say it ought to be rejected. I have not come to any such definite conclusion about it. I am willing to leave it entirely to the wisdom of the Senate, and not have it referred to me for decision.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it. ["Oh, no."] I withdraw the call. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe that is the last amendment of the committee. The next printed amendment is not an amendment from the committee, but one that I proposed offering myself, and I ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, that amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK. I offer, from the Committee on Finance, the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time prior to the 1st day of July, 1866, assign to the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue such number of clerks as he may deem necessary, or the exigency of the public service may require; and the privilege of franking all letters and documents pertaining to the duties of his office, and of receiving free of postage all such letters and documents, is hereby extended to said Commissioner.

This amendment is rendered necessary by the expiration of a provision of the law as it now stands. The present law is:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time prior to the 1st day of July, 1865, assign to the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue such number of clerks as he may deem necessary," &c.

And as no other provision has been made for the internal revenue department, unless we extend this act for another year from July next, the whole provision in regard to clerks will expire at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does that extend the franking privilege?

Mr. CLARK. It extends the franking privilege with it. It stands like the old law for one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the bill on page 26, by striking out lines six hundred and twenty-four, six hundred and twenty-five, six hundred and twenty-six, and six hundred and twenty-seven, in the following words:

On tobacco twisted by hand, or reduced from leaf into a condition to be consumed, without the use of any machine or instrument, and without being pressed, sweetened, or otherwise prepared, thirty cents per pound.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

On tobacco put up in the twist or rolled, either for chewing or smoking, and so sold, whether prepared by hand or machinery, and whether sweetened or not, thirty-five cents per pound.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will suggest a little alteration in the language simply of that amendment. I have consulted with an inspector in my State since the Senator and myself prepared this amendment, and I forgot to show it to the Senator. It is this:

On tobacco put up in twist or rolls as chewing and smoking tobacco, and sold for consumption in that form, whether prepared by machinery or by hand, or whether sweetened or not, thirty-five cents per pound.

Mr. CLARK. I do not see that that varies it any.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, it does not; but I think the language is better.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection to taking that amendment in lieu of mine; it is nothing but a mere verbal alteration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the bill further in line six hundred and thirty-one by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "forty;" so that the clause will read:

On fine-cut chewing tobacco, whether manufactured with the stems in or not, or however sold, whether loose, in bulk, or in rolls, packages, papers, wrappers, or boxes, forty cents per pound.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the House provision.

Mr. CLARK. "Forty" is the House provision, and it is necessary to bring it up to make it correspond with certain others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be put in the other form, of agreeing to the printed amendment of the committee, striking out "forty" and inserting "thirty-five."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move further to amend the bill by striking out lines six hundred and thirty-two and six hundred and thirty-three, in the following words:

On smoking tobacco of all kinds not otherwise herein provided for, thirty-five cents per pound.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

On smoking tobacco made with all the stems in, the leaf not having been butted or stripped from the stem, and on refuse tobacco known as fine-cut shorts, including all scraps produced in the handling or manufacture of tobacco and cigars, and all imitations of tobacco or substitutes therefor, and on all kinds of smoking tobacco not herein otherwise provided for, thirty cents per pound.

On all smoking tobacco made exclusively of leaf, forty cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. On page 28, line six hundred and eighty-one, I move to amend the amendment of the committee, that amendment not having been adopted, by inserting after the word "cigarettes" the words "not otherwise herein provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Now, I hope the amendment of the committee, striking out from line six hundred and forty to line six hundred and eighty, inclusive, and inserting the words in italics will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question upon that amendment.

The amendment was to strike out the following clause:

"On all cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, made wholly of tobacco, or of any substitutes therefor, whether imported or of domestic manufacture, sixty cents per pound; and no tare for the box or package in which any cigars or cigarettes are packed shall be allowed in ascertaining the weight. And the duty as aforesaid on all cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes imported shall be levied, collected, and paid under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe;" by inserting in the last paragraph relating to cigars, after the words "imprisonment not exceeding thirty days," the words "and any person furnished with such permit may apply to the assistant assessor or inspector of the district to have any cigars of their own manufacture weighed; and on receiving a certificate of the weight, for which such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be paid by the owner thereof, may sell and deliver such cigars to any purchaser, in the presence of said assistant assessor or inspector, in bulk or unpacked, without payment of the duty. A copy of the certificate shall be retained by the assistant assessor, or by the inspector, who shall return the same to the assistant assessor of the district. The purchaser shall pack such cigars in boxes, and have the same inspected and marked or stamped according to the provisions of this act, and shall make a return of the same as inspected to the assistant assessor of the district, and, unless removed to a bonded warehouse, shall pay the duties on such cigars within five days after purchasing them to the collector of the district wherein they were manufactured, and before the same have been removed from the store or building of such purchaser, or from his possession; and any such purchaser who shall neglect for more than five days to pack and have such cigars duly inspected, and pay the duties thereon according to this act, or who shall purchase any cigars from any person not holding such permit, the duties thereon not having been paid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court, and the cigars shall be forfeited and sold, one fourth for the benefit of the informer, one fourth for the officer who seized or had them condemned, and one half shall be paid to the Government."

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes not otherwise herein provided for, made wholly of tobacco or any substitute therefor, on cheroots or short sixes, and on all cigars valued at fifteen dollars or less per thousand, with the tax included, five dollars per thousand; and on all cigarettes or cigars valued higher than as aforesaid, fifteen dollars per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. That completes the amendments in regard to tobacco, I believe.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is one other amendment upon the subject of tobacco. On page 20, line four hundred and sixty-one, I desire that the words "except into a bonded warehouse" shall be stricken out.

Mr. CLARK. I think we agreed to that.

Mr. HENDERSON. The effect of that will be to require that all tobacco shall be inspected before it leaves the place where it is manufactured.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. If the committee have got through with their amendments I have one to offer which I believe meets the approbation of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and I am confident will be an increase of revenue to the Government. It is to insert at the end of the provision in regard to lotteries the following:

Provided, That no license shall hereafter issue until the managers of a lottery now drawn in the States adhering to the Union shall give bond, in the sum of $1,000, that the person receiving such license shall not sell any ticket or supplementary ticket which has not been duly stamped according to law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not like the expression "adhering to the Union." "Represented in Congress" would be better.

Mr. RIDDLE. Well, move that amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. I move to amend the bill on page 23, line five hundred and thirty-five, by inserting after the word "railroad" the word "bolt," and after the word "spikes" in the same line the words "and tubes;" so that it will read:

On railroad chairs, and railroad, bolt, and ship spikes, and tubes made of wrought iron, five dollars per ton.

So as to put these articles all in the same class.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator what the effect of that will be.

Mr. COWAN. The effect of the amendment is to class bolt spikes and ship spikes together, in the first place. They are the same kind of material, and there is the same amount of work upon them. It will also put the same amount of tax upon tubes, such as the tubes out of which gas pipes are made. That is about the whole of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. I now move to amend the bill by striking out the eighth section, on page 47, the one requiring the appointment of inspectors for petroleum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the section read?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, sir.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That all petroleum or rock-oil, before the same is used or removed for any purpose, shall be inspected and gauged by some inspector appointed for the performance of such duties, who shall mark upon the cask or vessel containing such petroleum or rock-oil, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity of the contents of such cask or vessel, with the date of inspection and the name of the inspector, and shall make a return of all petroleum or rock-oil so inspected, with the name of the producer, to the collector, and a duplicate thereof to the assessor of the district. And any person who shall attempt fraudulently to evade the payment of the duty upon any petroleum or rock-oil by changing in any manner the mark upon any such cask or vessel shall forfeit the sum of $100 for each cask or vessel so altered or changed, to be recovered in the manner provided for the recovery of penalties imposed by the act to which this act is an amendment; and any inspector or other person who shall knowingly put upon any such cask or vessel any false or fraudulent mark shall be liable to the same penalty hereinbefore provided for each cask or vessel so fraudulently marked; and any person who shall purchase or sell any empty cask or vessel with the inspection marks thereon, or who shall use the same without removing the inspection marks therefrom, for the purpose of selling any other petroleum or rock-oil than that so inspected, shall be subject to a like penalty for each cask or vessel so purchased, sold, or used.

Mr. COWAN. I will endeavor to explain, if I can, why I think the section is entirely useless; and not only so, but absolutely mischievous and burdensome to the country and to the producer. When petroleum is produced from a well, either by pumping or by flowing, the oil passes into large tanks, which are perhaps fifteen feet high, and twelve or fourteen feet in diameter, and it remains there till it is removed for consumption and sale. When a dealer wants to buy a hundred barrels of oil, he calls on the owner of the oil, and makes a bargain for so much. On the next day the barrels come there in wagons, and the oil is drawn from these tanks, and filled into the barrels, and they are hauled off. Now, by the provisions of this bill the owner of the well is required every ten days to make a return of the amount that he sells in that way, or removes for consumption and sale; and within five days after he has made his account he is bound to pay the tax levied upon it. I think that is a sufficient security, and I do not see that there is any additional security from the fact of inspection.

But there is this difficulty about it: no man can sell unless he has an inspector at his elbow at the time of making the sale; because where the oil is not kept in barrels or casks, but is kept in these tanks, the producer of the oil will not furnish the barrels. It is the purchaser that furnishes the barrels and brings them there at the time of sale. I cannot conceive of anything that would be so inconvenient as to require, every time a hundred barrels of oil are sold, the inspector to be there to inspect it the moment it is put in barrels. These barrels are used over and over again, times without number; and it would be almost impossible to carry out this provision. The barrels would be worn out with the number of inspectors' marks made on them every time they came back to the well.

The Senate will observe the enormous number of inspectors that must necessarily be appointed under this section. No one single man could attend to more than five wells, and those wells must all be in the area of a single square mile; and when you come to reflect upon the number of wells and the area of territory covered by these wells, the inspectors would have to be almost as numerous as the locusts of Egypt to attend to this business. I think it is better to rely on the provisions of the two preceding sections and the penalties which are there fixed for attempting to evade the law.

I may remark, also, that there is such a publicity in regard to these wells and their sales that it would be impossible almost for them to make false returns. Every sale is watched with great care, and the exact price that is paid is known to everybody for a considerable distance around; so that, I will venture to say, in an oil-producing region where there are wells all about, if a man made a false return, it would be readily detected. The dealer is always in the neighborhood, and it could be detected through the medium of his testimony. I hope, therefore, that this section, requiring the appointment of such a large number of inspectors as this will necessarily involve, will be stricken out, and that we shall rely on the previous sections of this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. In my judgment this section ought not to be stricken out. It is the same provision precisely as is contained in regard to the inspection of whisky and other articles of that class. The Senator explained to me his purpose in offering this amendment; but I am afraid of the effect of it. I am afraid that if this section is stricken out we shall get no revenue from petroleum. There would be no guard at all except the oath of the producer. There are but two guards now in regard to this tax: one is the oath of the producer, who is required to make the return; and the other is the inspection of the officer; and these guards are applied to all this class of taxes. I do not think now, since we have introduced this tax in regard to petroleum, that we ought to strike out the mode of ascertaining the amount.

Mr. COWAN. I do not make this motion in the interest of the oil producers so much as I make it in the interest of the country. I am satisfied that it will require all the taxes you will get from the crude petroleum to pay the inspectors under this section. It is utterly impossible that you can provide any system of this sort without multiplying these officers so as to have one for every four or five wells; because, no matter what our power may be in the premises, we cannot stop the business of the country; and I know myself that there is no one thing so mischievous and such a nuisance in the administration of the present existing law in regard to spirits as just that thing of inspection. But there is this advantage there: when whisky is made it is put in barrels, and it remains in those barrels until it is carried away for consumption and sale; and it can remain for ten, twenty, or thirty days, as it sometimes has to do, till the inspector comes around. But with regard to petroleum, the whole system of carrying on the business will have to be changed if you adopt this section. You cannot inspect petroleum in a tank; it is utterly impossible. Before it can be inspected it must be put in barrels; and it is put in barrels at the moment of sale and at the moment when it goes away from the well. I should be very glad if there could be some means adopted by which the people could be relieved from the burden of waiting until the inspector comes around to inspect their whisky; because it frequently happens that a man having a distillery will have to wait ten or fifteen days and sometimes a month before the inspector comes around; and there have been cases where men have really suffered because they could not get their whisky to market on account of it not being inspected, it being impossible to get an inspector to attend to it; and we cannot appoint an inspector for every establishment. Everybody knows that that would utterly destroy all the tax we should receive; and we would waste it in paying this useless horde of officers.

The VICE PRESIDENT put the question on the amendment, and declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. If there be any objection to the levying of this tax upon petroleum we had better strike out the tax at once; but if there be no objection to the levying of the tax, then of course it must be inspected in some way in order to ascertain the quantity. We cannot leave it to the parties themselves to determine. Surely the object of the Government is to procure the tax, if it is levied; and if so, we ought to have some check upon the parties themselves. I do not understand how we are to determine the quantity of the oil unless we have this inspection.

Mr. COWAN. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I intended, if this amendment carried, to amend the other sections by imposing the tax on the barrel of petroleum. The barrel there used ranges from forty to forty-five gallons. No barrel is beyond forty-five gallons. I propose to raise the tax somewhat. I propose to amend the previous sections by imposing a tax of one dollar on every barrel. The oil men agree to that. It is now two cents a gallon; but they say if they are freed from this nuisance of inspection, they are willing that the tax should be raised to one dollar a barrel, and that no barrel shall exceed forty-five gallons. Then it will all be done by the barrel. If they choose to pay a dollar for a barrel containing less than forty-five gallons, as they will do for a long while until the lesser barrels are worn out, it will be all the better for the country; and in that way the objection of the Senator from Missouri will be obviated.

Mr. GRIMES. I voted with the Senator from Pennsylvania in favor of this amendment. I do not know whether I did it rightfully or wrongfully. The reason was I wanted to avoid creating another batch of office-holders if I could. I suppose the Senator from Missouri, or some other gentleman of the Committee on Finance, can tell us how many would probably be required if we do not strike out the section that is proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I seek, so far as my vote is concerned, to avoid paying as much for officers' salaries as the tax on petroleum will amount to. I see in addition to the number of officers to be created by this section, that another section provides for an additional lot of tobacco inspectors; and probably the Senator from Missouri is able to inform us how many would be likely to be required under these various provisions of the law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot answer the Senator from Iowa; I can only state to him this, that with the present high rates of duty levied upon the various manufactured articles in this country, and especially the one he alluded to on tobacco, unless there is an inspection, and a very close inspection of the article, every honest manufacturer of the article will be driven from the market. It is utterly impossible for a man who intends to manufacture and pay his tax honestly to do business unless the tobacco is inspected. I have positive information that it is manufactured to a very large extent by individuals who defraud the Government, and in defrauding the Government they can undersell the honest manufacturer, there being such inducements to fraud with the high taxes levied; and the honest manufacturer is thereby driven from the market. I cannot tell how many inspectors it will take; but if you intend to keep up these high rates, and protect the honest men in the country, I do not care how many it takes, you must furnish them. I am as anxious as the Senator from Iowa to avoid the appointment of unnecessary officers. I am sure I do not want a single inspector in this country if it can be avoided; but if you will impose the tax, there ought to be some machinery by which you will protect the honest man against the rogue.

I confess I know nothing about this question of the inspection of petroleum, for it is an article I know nothing about; but I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that, as I understand, it is not always the case that petroleum is removed from the well in the barrel; and unless the inspection is made in a short time after it is removed from the well there will be danger of their avoiding the tax entirely. It is a very extensive business; and I suppose the oil is removed in other ways besides barrels.

Mr. COWAN. It is true that at one time in the history of this trade the oil was removed in boats; but I think that perhaps that will never be the case hereafter. No doubt barrels will now be used in all cases. They have adopted the plan of placing the oil in barrels from the tank at Oil creek in Pennsylvania, where a great portion of the oil is produced.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I can furnish some of the elements with which a calculation can be made as to the number of inspectors which will be required under this section. The oil region in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia extends about two hundred miles, and is, I think, from fifty to one hundred miles in width. Over this region, at great distances frequently, these wells are scattered. The whole country is mountainous, with high ridges, where of course no oil is produced. The oil is procured in the valleys lying between these mountains; generally along the water courses, and most frequently at present in remote neighborhoods. Of course but a very small quantity of this oil is consumed in the country; but it all finds its way from both sides of the Ohio river to that river for the purpose of being shipped to the places where it is refined, or it is perhaps refined at those places on the Ohio river. What is taken into the refineries there can be no difficulty about. The assessor can ascertain that beyond a question and without any difficulty. The assessor will therefore have it in his power to collect the tax; and the assistant assessor of the district will always be there, and none of this oil can be shipped without his knowledge. The streams upon which this oil is found are small, and if it descends them by water, it comes down in flat-boats which can go no further than the Ohio river, unless they are taken in tow by the steamboats, or the oil is transferred to a steamboat; and therefore there must be an inspection on all these points of shipment on the Ohio river.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania alludes to the removal of it in bulk-boats. The conditions there are precisely the same. The oil is frequently turned into these boats, which when once gauged of course answer forever. It is necessary to ascertain how far the oil may be below the top line; but the conditions are the same with reference to them. They cannot proceed after they get to the Ohio river; that is, in the condition in which the oil is usually transported. They might be floated down the river; but very few will go down that way. They must be taken in tow by a steamboat, as they usually are; and when those boats are used it is usual to take them to Pittsburgh for the use of the Pittsburgh refineries. There is no difference in quality in this article as is the case with tobacco, of which the Senator from Missouri speaks. It is not an article of that kind where there is any temptation to fraud except the simple evasion of duty. It is generally sold in large quantities. There is very little use for it in the crude state. It must go to some refinery in order to be refined; and the chances of detection in any attempt to cheat the revenue will be as forty to one against it. My impression, therefore, is, from the detached condition of these wells—they may often be found in bunches, and then again none may be found for several miles—it will require a great number of inspectors on that account alone; and extending as this region does over so large a strip of country and places that are not readily accessible by the ordinary roads, it will of course require a still larger number. On the other hand, every provision is made in the preceding section to procure the return under oath of the amount produced; and the assessor will have it in his power, with a little care, to verify those returns, made under oath, without much difficulty; and all this in addition to what I have said, that all this oil must go either to a point of shipment where it will reach the seacoast and be transported to Europe, or go to some refinery where it will be manufactured into an illuminating oil. There is, therefore, the possibility of having every check which could be desired upon it without the intervention of these inspectors.

Mr. HENDERSON. It strikes me that if we rely upon the assessors in the district where these oil wells are to determine the quantity of oil that may be obtained from the different wells, we shall never get a true return of the quantity. I know full well that my friend from West Virginia would not advocate any policy whatever that would be calculated to deprive the Government of a cent; but we all know that it would be impossible for an assessor for a whole congressional district in West Virginia or Pennsylvania, where these oil wells are, to attend to this matter himself.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. He has assistants.
Mr. HENDERSON. My friend says he has assistants. I appeal to him and ask him if any three or four assistants of an assessor in one of the congressional districts where these oil wells are, could inspect all this oil. I will take for instance his own district in Wirt county and the counties adjoining in the State of West Virginia, where there are a great many wells, and I undertake to say it will take the assessor and fifteen or twenty assistants properly to inspect this oil. We all know that the assessor will have something else to do besides attending to these oil wells. As I understand it some of them produce from eight hundred to fifteen hundred barrels of oil per day; a great many of them are flowing wells; and there is not room enough there for the oil to be retained. It is carried off immediately; put into barrels and sent off; and in the thousands of barrels that are daily sent off from the oil region it would be utterly impossible for the assessor and assistants to see that it was properly inspected. We should have to rely entirely upon the honor and honesty of the individuals who are shipping it from the vicinity of the wells. But I am not disposed to put any obstacle in the way of the desire of these gentlemen, who certainly understand this question much better than myself. It strikes me, however, that we had better have an inspection, no matter what the cost may be.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The remark of the gentleman referring to my own neighborhood enables me to illustrate what I said better than I could without such reference. He states the number of wells in Wirt county. Now, every barrel of oil that is produced in Wirt county must seek the Little Kanawha river, either to be floated down that river or to be wagoned by its side, because such is the topography of our country that the roads must lie along the water courses. There are very few exceptions to that, and therefore all that oil does concentrate at Parkersburg in order to be shipped up or down the Ohio river, or at the first point it touches on the Northwestern Virginia railroad, which is but eleven miles from Parkersburg. At these two points an assessor will have it in his power to know of every barrel of oil which is produced from all that section of country.

Mr. COWAN. A single word. As long as the tax is levied on the gallon, of course there must be some mode of ascertaining how many gallons there are, and that seems to have given rise to the sixth section to provide for an inspection; but if, as I shall propose to amend the previous section, we impose the duty on the barrel, then the measurement by the inspectors does not become necessary, because the barrels will be readily counted and easily arrived at by everybody.

The VICEPRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment striking out the section.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Donlitle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey and Wright—28.

NAYS.—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Henderson, Howe, Morgan, Sherman, and Ten Eyck—9.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Buckalew, Harding, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Wilkinson, and Wilson—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. Now, in order to make the fourth section of the present bill (the sixth section of the House bill) conform to the position in which the bill is, I move to strike out on page 46, line four of the section, the words "two cents on each and every gallon" and insert "one dollar on each and every barrel of not more than forty-five gallons," as the duty on crude petroleum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am in favor of the spirit of the amendment; but suppose other casks are used, not barrels, will there not be a ground for debate?

Mr. COWAN. I made particular inquiry about that. The barrels range from forty to forty-five gallons; forty is the lowest, and forty-five the highest.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose it is put in casks.

Mr. COWAN. There are no casks used.

Mr. HENDERSON. But suppose after this tax is levied they should be used? Suppose the oil men should obtain casks holding sixty-five gallons, and ship the article in that way?

Mr. COWAN. Very well then; they have to pay on that quantity.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not if the Senator is done amending the section.

Mr. COWAN. You will see when I get done. I want to get one thing at a time. I now move, on the 47th page, in line eight of section five, as the bill stands, (section seven as it came from the other House,) to strike out the word "gallons" and insert "barrels," and in lines nineteen and twenty to strike out the words "gallons barreled or" and insert the word "barrels."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. I now move to add this proviso to the section on page 46:

Provided further, That when casks or barrels are used holding more than forty-five gallons the excess shall be paid for at the rate of one dollar for every forty-five gallons.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "or other vessels."

Mr. COWAN. I accept that modification.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to move a slight amendment on the 24th page of the bill, at line five hundred and seventy-nine. It is after the word "paid" to insert "or a sum paid equal thereto." It does not, I think, change the meaning of the text, but the object is to make it a little more clear.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the proviso be read as it will read if it be amended as now proposed.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Provided, however, That brass made of copper and spelter, on which a duty of three per cent. ad valorem shall have been assessed and paid, or a sum paid equal thereto, shall be assessed and pay a duty of three per cent. on the increased value only thereof.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to have an explanation of that amendment. I do not understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. As the proviso now stands, "brass made of copper and spelter, on which a duty of three per cent. ad valorem shall have been assessed and paid, shall be assessed and pay a duty of three per cent. on the increased value only thereof." If the tax has been assessed in some other form than ad valorem, if it has been a specific duty, which is the case in this instance, although it would be more than three per cent. ad valorem, there might be a question whether it came technically within the expression. My amendment is simply to make it clear that if a tax has been paid equal to the amount of three per cent. ad valorem, although it was paid in the form of a specific duty, it shall be the same as though it was an ad valorem tax.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not intended to evade the law in any way.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to offer an amendment, to be added to the fifth section, to come in after line six of that section, on page 46:

Provided, That any existing bank organized under the laws of any State having a paid up capital of not less than $75,000, which shall apply before the 1st day of July next for authority to become a national bank under the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, and shall comply with all the requirements of said act, shall, if such bank be found by the Comptroller of the Currency to be in good standing and credit, receive such authority in preference to new associations applying for the same.

The object of the section as it stands of course is to destroy the State banks, or to compel them to come into the national system.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the Senator had better offer this as a new section.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer it, then, as a new section, striking out the word "provided" and inserting the words "and be it further enacted." I propose, as the State banks are to be forced into the national system, to give them the preference over new associations in coming into it, provided they apply before the 1st of July next.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I have an amendment which I intended to offer to the banking system. I intended to offer it as a proviso to the fifth section, but probably it would come in more properly as a proviso to this amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island. Its object is to enable the State banks of West Virginia to avail themselves of the privilege of becoming national banks, though it is not confined to that State. I offer my amendment as a proviso to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, in this form:

Provided, That it shall be lawful for any bank or banking association organized under State laws and having branches, the capital being joint and assigned to and used by the mother bank and branches in definite proportions, to become a national banking association in conformity with existing laws, and to retain and keep in operation its branches or such one or more as it may elect to retain, the amount of the circulation redeemable at the mother bank and each branch to be regulated by the amount of capital assigned to and used by each.

It may be perhaps that the law as it now stands would not forbid banks of the character here described becoming national banks and retaining their branches; but there has been some misconception in relation to the character of these branches. It is not the system that prevails I believe in Indiana and Ohio where there are in fact a number of affiliated banks regulated by a central board of control, and the objection to their being transferred in a bunch and made national banks is that there cannot be two controlling powers. But the banks of the character described in the amendment that I have offered are found in our State, in Missouri, in Pennsylvania, I believe, and in some other States, and they amount simply to one bank having two or more offices at which it transacts its business. In the case of our banks the State owns about one half of the stock and in granting an additional subscription of stock on the part of the State—I will take a specific case with which I am more familiar—in granting an additional subscription on the part of the State they made it a condition that the Northwestern Bank at Wheeling should establish a branch with a capital of $100,000 at Parkersburg. That branch was long since established, twenty years ago, and has been in operation under a renewal of the charter ever since, and is now in operation. The point that I desire to accomplish here is to make it certain that these banks retaining this organization with a branch, may become national banks. They will be wholly under the national banking law; they will be wholly under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency as much as any other banks, and they will not in fact differ from any other banks that are created by the national law except in the single fact that they will have two or more offices where they transact business. The mother banks generally have a large capital while the branches have a smaller capital. In our case you could not withdraw those branches without withdrawing the benefaction, if you choose to call it so, of the State to neighborhoods not so wealthy and not so well able to have banks of their own.

I understand that there is no objection to this amendment. The objection of the Comptroller of the Currency, as I understood, only applied to the system of affiliated banks of which I have spoken. Now you have determined, so far as you have gone, to impose a tax of ten per cent. on the circulation of these banks which have been desirous and are authorized by a law passed at the present session of our Legislature to become national banks. I propose to let them do it without throwing off their branches, which perhaps they cannot do unless this additional authority is afforded. I cannot see any objection that can be made to it, and I trust that it will be adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia whether his proposition had not better come in as a separate amendment, instead of being offered as an amendment to mine.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I do not want to obstruct the Senator's amendment, but there seemed to be a general acquiescence in my proposition, and therefore I saw no objection to offering it as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. If there is no objection to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, I have no objection to its being attached to mine; but if there is any objection, I think they had better be separate.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. My amendment has the approbation of the Committee on Finance, and I see no objection to it.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to offer another amendment, and I shall have to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee or some member of the committee, who I believe understands this bill, where it ought to come in. I suppose, perhaps, it should come in in section three, page 45, the section which increases by twenty per cent. the duty upon all articles enumerated in section ninety-four of the act to which this is an amendment. I wish to place among the exceptions to the operation of that section contained in the proviso to it, the article of wood-screws. This article now pays double the tax paid upon all similar articles. The tax upon all manufactures of the class to which this product belongs is five per cent., while upon wood-screws it is ten per cent. This section, as it reads, will make the tax on all other articles six per cent., and the tax on wood-screws twelve per cent. I desire that the wood-screws shall be excepted from the operation of this section, and be left at ten per cent., while the other articles are put at six per cent.

I do not know why it is, but there seems to have been in Congress a desire for vindictive legislation upon this class of industry. I have heard but two reasons assigned. One is, that the men who have engaged in it are rich, and the second that the business is a monopoly. I hope that the Senate will not, when we are imposing such enormous and necessary burdens upon the industry and the wealth of the country, make it a crime for people to make money. The men who are engaged in this branch of industry invented or purchased the invention of a machine for the manufacture of screws, the result of which is to produce a better and a cheaper article than was ever introduced into the country before. If you now remove the taxes which they pay on the articles which they use, they will ask no protection whatever. They pay to the Government annually $180,000 excise, and they pay $100,000 in gold upon that portion of the raw material which they are obliged to import. I think it would be perfectly fair to place their product on the same basis and in the same class with all other manufactures of the kind, but I shall not ask for that; I only ask that this branch of industry may not be discriminated against more than four per cent. in the rate of duty, that is, that it shall not be taxed sixty per cent. more than articles of the same kind.

In regard to the monopoly, that objection, if it were one, has ceased. There are now two other establishments making the article, and the three together can produce one third more than the country can take, and with the taxes imposed on the business it is utterly impossible to compete with foreign countries for foreign trade. The only monopoly they ever had was the same monopoly that any man or any business obtains by producing an article or rendering a service better and cheaper than his neighbor. If the Senator from Ohio will tell me where to put in the words "wood-screws," I will move to except the article, the effect of which will be to make the tax on wood-screws ten per cent. instead of twelve per cent., when all other manufactures of the same kind are put at six per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a wood-screw would go into the exception without any trouble anywhere. [Laughter.] I am opposed to the exception. The Senator can make a much stronger argument for a hundred articles that might be named among the manufactured articles of the country.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not ask that the article shall be excepted from the uniform burden, but from a still greater burden beyond what any other interest is subjected to, and beyond the very large burden it already suffers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to explain the reason why so many articles are excepted in the proviso to the third section. That section of the bill makes a specific increase of the duties imposed by the ninety-fourth section of the law of last year, and then proceeds to make specific exceptions of certain articles, for instance, tobacco, illuminating oil, &c. They are excepted from the general increase in this section because they are provided for specifically. No other articles are excepted from the general increase. If this exception is made in favor of wood-screws, which I suppose can bear a tax as well as everything else, efforts will be made to secure other exceptions.

Mr. ANTHONY. They can bear a tax as well as all other articles of the same kind, but I do not see why there should be one class of industry selected out for vindictive legislation. Why should this article pay sixty or seventy per cent. more than other articles of the same kind produced from the same material? I cannot get the Senator from Ohio to tell me where to put in my amendment, and I shall have to put it in at random. I do not know that it makes much difference, for I do not suppose any one will understand this bill after it is passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Put it in after the word "coal."

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well. I move after the word "coal," in line eleven of section three, to insert "wood-screws."

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator proposes to leave them subject to the tax imposed in the law of last session.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; ten per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator does not mean to except them from the tax imposed by the law to which this act is an amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly not. I mean to leave them at ten per cent., while all other articles of the same class pay but six per cent.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say to the Senator from Rhode Island, in regard to the legislation of last year, that I took some part in the discussion when it took place and the ten per cent. was imposed on wood-screws. It was not intended by me certainly as vindictive or oppressive legislation. I happened to have some knowledge in regard to the subject that guided me to this judgment, namely, that without injury to the interest that was engaged in producing this article, because of the remarkable invention of which they were in possession, and the superior article they produced, the consumption would bear the increased tax without injury to the producers. They have gone into universal use; nothing can compete with them; and my idea was that those who used wood-screws the world over could afford to pay the increase. I think, though, that the exception the Senator now asks for is equally reasonable, and I shall vote with him for it; but there was no intention of oppressing that industry.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will explain what I meant by vindictive legislation. It was that you put on this article double the tax that you did on similar articles, and then when the tariff bill came the Senate refused to make a corresponding increase of the duty on the foreign article.

Mr. CONNESS. That I think was a mistake.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was vindictive legislation, as though there was something wicked in this article of manufacture, and you wished to put it down.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no recollection of the Senate refusing to give a corresponding protection, although I believe that the protection found in this invention is sufficient of itself.

Mr. ANTHONY. They steal our patents in England.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator replies that they have stolen the patents in England. I shall vote with him on the tariff bill to give the necessary protection, and I think his present amendment is a reasonable one and ought to be adopted.

Mr. GRIMES. I am sorry that I cannot concur with the Senator from California. There is nothing vindictive about this legislation. I suppose the reason why an extra amount was levied upon these articles was, first, that it could be collected, as the Senator from Rhode Island has already told us, off three persons, and hence there is very little expense attending its collection. Then, in the second place, it is more equally distributed over the country and among the citizens of the country than probably any tax that can be conceived of on any iron manufacture. There is not a hovel or a palace in the whole country that does not use these wood-screws, and exactly in proportion to the value of the mansion or whatever may be erected. These manufacturers in Rhode Island are merely our agents in collecting the amount that we levy upon them, and they collect it off everybody in the world more uniformly and more universally and more equally than any other tax is collected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 18, noes 13.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I offer an amendment to come in on page 25, line six hundred and six, after the word "articles," in the beginning of the line:

And by inserting in the same proviso, after the words "thread, yarn, or warps," the words "imported or."

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have that explained.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The original act in the second proviso to the paragraph referred to in this part of the bill reads:

"Provided further, That any cloth or fabric as aforesaid, when made of thread, yarn, or warps upon which a duty as aforesaid shall have been assessed and paid, shall be assessed and pay duty on the increased value only thereof."

This amendment is intended to place on the same footing the same class of goods which have paid an import duty. By looking to the previous clauses the words "duty" and "tax" are employed and used in such a way as if it was meant to discriminate between the two, but afterward the same two words are used, evidently applying only to the internal revenue tax. This amendment is simply to correct the interpretation of the assessors, that goods which have paid an import duty should not have the benefit of this proviso.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to know whether I understand this amendment. Take a single instance for illustration, the article of bur-laps, which pay an import duty of twenty-five per cent. When they come to be manufactured, will this duty apply to the whole manufactured article or only to its increased value?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This is the tax or duty on the thread, yarn, or warps out of which goods are made. I offer the amendment principally in the interest of an infant manufacture here—the silk manufacture. In several descriptions of silks that are made in this country the thread or yarn from which the warps are made cannot be made in this country and is always imported.

Mr. SHERMAN. On reflection I am convinced that this is a very important and a very dangerous change. Under the present law, when a duty is paid on an imported article, that duty cannot be deducted from the value of the imported article in this country into which it goes, in estimating the internal tax. That is the construction put upon it by the Department. This amendment of the honorable Senator, although probably he does not so design it, would extend the proviso so as to enable the manufacturers here to deduct the duty on the imported article which has been paid probably by the importer from the article manufactured in this country out of material on which an import duty has been paid. If the purpose is to make such a radical change as that, it is a very important provision, because many articles of importation form a part of articles manufactured in this country. Under the law as now framed, a duty on an imported article cannot be deducted from the internal tax. If that is provided for in this case, it will be the only case in our whole system of internal taxation.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Perhaps I did not state the case exactly, as I was a little confused about it when I parted with the amendment itself and sent it to the desk. The idea is to provide that the tax upon the manufactured article shall only be on the increased value thereof, and the amendment only goes so far as this, that the duty which has been paid on the importation shall be taken into consideration as well as the internal tax, if the goods have been imported. It may be liable to the objection made by the chairman of the Finance Committee, but I do not think so.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me take the case of silk spoons which I believe enter into the manufacture of worsted goods. We had some specimens before us. These silk spoons pay an import duty of twenty or thirty per cent. They form a part of the manufactured article of worsted goods, of which a large quantity is made in this country. Does the Senator suppose that from the tax on the worsted goods when manufactured the duties paid by the importer of silk spoons shall be deducted? That is the effect of the amendment. It changes the whole theory of the law. By the second proviso any duty paid in this country under the internal revenue act, on the thread, yarn, or warp, may be deducted from the duty on the completed article, but to extend it beyond that and allow a deduction to be made of the duty on the imported article which goes into and forms a part of the manufactured article would be introducing a new and very dangerous principle. The whole of our duties on imported goods might then be deducted from the duties on the completed articles of which they form part.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The amendment does not propose to deduct the import duty. It only provides that in assessing this internal duty it shall be laid on the increased value. That is all our artisans will have had to do with it. They manufacture it from these imported warps, and they ought to pay duty only on the value they have added to it. I confess that I have not sufficient practical knowledge of this subject even to state it as it appears to my own mind, but it strikes me that it is only just to this infant branch of manufacture to which I have alluded, and which is now struggling for existence, to adopt this amendment. To make them pay a duty upon a duty that has already been paid, it seems to me is going too far.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That one fourth part of the proceeds of the revenue that may be collected under this act and under all laws of the United States imposing taxes or raising revenue, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be set apart and pledged to pay all debts, claims, and demands which any loyal State, citizen, or other person friendly to the United States may have against the United States, and any such State, citizen, or person may sue the United States in any of their circuit or district courts for such debts, claims, or demands, and such suit shall be heard, adjudged, and determined according to the principles and the forms and modes of proceeding that are applicable in suits between private individuals.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer a slight amendment which I think the chairman of the Finance Committee will accept. It is to insert after the word "act," in line two hundred and eighty, on page 13, this proviso:

Provided, That this shall not apply to any miner whose receipt from his mine shall not exceed annually $1,000.

The object is not to tax those who are absolutely poor and searching for ore.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see why the Senator wants to put that in. If he thinks it makes the law any stronger than it is at present I have no objection, but the exemption now under the old law extends to all employments where the amount realized is less than $1,000.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the chairman call my attention to that particular part of the law?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the eightieth section, which says that no license shall be required in cases where the amount of sales is less than $1,000.

Mr. CONNESS. This is not a matter involving sales.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a license tax. The Senate will see it is the license on miners. Now the section which is here proposed to be amended, the eightieth section of the present law, provides that no licenses shall be required where the amount of sales or products is less than $1,000. However, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well. It is a matter of doubt, and I prefer to have the proviso in to remove the doubt.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. The ninety-fourth section of the existing law contains a clause which I understand has been construed, and I suppose properly construed, to include fertilizing manures—an article very much in demand in all the middle States, particularly in my own State—and the tax is ten per cent. This supplementary bill does not exempt fertilizing manures from the increased tax it imposes on articles included in the ninety-fourth section of the present law. I move to amend the bill by inserting after "benzole," in line eleven of section four, page 45, the word "fertilizers." The effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to let fertilizers remain subject to the tax imposed by the original act.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why exempt them any more than various other articles?

Mr. JOHNSON. Wood-screws have already been excepted from the operation of this section.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we listen to Senators we shall get most of the articles in the exception, and there will be no use in making any increase.

Mr. JOHNSON. The reason I offer the amendment is that this tax falls exclusively on the agriculturists; it increases the price of the fertilizers, and they are now complaining very much of the practical operation of the five per cent. which is imposed on fertilizers by the original act. It is now proposed to increase that tax twenty per cent., and it will be so increased unless this exception be made. I submit that when you are taxing the agriculturist on all he eats and wears, and looking to the benefits which the country derives from the fertility of the soil, this is an impolitic tax. My own view is that they ought not to be taxed at all, but they are able to get on now with the tax imposed by the original act; but the information I have is that perhaps the whole business will be stopped if it is increased as proposed here. It amounts to very little in point of fact to the Treasury, but a good deal to the farmers.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that I shall make any special opposition to the Senator's proposition, but I will make one remark. The farmers of the country are less taxed under this bill than any other class, except, perhaps, beer drinkers; I think they get off very lightly. We are afraid to tax anybody that drinks beer or manufactures beer, and we do not tax farmers as much as other individuals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to insert after "twenty-eight," in line two hundred and seventy-six, on page 12, the words, "by striking out paragraph twenty-nine." If I can have the attention of the Senate for a moment they will see the effect of this amendment, and I think will be disposed to agree with me. The paragraph which I propose to strike out is as follows:

29. Foreign insurance agents shall pay fifty dollars for each license. Every person who shall act as agent of any foreign fire, marine, life, mutual, or other insurance company or companies, shall be regarded as a foreign insurance agent under this act.

The previous paragraph provides that insurance agents shall pay ten dollars for each license. The Senate will observe that here is a discrimination against the agents of foreign insurance offices, or, as they are called, "foreign insurance agents." In point of fact, there is but one foreign office acting through agents in this country; that is the London, Liverpool, and Globe Insurance Office, having an agency in New York, with other agents throughout the country; but the gentleman representing this office in New York are all Americans, and the agents appointed by them throughout the country are all Americans; so that this tax falls upon American citizens. It has actually happened that the agents of this company, particularly in the State of Ohio, where they were numerous, have been obliged to give up their agency, because their business was not enough to justify the payment of this tax. They could have paid ten dollars, but they could not pay ten dollars. The consequence is that the revenue has actually lost from this provision instead of gaining.

Then again, sir, I understand that this discrimination is the only one in the whole bill as against foreigners. In every particular the bill from beginning to end, with this exception, treats all alike, puts them on the same footing. If you go to England for an illustration, I am told that there is no discrimination there, and that in point of fact there are at this moment two leading insurance companies of New York operating in Liverpool and in London through agents, and those agents pay nothing in England which the agents of English insurance companies do not also pay. Therefore, I might ask that foreign agents here should be put on the same footing with the agents of domestic insurance offices, on grounds of reciprocity as between England and the United States; but I put it on two distinct grounds: first, that nothing is gained to the revenue by this discrimination; and secondly, that the discrimination, so far as it takes effect, operates upon American citizens. I think there can be no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to insert on page 30, after the word "transportation," in line seven hundred and twenty-four—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan proposes to amend an amendment already adopted. That is not now in order. It will be in order when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer an amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That section one hundred and ten be amended by inserting after the words "1st day of July, 1864," the words "Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1865, in addition to the duties on circulation prescribed in said section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid by all banks, associations, corporations, companies, or persons issuing circulating notes and having a capital of more than $300,000, a duty of one eighth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person in excess of eighty per cent. of its authorized capital; and after the 1st day of July, 1866, a duty of one fourth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of its circulation as aforesaid, in excess of sixty per cent. of its authorized capital;" and that said section be further amended by striking out all of the first proviso to said section down to and inclusive of the words "redemption thereof."

Senators will see by reference to section one hundred and ten of the existing law that it imposes a duty upon bank deposits of one twenty-fourth of one per cent., upon bank capital one twenty-fourth of one per cent., and upon bank circulation one twelfth of one per cent. per month. The first proviso to that section declares that it "shall not apply to associations which are taxed under and by virtue of the act to provide a national currency," &c. It applies only to the State banks. We have now determined to blot out the State banks and to convert them into national banks. The amendments adopted this morning, I presume, will force all the State banks in the country into the national system. My idea in offering this amendment is simply to restrict the circulation of the country. We authorize the national banks when they are organized to issue a circulation of ninety per cent. upon their capital. My opinion is that you will have too much circulation.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the whole amount of circulation authorized?

Mr. HENDERSON. Three hundred million dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that too much?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think so. I will state to the Senator that if I understand the matter properly, a great many of the State banks that have been converted into national banks have a State bank circulation and a national bank circulation also, both out to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON. What I wanted to suggest to the honorable member was this: if he is right in supposing that the State banks will go out of existence, if they are all to become national banks, then the entire circulation which the national banks will be at liberty to issue will be $300,000,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me suggest to the Senator that the whole circulation of the State banks and of the national banks to-day does not exceed $250,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is $136,000,000 of State bank paper and $84,000,000 of national bank circulation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then there is but a little over two hundred millions of both in circulation. I believe the Comptroller of the Currency himself believes that the banks with large capital ought to be restricted in the amount of their circulation. That is my opinion. I do not think that a bank like the Bank of Commerce in New York ought to be authorized to issue a circulation of ninety per cent. of its capital stock; a bank with $10,000,000 of capital issuing $9,000,000 of circulating notes! The Comptroller of the Currency, as I understand, recommended to the committee to restrict banks of large circulation in the amount of their circulating notes.

Mr. JOHNSON. And you effect that by taxing the surplus?

Mr. HENDERSON. By taxing the surplus over a certain amount, and the amendment only taxes those banks which have a capital as large as $300,000. There are but few country banks that have a capital of that amount; and my understanding is that the Comptroller of the Currency desires to have some limit put on the large banks in the cities; and I believe he sent to the House of Representatives a bill, which was introduced there, limiting materially the circulation of these banks. My proposition is that after the 1st day of July of this year one eighth of one per cent. each month, that is three per cent annually, shall be levied on the average amount of circulation issued by any bank in excess of eighty per cent. of its capital; and then after the 1st of July, 1866, to levy one fourth of one per cent each month, that is six per cent. annually, on the average amount of circulation in excess of sixty per cent. of its capital.

Then the latter part of the section I offer strikes out the first part of the proviso to section one hundred and ten, so as to make the provision applicable to all banks, the national banks and the State banks.

I have no idea that the amendment will be adopted. I suppose my friend from Ohio will object to it, and if so, he being chairman of the committee, it will go by the board. I desire only to suggest now that inasmuch as we have gone into this banking system heels over head, and determined to make everything a national bank, we ought to limit in some way the circulation of the banks we authorize. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bucklew, Carlile, Collamer, Davis, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Powell, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Harding, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Willey—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I want to offer two or three amendments, one of which is not strictly in order now. I propose to insert at the end of the seven hundred and thirty-sixth line, on page 31, these words: "by inserting the word 'net' before the words 'deposits of money,' and." This is an amendment to a clause already adopted as an amendment. If I were to propose to add these words to the clause, the amendment would be in order; but it would be a little better to have it come in where I propose, and as I suppose the amendment itself is not objected to, I presume there will be no objection to entertaining it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator will let the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. I have been brooding over these three amendments. The Senator understands the effect of the one I now offer. It is simply to insert the word "net" before "deposits" in the one hundred and tenth section of the existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, and I have been brooding over it, and I cannot agree to the amendment. I may as well state the difficulty. What are "net deposits?" I have inquired of two or three bankers what they meant by "net deposits," since the Senator suggested the matter to me. A deposit in a bank is a deposit. We know what net profits are, but what are net deposits? It is a term introduced in New York for the purpose of deducting a large portion of their deposits, and if the words "net deposits" are used it will be very difficult to tell what are the deposits of a bank on a particular day. I have conversed with two or three intelligent bankers about it, and I am satisfied that the introduction of the word "net" before "deposits" would reduce the amount of the tax very largely. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he knows what net deposits are.

Mr. COLLAMER. I do not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have made inquiry and I do not know.

Mr. COLLAMER. I do not understand what is meant by it. I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin can define what he means.

Mr. JOHNSON. We can ascertain what the average deposits of the year are, but I do not understand what net deposits are.

Mr. HOWE. As soon as I find out how many Senators do not know what it means, I will try and tell the Senate what I understand it to mean. The bank returns in our metropolitan cities uniformly give a return of what they call their net deposits; and I understand that those net deposits are ascertained by the settlement which takes place at the clearing-house, and represent the sum of money as distinguished from the checks which are on deposit in the several banks during the day. One man may have deposited in one bank $100,000, he may then go into the street and make a purchase for which he draws a check for $50,000 against that deposit; his vendor deposits that check in another bank, so that the gross deposits in the banks growing out of that deposit of $100,000 would be $150,000. He may make another purchase of $50,000 more and draw a check for it, and that check may be deposited, so that really he has no money on deposit, there is no money due to him in the bank, but there are $100,000 deposited in two or three other banks. Both the representative and the principal are counted as gross deposits. The object of this amendment is to have only the net deposits counted, the deposits of money not checked against. That is really what I understand it to be.

The reason why you tax deposits at all, I understand, is because it is a sum of money deposited to the use of the bank holding it, though it is subject to payment on demand. The law assumes, what is known to be the fact, that it is an advantage to the bank to hold that money, and therefore you impose a tax upon it. But it is of no sort of advantage to the bank after it is actually checked against; and whether it is checked against or not you cannot tell until the settlement has taken place at the clearing-house. I suppose the only advantage of my amendment would be in those cities where there is a clearing-house established. Evidently it is just, and I cannot see the slightest danger in it. Bankers know what it means; our metropolitan journals know what it means; the Comptroller of the Currency knows what it means; and they all agree, I believe, that it is entirely just and proper. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COWAN. I am rather inclined to think I should favor the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin if there was any practicable way of getting at it. I feel, I think, as sensibly as he does, the absurdity of taxing both the principal and the representative at the same time, because the representative may be multiplied indefinitely; but in the case of outstanding checks and money on deposit which may represent the same basis or sum as a principal, I do not see how the net result can be arrived at. There may be some method by which it can be achieved, but I do not know what it is. If I was satisfied or could understand how it could be arrived at, I might favor the amendment, because I see the hardship of taxing not only the thing itself, but that which represents it in half a dozen places, perhaps, all over town the same day.

Mr. HOWE. I can only say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this is ascertained every morning when the statements take place; is known and is published. I hold in my hand the returns of the banks in New York for the week ending the 18th of February. It gives the net deposits of the banks during that week.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Morgan, Powell, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Bucklew, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Harlan, Henderson, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Harding, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Wilkinson, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I now move to amend on the 3d page by inserting after the word "accounting" in the forty-fifth line and by adding after the first proviso in the same section the following:

Provided further, That no more shall be allowed to any assessor for clerk hire than seventy cents for each hundred names assessed in his district, and no more shall be allowed to any assessor or assistant assessor for stationery than one cent for each name assessed in their respective districts.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know the propriety of adopting that. Does the Senator mean that there shall be but seventy cents allowed to an assessor in a country district for assessing a hundred names?

Mr. HOWE. For clerk hire, and one cent a name for stationery.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the Senator consulted the Commissioner of Internal Revenue whether it is sufficient? I should like to know the basis.

Mr. CONNESS. It may stop the whole assessment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he has computed the matter or relies on the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. HOWE. I have not been governed by the estimates of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In point of fact, the purpose of the amendment is to correct the estimates or to endeavor to correct them. I am satisfied he has been very much mistaken in his estimates. I have paid considerable attention to this subject. That there is no danger that this amendment will limit the allowances for clerk hire too closely I think is manifest by one statement which I will make to you, that, although it will save $50,000 in the expenditures for clerk hire in the aggregate, it will increase the allowances in more than half the districts in the United States. It will increase the allowances made in ninety-five districts to the amount of $20,870, but it will decrease the allowances made in seventy-eight districts $78,620.

Mr. CONNESS. And that is its very danger.

Mr. HOWE. That, I am told, is its very danger. That I think is its essential grace. There can be no possible occasion for any such difference; and gentlemen who have investigated the matter, who are most familiar with the character of the work and the amount of work to be done in the offices of the assessors, say that the number of names to be assessed in a district does furnish the best possible test of the amount of clerical labor required. I have a schedule here giving the present clerk hire and the number of names assessed in each district in the United States and the allowances for stationery in each district of the United States. If you look at the discrepancies it will be manifest to every one that some correction is absolutely demanded. I am not going to read this table at length, but to give some figures from it. In the third Massachusetts dis-strict forty-five thousand names are assessed and they are allowed $3,800 for clerk hire. In the fourth district of New York and the thirty-second district of New York there are twenty-four thousand names assessed in each, but little more than half as many as in the third Massachusetts, and they are allowed $5,000 each for clerk hire. In the eighth New York district twenty-one thousand names are assessed and $4,200 are allowed for clerk hire. In the third New Jersey twenty-one thousand, precisely the same number of names, are assessed, and $1,000 is allowed for clerk hire, less than a quarter as much. In the third Pennsylvania and second Pennsylvania nineteen thousand names are assessed in each district, and $4,000 is allowed to each assessor for clerk hire.

The chairman of the Finance Committee, who called on me for this explanation, now begs me to stop, and as I only took the floor to indulge him I will surrender it to indulge him. I am bound to indulge him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was only suggesting to the Senator that this is probably the last day for this bill and I do not want it blocked up.

Mr. HOWE. I only want to give one or two more figures. I have just given you two districts assessing nineteen thousand names each and where $4,000 is allowed for clerk hire. The District of Columbia assesses the same number of names, and there is allowed $800 for clerk hire.

The inequalities in the allowances for stationery are just as remarkable, perhaps more so. There is not only an immense difference made in the allowances to districts having the same amount of work to do but there is an enormous difference made in the same districts for different years. For instance, my eye just lights here on the first Illinois. The first year up to the 30th of June, 1863, before they had learned how to do things, they only required $183 19 for stationery. The next year there was required and paid $926 11, and the same district had the same work.

These allowances for stationery run from the twenty-eighth New York district, which assesses seventeen thousand names and was allowed sixty-nine dollars for stationery last year, to the second Pennsylvania, nineteen thousand names assessed, only two thousand more, and they were allowed for stationery $2,181 77.

Mr. SHERMAN. But a word in regard to this amendment. It is so material that I am afraid to adopt it. I want to say a word to my friend from Massachusetts and to my friend from Wisconsin. We have changed the whole mode of making allowances for stationery and clerk hire by this bill. Let us try its operation. Those accounts are hereafter to go to a different class of officers. I hope we may have a vote on this amendment without further debate.

Mr. WILSON. I do not understand this proposition. There is a great mistake about this matter.

Mr. HOWE. Let the amendment be returned to me.

Mr. WILSON. I have prepared an amendment on the same principle, but making certain allowances, especially for the Pacific coast, and I will read it:

That the general rate of allowance for clerk hire to assessors of internal revenue, except the assessors in California, Oregon, Nevada, and the Territories, shall not exceed the rate of seven dollars per one hundred persons assessed upon the monthly and annual lists as aforesaid, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, and each fiscal year thereafter; and in consequence of the increased cost of living and the additional labor required in large cities and towns, there shall be allowed, in addition to the above rates, as follows: to assessors whose offices are in cities which, by the census of 1860, contain a population of not less than one hundred thousand, $1,500; to each assessor whose office is in a city of not less than fifty thousand inhabitants, $1,200; to each assessor whose office is in a city of not less than twenty-five thousand, $800; to each assessor whose office is in a city of not less than twelve thousand inhabitants, $500; to each assessor in a town of less than twelve thousand inhabitants, whose lists contain the names of fifteen thousand persons or upward, $100, and the same rate for any portion of time served less than one year. And the assessors in California, Oregon, Nevada, and the Territories, shall be allowed double the above-named rates.

If the number of persons assessed be fifteen thousand, at seventy dollars a thousand, it is very easy to calculate what it would be, $1,050 for clerk hire, an addition of $100 would make $1,150. Then take a district where there were twenty thousand names, and that is as large as they will average in New York, it would be $1,400 for clerk hire, where they now get $5,000. A district of twenty thousand names, at seventy dollars a thousand, would be $1,400, and $1,500 added would make $2,900, which would be a reduction of $1,100, and that is as much as they ought to have. On the basis of this proposition one hundred and sixteen offices would be increased and about seventy diminished—some a small amount and some a large amount. They would be equalized by it, and the aggregate cost would be about four thousand dollars more than it is now. But the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin shuts up every one of the large offices, for they could not get along in any large city under it.

Mr. CONNESS. What the honorable Senator has just stated shows the danger of this class of amendments. We are all, I presume, equally anxious to diminish the expenses of collecting the revenue. As far as locality is concerned, with which I have no feeling, I could make no objection (if the amendment of the honorable Senator were right in the nature of it) to the provision he proposes to apply to our country; but that is not the question; that is not what I am at. I am afraid of these arbitrary rules that are proposed for governing what must vary to a very remarkable extent according to the place, circumstances, and other conditions that we cannot be always aware of here. I have a very extensive statement here which I cannot trouble the Senate with, but I will read from it upon one point. It has been made since the honorable Senator from Massachusetts made a speech the other evening, and if the statement made by the Senator was true, this is certainly very false and incorrect, and vice versa.

Mr. WILSON. I want to get that statement. I have heard about it. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator cannot have heard of this, for I have not named it to anybody. I will read one item; it is in regard to the stationery for the thirty-second district in New York, the allowance being as stated by the Senator, $3,070 for stationery for one year.

Mr. WILSON. For twenty-two months.

Mr. CONNESS. Then certainly the statement of the Senator does not show a very remarkable state of things, considering that that is one of the wealthiest districts that we have in the country. Again, much of that stationery, I am told, has been distributed from that office to the offices of other assessors. If that be the case, it materially reduces even the statement the Senator made. The Senator will understand—

Mr. WILSON. I happen to have a few documents about that. The statement I made is absolutely correct.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator will understand me that my purpose is not to make an issue with him.

Mr. WILSON. I understand the Senator. I know he would not do that.

Mr. CONNESS. I only wish to call attention to the danger of these arbitrary conditions that we are proposing to affix here, applicable to other conditions that we cannot possibly understand, particularly, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, since we have made other corrections which will undoubtedly check any irregularities that may have occurred. I regard it as a very dangerous procedure to attach this amendment now.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that at the present time, and with this pressure upon us, I have no desire to take up time. I made a few remarks the other evening on the subject. I had prepared myself for a two or three hours' speech of statistics, and I can stand here ten hours and detail facts and never make a mistake as to the facts, because they are founded on official records. I made a few statements. I made an allusion to that thirty-second New York district—

Mr. GRIMES. I want to know if the difficulty is in a defective law or a defective execution of it.

Mr. WILSON. In a defective law primarily, and in a faulty execution. In the first place, the law was based on no principle. The whole matter should be equalized and properly regulated. As it stands now the man who is most persevering in urging an increase gets it.

But I will not detain the Senate further. The other evening I quoted a few facts here, and I soon heard that my speech was sent for to the Globe office, that the reporter's notes were hunted after, and a great parade was made of some mistake that it was alleged I had made in regard to one particular district, no other fact stated by me being attacked. I am right about that district; I have seen the official accounts.

Mr. CONNESS. It was not unnatural to look to the Globe after the Senator had spoken.

Mr. WILSON. I have restrained myself from presenting facts in regard to this office which I have in my possession, because to present them would do no good. I merely stated enough to show that we ought to do something, that in the first place we ought to correct the law; but more than all and above all put the office into the hands of men qualified to administer it so as to protect the great interests of the country.

Mr. HOWE. I must say another word. I am not going to take much time of the Senate. It is a little embarrassing and a little discouraging to see a Legislature, conscious of defects and wrongs, and so persistently reluctant to make an effort to correct them. Indulge in no declamation either about the character of the present internal revenue law or of the administration of that law. I am bound to say that in my judgment the administration is a great deal more honest than the law itself, so far as I know about it; and I do not mean to be flattering to the administration of the law at all when I make that remark. There are two or three features in that law that I cannot think of without a shudder. The Finance Committee, as a body, know of them perfectly well to-day, and did know of them perfectly well during all the last session.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator now says that the Committee on Finance, of which he is a member, as a committee know of something outrageous in the law, and they have failed to correct it. I do not want to be led off into an argument about this matter, but such a declaration made by a member of the committee is certainly a very startling one. If I knew anything wrong in the law, certainly I should be willing to correct it, as one member of the committee. I had but very little hand in framing this law, but I should be willing to correct any defects found in it.

Mr. HOWE. I want to test the Senator's disposition on one single proposition which is pending. During the last session an effort was made to get rid of more than one exchequer, to get rid of more than one Treasurer, to direct the payment of the immense sum that is collected from the internal revenue into that very Treasury where your law has thought it absolutely essential your duties should be paid for twenty years, and where they have been paid. The amendment was adopted here in the Senate, but was abandoned in a committee of conference at once.

Mr. CLARK. That was not the Finance Committee.

Mr. HOWE. That was not the Finance Committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. We adopted the amendment this session.

Mr. HOWE. I am aware that after a year's further experience the same amendment has been voted upon favorably in the Senate. Here is, however, a proposition to restrict the expenditures for clerk hire—one single abuse. The Senator from Ohio says that he is willing to correct these errors when they are presented to his attention.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have corrected that error by transferring the whole of these matters to another officer.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, we did that very thing last winter. Your law was made as explicit as it needed to be, so explicit that no member of Congress, I think, misunderstood it, no member of either of the committees misunderstood it, and none of the officers of the Treasury Department misunderstood it, as I am informed, until within the last sixty days.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I ask the Senator how the Committee on Finance is responsible? They adopted it last year and they adopted it again at this session.

Mr. HOWE. I do not charge that fault on the Committee on Finance. But even with that amendment the abuse is not entirely corrected.

This is a fatal mistake. You have voted here that $1,500, or $2,000 or $3,000 must be allowed to the assessor who lives in a city more than is allowed to one who lives in the country. That is wrong. There is no reason in it; there is no justice in it; and I prove it to you by these very tables. Here is the District of Columbia, which is all city nearly, and they are allowed but $800 for clerk hire; and they do the work. There is the first district in Wisconsin, the assessor of which lives in a city of fifty thousand inhabitants, and they are allowed only $800 for clerk hire there. You see that clerk hire can be furnished, and is furnished for that sum, and so far as I know these assessors are perfectly content with the amount allowed them. I have never heard of any extra allowance in the first district of Wisconsin. If any has been made it has not been brought to my notice. The work is done there; it is done for that money; and what is done there can be done elsewhere, and just as cheap elsewhere.

I want to tell the Senate one thing, and I will conclude with that remark. Either you must bring these heavy allowances down to what your ninety-eight districts are doing the work for, or those ninety-eight districts, just as certain as time lasts, will go up to what the seventy-five are doing the work for. They are not going to be content to work for thirty-three per cent. of what is allowed to the same class of officers elsewhere; and when you get them all up to the maximum that will not be the happiest time to effect a reform. I wish the Senate would adopt this amendment. I have done my duty, however, in calling their attention to it. If you will give me the yeas and nays, and vote it down or up, I shall be content.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foot in the chair.) Does the Senator demand the yeas and nays on this amendment?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator by striking out all after the word "that" where it first occurs, and substituting the amendment I send to the Chair, which makes some allowance for the larger cities where an allowance ought to be made.

Mr. GRIMES. Why should that be?

Mr. WILSON. Because it costs more.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like the Senator to explain why it is more expensive in a city where the population is dense and easily accessible to these clerks and these assessors? You can employ a man cheaper there than in Milwaukee or Chicago.

Mr. WILSON. We make an allowance in Chicago.

Mr. GRIMES. Well, any other town of ten thousand inhabitants.

Mr. WILSON. But that is very different from a place in the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that his amendment is in the form of a separate and independent section, and is not in conformity with the body of the bill where it is proposed to be inserted. The amendment moved by the Senator from Wisconsin is a partial amendment to the body of the bill at a certain point. It would make it incongruous if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts were adopted at that point.

Mr. WILSON. I do not desire to press it out of place; nor would I press it at all but that I want something that will equalize this matter and correct these abuses; but I know the proposition pending is not a just one, and I cannot vote for it. The proposition I have offered is based upon the figures; and if I had time I could demonstrate that it would equalize and make this matter right. I will withdraw it; but I cannot vote for the amendment offered by my friend from Wisconsin, for I know that will not do justice.

Mr. GRIMES. Why not point it out?

Mr. WILSON. I have not time to do it.

Mr. HOWE. I had the misfortune to be born without the capacity of knowing a great many things; and another misfortune befell me, perhaps quite as great, that I had the capacity for believing some things. [Laughter.] If I had either had the faculty of knowing things, or of not believing, it might have been a great deal better for me. I can only say now, not to protract this debate any longer, that I have no manner of belief that this extra allowance is demanded for clerks in cities because I know no reason for it in the nature of things, I having been in cities and country both; and because I show you the tables here where the work is being done in your cities without the extra allowance; and I look at these facts as more conclusive evidence than any theory I have heard yet, either in the revenue office or here.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Collamer, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Powell, Ramsey, and Ten Eyck—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wiley, Wilson, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Cowan, Hale, Harding, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilkinson—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. There seems to be an amendment necessary on the 24th page of the bill, line five hundred and eighty-three. After the words "brass nails" I move to insert "or rivets." It seems to be necessary, to put them in the same category as the others; and I therefore move that amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Why not say "and rivets."

Mr. MORGAN. "Or rivets" is better.

Mr. CONNESS. There are brass nails and rivets both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now, in accordance with the custom of the Senate in such cases, put the question on concurring in all the amendments made in Committee of the Whole in the aggregate, except such as by indication of any member shall be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire to have a separate vote upon the subject of taxing the savings banks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire, also, a separate vote on the fifth section; that is the bank tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be reserved.

Mr. POWELL. I desire a separate vote on the section imposing a tax on sales.

Mr. SUMNER. And I desire one also on the section relating to fishing bounties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These amendments will be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. I request a separate vote on the amendment in relation to the exemption from tax of teams transporting logs, ore, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire a separate vote upon the drawback on cotton goods exported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be reserved for a separate vote. The question will now be put on concurring in all the amendments with the exception of those reserved.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to move an amendment to the bill as amended in committee at the proper time; and I wish to inquire of the Chair whether it will be in order for me to move an amendment to one of the amendments made in committee after it has been concurred in in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be too late then. Any amendment that is reserved for a separate vote will be open to amendment when it is under consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I should reserve the amendments I desire to amend now. I wish to reserve the amendment on page 29, line seven hundred and three, imposing a tax of two and a half per cent. upon gross receipts; and also the amendments to section four, page 45. I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those amendments will be reserved for separate action.

Mr. GRIMES. There was an amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] exempting foreign insurance companies or agents from taxation; that I wish to have reserved.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to reserve the amendment on page 30, lines seven hundred and seventeen to seven hundred and twenty-nine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those amendments will be reserved; and the question now is on concurring in all the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, except such as have been indicated for a separate and distinct vote.

The remainder of the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments that have been indicated for a separate vote will now be considered in their order.

The first excepted amendment was on page 31, after line seven hundred and thirty-five, to insert the following:

That section one hundred and ten be amended by striking out after the words "and redemption thereof" the words "nor to any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning the same on interest for the benefit of the depositors only, and which do no other business of banking."

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire merely to have a vote on this question. I shall not debate it. Those who are in favor of the savings banks will vote "nay," and those who are in favor of taxing them, I suppose, will vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Ten Eyck, and Trumbull—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Hale, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wiley, Wilson, and Wright—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Harding, Howe, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Wade, and Wilkinson—8.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was on page 45, in the fifth section, which was as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, or broker shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any State bank or State banking association paid out by them after the 1st day of January, 1868.

Mr. COLLAMER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was to strike out that section.

Mr. SHERMAN. That failed, and that is the end of it. There is no amendment to this section reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. I have no objection, however, to a vote being taken on the section, because any Senator can move to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That being the case, the mode of reaching it would be by offering the amendment anew.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move to strike it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a little out of order at present, but I am perfectly willing to consider it now.

Mr. COLLAMER. We have arrived at this portion of the bill, and we may as well take a vote on the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there was a slight modification made in the section by adding the words "or broker" after the word "association," and the question is on concurring in that modification. It will be concurred in if there be no objection. The Senator from Vermont now moves to amend the bill by striking out this section.

Mr. HALE. Is that in order at this time?

Mr. COLLAMER. Nobody objects to it; the question is before us; and we might as well consider it now as at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the question will be taken on the amendment now. The usual course is to offer amendments after the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been acted upon.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will first be acted upon, because there was another section added on my motion which, in my view at least, materially modifies this; and if that amendment is adopted in the Senate it will make a difference in my vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not in this section.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not in this section; but if we should adopt the section that I offered by way of amendment, it would affect my vote upon this question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there is any objection to the amendment offered by the Senator.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we had better pursue the usual form, go through with the amendments made in Committee of the Whole first, and then other amendments can be offered.

Mr. COLLAMER. I think this is the usual form. I understand, when we come to a subject-matter in the bill, whatever action is to be had upon it is had then. This is the subject-matter that I desire to have action upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there is any use in consuming time about the order of business. As the motion to strike out this section failed in committee, there was nothing reported back to the Senate, as a matter of course; and consequently the bill is still open for a motion to strike out; but that motion cannot be put until after the amendments reported from the committee are acted upon, according to strict parliamentary law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no rule on the subject except that of strict parliamentary law; and the practice is to act on the amendments made in Committee of the Whole first, and then the bill is open to general propositions of amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we might as well take the question now.

Mr. COLLAMER. If Senators will indulge me, I desire to have the vote taken on this subject now; I shall be compelled to leave the Chamber presently. This question was raised and settled in Committee of the Whole, and it was decided that this section should not be stricken out. I want to know whether that question is not before us now; whether we shall concur in that vote in committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No question is presented upon that proposition except a separate motion is made—a motion to renew that amendment. No modification was made in Committee of the Whole; the amendment was not agreed to in Committee of the Whole; and it leaves nothing for action except upon a separate and independent motion to amend.

Mr. CLARK. Perhaps the Senate will allow me to state what the Senator from Vermont does not quite like to state; he does not expect to be here this evening and he would like to have the vote taken now.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no objection to that, and I think we had better do it, as we have now a full Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to detain the Senate; but I will make a remark or two in relation to a tax of ten per cent. on the issues of State banks.

It is a principle of our Government that any franchise belonging to the General Government cannot be taxed by State law, and any franchise belonging to a State government cannot be taxed by a law of Congress. It is an established power of the State governments that they have a right to institute State banks. They have the same right to institute their State banks to perform the same functions for the States that the Supreme Court decided in the case of Maryland and McCulloch. Congress had to organize a United States Bank to collect and disburse the revenue of the General Government. The reasoning of the Supreme Court in the case of Maryland and McCulloch, by which the power of the General Government to establish a United States Bank was—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must ask the Senator from Kentucky to suspend his remarks until there is order in the Chamber.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am not speaking to these people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair requires the Senate to be in order. It is not only the province but the duty of the Chair to enforce order.

Mr. DAVIS. I remarked that I was not speaking to the Senate. I was speaking to the Presiding Officer of the Senate, because the Presiding Officer of the Senate was the only member of the Senate that was giving me any attention. I would as soon speak to pandemonium as to the Senate when the Senate is indisposed to hear; but still I will speak. I speak to the Presiding Officer of the Senate; I speak, through the newspapers, to the country, or endeavor to do so.

Now, Mr. President, I have stated that the reasoning and logical proposition upon which the Supreme Court established the power of the General Government to organize a United States Bank in the case of McCulloch and the State of Maryland was this: that that bank was necessary and convenient in the fiscal operations of the General Government; it furnished the General Government with a depository of its money; it furnished it with an agency by which it could transfer its money from one section of the United States to another; and it furnished the General Government with a safe depository of its public funds. A State, by the decisions of the Supreme Court, has the undoubted and recognized power to organize a State bank; and the very reasoning that establishes the power of Congress to create a United States Bank for the United States Government, authorizes the States to establish State banks for the convenience of the States. The State banks are organized to aid in the collection of State revenue. They are organized to be the depositories of the State revenue. They are organized to facilitate the operations of the State in the transfer of its funds, by the payment of debts and other operations, from one part of the State to another. There is not a solitary argument by which the conclusion is drawn that the General Government has the power to organize a national bank as a power necessary and proper to carry into execution other powers positively vested, that does not apply with equal force to and authorize as logically and as conclusively a State government to establish a State bank.

In the very case of McCulloch and Maryland, Chief Justice Marshall in his reasoning states these propositions: that any power which the General Government may constitutionally exercise, cannot be taxed by State law; and eo converso, he says that no power which the State governments may exercise can be taxed by the General Government. Now here is a State institution and a United States institution. Both of them are franchises. The Bank of the United States is a franchise given by Congress. The State bank is a franchise given by the State Legislature. The reasoning and logical conclusion of Chief Justice Marshall is express, that neither of these can be taxed by the Government of the other; because he lays it down as a legal and constitutional proposition, as it is a proposition of logic and common sense, that where either the State or General Government have a right to execute a power, the exercise of that power cannot be taxed by the other Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend from Kentucky to allow me to take the sense of the Senate as to whether they will require a recess to-day. My own impression is that we had better continue along without a recess.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. We shall get a vote directly. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky does not intend to make a prolonged argument.

Mr. DAVIS. I have only a word or two more to say.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We shall get a vote in a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there be objection the motion cannot be made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I shall object.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, Mr. President, I put this proposition: the States have their treasuries; they have their treasurers; money is received into the State treasuries; and the banks are sometimes used as substitutes for these treasuries. Let me ask gentlemen this question: suppose there was a provision in this bill that proposed to tax all the money that is received by the States into their State treasury ten per cent.; would not its absurdity and its unconstitutionality strike every mind? Where is the difference in principle between taxing a State bank that is created by the State and performing State offices by imposing a tax upon the issue of its money of ten per cent. per annum and taxing all the moneys received in the State treasury the same amount? I put the question in this form again: suppose this was not a tax upon the issue of State banks but was simply a prohibition against the State banks; that hereafter no State banks should be authorized, and all State banks now authorized should cease to exist from and after the 1st of July next; would it be competent for Congress to pass a law containing such a provision as that? Certainly not. Why not? Because the States, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court, have the recognized power to establish State banks; and possessing that power to organize State banks Congress would have no power to repeal the State banks which they had organized by law. Every Senator will admit that Congress could not do it directly.

If a direct repeal, a direct abrogation by law of Congress so as to destroy the existence of all the State banks be admitted to be unconstitutional, upon what principle can Congress pass a law that will have precisely the same effect by a vote of taxation that will render it impossible for the State banks to live? Can Congress do an act indirectly that it cannot do directly? Can it pass a law which by indirect operation would be as fatal to the existence and to the organization of all State banks in the future as though they were to pass a bill directly prohibiting the enactment or organization of State banks by State legislation? If they can do it in the first and indirect and circumlocutory form, they can do it in the honest, straightforward, direct form. If they cannot do it in the latter form they cannot do it in the first form; and, sir, they cannot do it in any form without a flagrant violation of the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Vermont, which is to strike out the fifth section of the bill on page 45.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose the vote of the Senate will be against my views on this subject, as it has been heretofore; but before the vote is taken I move to strike out in the second line the words "State bank or State banking association." Senators will perceive that that discredits with the national banks all the State bank notes; the national banks cannot receive them any longer; and it leaves the State banks then to operate upon their own credit and by their own solvency. I think if the State banks are left to operate upon their own credit, it is as much as the Senate ought to ask. You can prohibit, I suppose, the banks that you create by your authority from receiving the paper of State banks. I will not doubt, for the sake of the argument, your power to do that. If your national banking system is a better system than the State bank system it will ultimately override it. You have discredited the State banking system so far as your legislation goes; but if it is a system that the people prefer to your national banking system it will live. If it does live it will only be because the people do prefer it; it will only be because they believe it to be a better currency than the national currency, that it can live after the legislation of Congress discrediting it. I hope that the amendment to the amendment will be adopted. I ask that the section be read as it will stand if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will first be read, and then the amendment.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, or broker, shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any State bank or State banking association paid out by them after the 1st day of January, 1866.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware that those words "or broker" had been inserted. I will modify my motion, and move to strike out the words "State bank, or State banking association, or broker;" so that the section will read:

That every national banking association shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any State bank or State banking association paid out by them after the 1st day of January, 1866.

That will discredit the State bank paper. It will be equivalent to saying that the national banks shall not deal in this discredited paper at all.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I sympathize with the desire of the chairman to pass this bill at this time; and I think we can do it by five o'clock. I therefore move that the time for taking a recess be changed to five o'clock, and that will give us over half an hour to go on with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object; and I do it on this ground: if Senators are determined to debate over again all these questions this bill cannot be passed; you can do no business; and if Senators will—

Mr. GRIMES. I rise to a point of order. The Senator has objected to the motion, and he has no right to go on and discuss it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am discussing the measure before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the fifth section of the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. On that question I take it I am in order; and the speech I wish to make is simply this: that we never can dispose of this bill if all these questions are to be debated over again. I think Senators should have some respect for the intelligence of each other, and should suppose that we can understand these questions when they are stated, without a reproduction of the arguments in reference to them. I do hope we may be permitted to vote on these questions.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think these questions are understood by all the members of the Senate. I do not think that this pending question is understood by many members of the Senate; and I am fearful that it is not well understood by the Senator from Illinois, whose comprehension is equal to almost every subject, although it does not comprehend the whole. The effect of the measure pending would be to destroy everything that is organized in the way of capital on the coast of the Pacific, where we deal in gold and silver. That is not understood. That must be corrected; that must be perfectly legislated upon here, or—

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from California will give way for one moment, the Senator from Illinois withdraws his objection to the motion I made a few moments ago, and I hope, therefore, that the recess will be dispensed with for to-day. The Senator from California, I think, is in favor of that; and I hope, therefore, that we will go right on. I move that the recess be dispensed with altogether.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Can that be done if there is objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator consent to give us a recess, when the bill is passed, until seven o'clock?

Mr. SHERMAN. As soon as the bill is disposed of I shall have no objection to the Senate taking a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the motion; and it is moved that the Senate rescind the order directing a recess for this evening from half past four until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLLAMER. Now let us have a vote.
Mr. McDOUGALL. After I have got through my remarks, with the consent of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The proposition involved here is one of the most mischievous that has been advanced since I have had the honor to occupy a place on this floor. I do not know that it is understood to be so mischievous; for it is not the habit of Senators, as I have observed, to take care to inquire into things in detail belonging to subject-matters of this kind. They have adopted the maxim long since expressed—

Several Senators. Question! Question!
Mr. McDOUGALL. Call the question, gentlemen, as loud as you please. I have the privilege of the floor. When I get through my observations the question can be taken. I have been disturbed by the noise—

Mr. CLARK. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from California is not addressing the Chair; and I call for the enforcement of the rule that a member when called to order shall take his seat and not go on without permission of the Senate.

Mr. McDOUGALL. When the Chair calls me to order I will take my seat. I cannot be called to order by Mr. CLARK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Chair considers the point of order to be well taken. No Senator can occupy the floor without addressing the Chair.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have the floor; I have not left it; and wherein have I departed from the rules of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is occupying the floor, but not addressing the Chair.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I made my proper address to the Chair before I addressed the Senate. Who questions that as a matter of fact?

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the enforcement of the 6th rule of the Senate, that "If any member in speaking or otherwise transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any member may, call to order; and when a member shall be called to order by the President or a Senator, he shall sit down, and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate."

The Senator is called to order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Ah, indeed! I will see if I am out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his point of order.

Mr. CLARK. I understood the Chair to rule that the point of order was well taken. The point of order was that the Senator was not addressing the Chair, and the Chair having sustained that point of order, it is the duty of the Senator to take his seat, and he cannot go on without leave from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senator have leave to proceed in order?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Allow me to make an inquiry. This is a somewhat singular proceeding to me. I addressed myself to the Chair—

Mr. CLARK. I again call the Senator to order. The point of order must be decided without debate, and there is no appeal taken from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senator from California be allowed to proceed in order?

Mr. COLLAMER. Who raised that question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule requires that when a Senator has been called to order he shall not proceed without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Nobody has moved that he shall be permitted to go on.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senator from California have leave to proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Now, Mr. President, I have something to say about that. I addressed myself to the Chair and then to the Senate. The Senator from New Hampshire called me to order.

Mr. CLARK. I again raise the point of order that the Senator is not addressing the Chair on the subject before the Senate, but is addressing the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California was not certainly addressing the Chair on the subject under debate; but it has been the custom of the Senate to allow some latitude in debate.

Mr. CLARK. It becomes necessary at this stage of the session and in the condition of the public business to enforce the rule strictly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will do so.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will abandon the right I have as a Senator because I am forced to do so at the present moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the fifth section, after the word "association," in the second line, to strike out the words "State bank or State banking association or broker."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out in the fourth line of the fifth section the words "paid out" and to insert the words "issued or reissued." I will explain this amendment in two words. The effect of it will be to restrict the State banks in their further issue of paper.

Mr. COLLAMER. Is not "paid out" the same thing?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir, it is not. The issue of a paper is the act of the bank itself whose note goes out. A bank issues its paper and puts its bills in circulation. It pays out the bill of another bank when it is in its possession and in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. COLLAMER. How can a bank issue paper without paying it out?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Ordinarily, and I suppose nearly always, a bank bill is issued by being paid out. Perhaps the word "issue" includes the words "pay out," but the words "pay out" do not mean the same as "to issue." This amendment, I suppose, will accomplish what the chairman of the committee and the advocates of this section have said to the Senate they desire to accomplish; that is, to prevent the increase of the circulation of the State banks. I am not in favor of the restriction itself, but I prefer it to the section as it now stands.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to propose the following amendment, to come in immediately after the close of the fifth section:

Provided, however, That the circulation of State banks secured by a deposit of bonds of the Government of the United States shall be exempt from this tax.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the section in line five by striking out the word "January" and inserting "April." [Say "July."] At the request of some Senators I will move to insert "July." That will give these banks a little longer time. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIDDLE. I have paired off on this question with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Powell, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Wilson, and Wright—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Harlan, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, and Sumner—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Foot, Hale, Harding, Howard, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment to strike out the fifth section as amended.

Mr. COLLAMER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Cowan, Foot, Hale, Harding, Howard, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next reserved amendment was to add the following as a new section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That all persons licensed under the provisions of this act or the act to which this is an amendment, and who are engaged in the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, or of articles produced or manufactured, whether foreign or domestic, shall, within ten days after the 1st day of each and every month, make return, under oath or affirmation, of the amount of goods, wares, and merchandise, or articles sold during the month preceding, and shall pay thereon a tax of one half of one per cent, and all such persons, in the assessment and collection of the tax imposed by this section, shall be subject to the provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes of manufacturers mentioned in the eighty-second section of the act to which this is an amendment, as far as the same are applicable. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the assessment and collection of the tax imposed by this section.

Mr. POWELL. I call for the yeas and nays on the question of concurring in that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Harris, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wilkinson, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Powell, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Howard, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Salsbury, and Trumbull—13.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was to insert the following as a new section:

Sec.—1. And be it further enacted, That from and after the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain all acts and parts of acts granting allowances or bounties on the tonnage of vessels engaged in the bank or other cod fisheries be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FARWELL. I do not propose to go over the arguments we had here last night, although there are several Senators now present who were not present then, who I think should fully understand the subject. I shall make only a single statement in regard to it. The proposition now is to repeal at this time the laws allowing the fishing bounties, that repeal to take effect when the reciprocity treaty expires, a year from the 15th of this month. The men who believe that this great interest cannot live without some different arrangement than there would be if the bounties were repealed without other legislation, and I am one of them, think the matter will be better adjusted by letting the whole question go over to the next Congress, because some legislation will then necessarily take place on the termination of the reciprocity treaty. Then let the fishing bounties be repealed and let such legislation be adopted by Congress as will give these men a reasonable chance to live. That is all we ask, and we think it can be better accomplished by letting the whole subject go over. Certainly no good can be done by acting upon it at this time. Senators all admit, the chairman of the committee admits, that it is necessary to have some legislation, that it will not do to repeal the bounties without adopting some other legislation. Why not have it all at once? I regret exceedingly that the Senate is so thin.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Davis, Doolittle, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wright—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Farwell, Foster, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Howard, Pomeroy, Richardson, Salsbury, and Trumbull—12.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The Secretary read the next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which was to strike out from line seven hundred and eight on page 29 to line seven hundred and sixteen on page 30, as follows:

That section one hundred and three be further amended by adding the following after the word "vehicle" where it occurs the second time in the section: "Provided, That this section shall not apply to those teams, wagons, and vehicles used in transporting logs for lumber from the forests to the place or places of manufacture, or to the teams or vehicles used in the transportation of ores from the mines where the same is excavated to the place where they are reduced or worked."

Mr. JOHNSON. I propose to amend the words moved to be stricken out by inserting after the word "used," in the seven hundred and twelfth line, on the 30th page, the word "Nevada," and after the word "used" in the seven hundred and fourteenth line, the words "in the same State." The effect of that amendment would be that this tax would not apply to those wagons, &c., employed in Nevada.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to this amendment of the Senator from Maryland, of course, but I should like to know what rule of justice applies to Nevada in this respect that does not to California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I can state to the Senator that I except Nevada alone, because I suppose Nevada is not in a condition to bear the tax as well as California. I rather think California can bear it as well as Pennsylvania or Ohio. I understand from the Senators from Nevada, indeed I think I know independent of their statement, that those engaged in that particular business in Nevada are hardly able to get on at all without any tax; they make very little money anyhow; but I think you are doing very well in California.

Mr. POWELL. Allow me to suggest that in my judgment the proposition is clearly unconstitutional. All taxes must be uniform throughout the United States. We cannot exempt the State of Nevada or any other State. I do not think there can be any doubt about that.

Mr. CONNESS. While the honorable Senator from Maryland is correct in saying that the tax on vehicles engaged in the transportation of ore, &c., affects Nevada more than it does California, at the same time, as I explained the other day, the tax applies very severely to our people who are engaged in making lumber, because it is a tax imposed on those who are hauling the logs to the mill, and we are competing now in the making of lumber with the greatest lumber country in the world, the Puget sound district on the Pacific coast. I think that the tax as applied to that industry is a very severe and onerous one. I dislike to stand here as the advocate of an exceptional amendment, but I think that interest ought to be included.

Mr. FOSTER. The Constitution provides, article one, section eight, that Congress shall have power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Mr. CONNESS. I think that settles the question.

The amendment of Mr. JOHNSON was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to strike out the clause.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I called for a separate vote on the third section, but I am willing to withdraw that call; I desire the Senate to conform to the action of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the third section of the bill.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was that made on page 29 by striking out lines seven hundred and three, seven hundred and four, seven hundred and five, seven hundred and six, and seven hundred and seven, as follows:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out the words "two and a half per cent. upon the gross receipts" and inserting "two and a half per cent. upon net receipts under $3,000, and five per cent upon the excess."

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts indicate the amendment that was reserved on his motion on page 29?

Mr. SHERMAN. There was an amendment reserved by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] about the license fee of insurance agents.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says he does not care much about it. Let it go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is necessary to take the vote on it.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was the following, to come in after line seven hundred and sixteen, on page 30:

That section one hundred and three be amended by inserting after the words "and any foreign port" the words "but such duty shall be assessed upon the transportation of persons and property shipped from a port within the United States, through a foreign territory to a port within the United States, and shall be assessed upon, and collected from, persons, firms, companies, or corporations within the United States receiving such freight or transportation." And that section one hundred and three be amended by adding at the end of said section the following: "And provided further, That no tax under this section shall be assessed upon any person whose gross receipts do not exceed $1,000 per annum."

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend that amendment by inserting after the word "transportation," where it occurs the second time, the following words:

And every railroad company in the United States, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to carry upon and over its road, connections, boats, bridges, and ferries, all freight, property, mails, passengers, troops, and Government supplies on their way from any State to another State, and to receive compensation therefor.

Mr. GRIMES. I hope the Senator from Michigan will postpone that until the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] is present, because he told me that if this was offered he desired to propose an amendment to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is not present. I hope there will be a vote. I do not propose to make any remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say a word about this matter. I am one of those who, if the vote had been taken on the bill in regard to the Camden and Amboy railroad, as it is commonly called, should have voted for it; but it is manifestly improper to put such a controverted question, which will lead to debate, on a bill of this magnitude, at this hour of the session. I trust that no one who desires to expedite the legislation of Congress will trouble us with this controverted matter. I am very sorry that the Senator from Michigan has done so. It will lead to debate and controversy. I hope it will be voted down, in the present condition of affairs certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is perfectly germane to this bill. You propose to tax railroads; I propose to give them certain privileges. I do not want to discuss it. I ask for the yeas and nays. The amendment is perfectly germane; I offer it in its proper location, and I think it the proper time. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. It is pretty obvious—

Mr. COWAN. Will the honorable Senator from Maine allow me to say a word?

Mr. MORRILL. I yield.

Mr. COWAN. I am not certain that I would not have voted with the honorable Senator from Michigan for his measure; but I shall certainly vote against putting it on this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us try the vote. If Senators want afterward to reconsider the vote, any one can move it.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] occupies very nearly the position perhaps that I do. I simply state that in explanation of my vote.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a matter of altogether too much importance by any possibility to slip through in this way. It has been pretty thoroughly debated upon one side. In the relation I held to it upon the committee I deemed it my duty to ask to be heard. I have not interposed to take up any of the time of the Senate, content to speak on it when it came up in its regular order on the general bill. I am content to do so now, but I am willing to meet it here if the Senate choose to put it upon this bill. I only want to reserve that right on a reconsideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. That can be done on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORRILL. I acquiesce in that.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 6, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Farwell, Nye, Ramsey, Sumner, and Wilkinson—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey, Wilson, and Wright—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Hale, Harding, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Salsbury, Trumbull, and Wade—17.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the amendments that were reserved. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to move an additional section, and I do it on the notice I gave at the suggestion of the chairman of the Finance Committee when the Army appropriation bill was up:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, and during the existing rebellion, the pay and emoluments of all officers in the military and naval service of the United States shall be exempt from all income and war tax.

I moved this provision on the Army bill, and the Senator from Ohio thought it was not proper to put it on that.

Mr. GRIMES. It is in it now.

Mr. WILSON. No, sir. The House of Representatives has put it in their increased pay bill; that bill is in the hands of our committee. Therefore I move this section on this bill as I suggested I should do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall content myself with simply voting against it. We have increased since then, or have so far as the action of the Senate is concerned, the pay of the officers of the Army who were most grievously affected by the old pay. I do not think we ought to make exceptions. If we do, efforts will be made constantly to make other exceptions to the income tax.

Mr. WILSON. We have made but a very small increase, increasing the commutation value of the ration from thirty to fifty cents; but the bill that passed the House of Representatives is a large increase, and increases the compensation of the officers who receive fuel and quarters so largely that we have not passed that and shall not. I hope this small allowance will be made. This tax has been put on since the mass of the Army was raised, and it goes pretty hard with them. Especially did it go hard on them to be called on for the extra tax of last year. Some of them have not paid it yet and cannot pay it, have not the means to pay it. I think with the small compensation our officers have we should not tax them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the amendment to except officers from the operation of this bill?

Mr. WILSON. That no war or income tax shall be imposed on officers of the Army and Navy during this rebellion, after the passage of this act. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I have had a good deal of intercourse with officers, and I have never heard any great complaints that they have made against the income tax so far as it was prospective. They did object, and I think they had reason to object, to the law we passed here on the last night of the last session, I think, by which we declared that the incomes of the preceding year should be taxed, and they should take out of their last year's salary a certain amount, and a pretty respectable and large amount, to pay a tax on the preceding year's salary which they had already spent. The hue and cry among the officers in the public service about that law grew out of the fact that it was retrospective and not prospective, that it required them to take out of their current year's salary an amount of money to pay tax on the preceding year's salary, all of which had been spent.

Mr. WILSON. I will modify the amendment so as to apply simply to the income tax, striking out the phrase "war tax" because that is not definite. I put the section in the form it passed the House of Representatives, except that I confine it to the present rebellion. I hope it will be adopted because it is a small matter and will be a great aid to the line officers of the Army.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for its reading as it is now.

The amendment, as modified, was read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, and during the existing rebellion, the pay and emoluments of all officers in the military and naval service of the United States shall be exempt from all income tax.

Mr. HARLAN. I had supposed that such a law would be unconstitutional. On that subject, however, I would be advised by those who know more than I do. If all taxes are to be "uniform throughout the United States" I do not perceive how you can tax one class of officers on their salaries and exempt another class. I merely suggest it. That view of the case will control my vote. If the officers are not receiving enough pay, I will vote to increase their pay. If the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will say that their pay ought to be increased, I will vote to increase it reasonably; but I think that a tax ought to be uniform; if it is an income tax it ought to be levied in a uniform mode on the incomes of all the people of the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. There are no votes that I have given since I have had a seat here with more pleasure than those that have gone to the benefit of the men who are engaged in fighting our battles; but that feeling and disposition, as well as all others, must necessarily have a limit, and I think that considering the condition of the country, the condition of its finances, the efforts that we are making to obtain money and to levy taxes, the law-making power has acted with a great deal of liberality toward the soldiers and officers. As suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, there has been a considerable increase made recently to the salaries of officers. Last year there was a considerable increase made to the pay of private soldiers. I have also an objection to this as attaching to this act, and for these reasons will vote against it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am in favor of the proposition as offered, and for a reason which relates not merely to this particular subject, but to the whole subject-matter of official relations and of official compensation. We employ men in office; we are engaged here by our people to take office in the Senate Chamber. The President in his mansion and the soldier in the field have a certain compensation. That compensation is not a just subject of taxation and never should have been made a subject of taxation. If their pay is too large, it should be reduced. That is in the power of the legislation of the country. The idea of deducting a tax from official compensation is one of the falsehoods of a false policy. The proposition now is right to the extent to which it is proposed, in my judgment; that is, that the officers and soldiers in the field should not be taxed out of their compensation; nor do I think that other persons serving the Government should be taxed out of their assigned compensation. The Government has the power to reduce that compensation at any time at its pleasure, but compensation in its just sense is just payment by the Government. I think it a hard thing to call out of the payments due to officers and soldiers this per cent., and it is, I say, false as well as impolitic legislation. The same rule that is involved in this present proposition should be extended to all officers in the employ of the Government, for now the Government pays and the Government then takes back. It is like an Indian gift.

I will not take time to discuss this thing, but it is palpable that it is false to any person who thinks carefully on the subject. I am in favor of the proposition, only I think it should be universal instead of being special; but being special it is an approximation toward the truth.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is a very ungracious thing to vote against a proposition to increase the pay of officers of the Army, because their pay is really not sufficient. But a short time ago we passed a bill to increase the pay of all officers below the grade of brigadier general. I do not know what has become of that bill.

Mr. WILSON. Allow me to suggest that on the Army appropriation bill a section was put increasing the ration of all officers below a brigadier general from thirty to fifty cents, and a section was also put upon it giving those officers who should remain in the service to the close of the war three months' pay proper. The committee of conference on the Army bill agreed to the first section but not to the last; that was thrown out.

Mr. GRIMES. What will be the increase by the addition to the price of the ration?

Mr. WILSON. The increase of the ration for a line officer will be eighty cents a day, for a colonel of a regiment $1 20 a day, which would be an increase of something more than twenty per cent. My intention was to put this section upon this bill. I stated it at the time, and I supposed there would not be any opposition to it, but that we should relieve these officers from taxation and give the increased ration. The House of Representatives passed this provision in a bill making a large increase to Army officers, larger than we can support.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would very gladly vote for this proposition provided I could see my way clear; but really there is a constitutional objection to it in my opinion. "All duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." I cannot see that we can exempt any officers from an excise tax. It is certainly against the spirit of the Constitution, if not directly against the letter, to make this exemption. In the next place it is a very great impolicy to commence exempting anybody from a tax. Then, again, I would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that inasmuch as he has included all officers in this amendment, the officers receiving the largest salary will be the parties who will receive the largest increase of pay under this amendment, because in proportion to the size of his salary of course the tax is greater. Therefore the proposition will only increase the salary of those whose salary already is large. For these several reasons I cannot support the proposition.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The question of compensation for services established by law belongs to Government, and when the Government offers compensation to a certain extent and undertakes to pay, it is not properly subject to taxation; it does not fall within the range of this kind of taxation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does this exempt any income of an officer except his salary?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think only his pay; that is, his pay provided for by the Government, which does not fall within the range of legitimate taxation.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 22, after the word "thereof" in line five hundred and fifteen, I move to insert:

Provided, That Bibles and Testaments not costing more than two dollars shall be exempt from any duty or tax, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding.

I desire to say simply that Bibles and Testaments of the cheaper qualities are published by benevolent institutions and associations, the Bible Society mainly, and the Methodist Book Concern. I do not think they ought to be taxed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Since the subject was up the other day I have received a letter from a very intelligent and one of the leading publishers in New York, in which he recommends that no discrimination be made. He says that in regard to his own business it is difficult to distinguish between the classes of books exempted by this proviso; that it is impossible to tell how much the Bibles cost, how much the Testaments cost, and how much school-books cost. It is true some houses do not publish all these classes of books, but all of them publish more or less Bibles and Testaments, and any attempt to make a discrimination would be dangerous. Those who read the Bible, as some one remarked the other day, are most willing to pay the tax.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I offer to add as another section to the bill the section which was reported by the committee on page 57—the second section as found on page 57.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the present rates of postage on letters, there shall be charged, from and after the 1st day of July next, for every single letter in manuscript, or paper of any kind in which information shall be asked for or communicated in writing or by signs or marks, conveyed in the mails, five cents; and for a double or other multiple letter there shall be charged an increased rate according to the present rates, five cents being computed the unit instead of three cents.

Mr. HENDRICKS. While all the interests of the country are so heavily burdened with taxation I think the Post Office Department ought to be self-supporting. It is on that principle that I offer the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. This proposition was voted upon to-day by yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. We did not vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNESS. I thought we did. Let us have the yeas and nays now. We are not now a full Senate either.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say that it is an important proposition which was presented before, and there was a fair vote on it when the Senate was full. I think it ought not to be pressed again now.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It seems to me that when you are taxing everything, when you are seeking out for purposes of taxation all sorts of trades and interests, the postage should bear some portion of the burden of this war; that there should be equality in taxation in this respect as in all others. You have just refused the proposition to exempt Bibles and all sacred books; and it seems to me there should be no exemption in favor of the postage, and I do not believe that the people who write would feel the additional burden it is proposed to put on them. I trust the proposition of the Senator from Indiana will prevail.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, and Stewart—13.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Davis, Doo-

Little, Farwell, Foot, Harlan, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Riddle, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Hale, Harding, Harris, Howard, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

Mr. STEWART. I offer this amendment, to come in after the word "section," in line seven hundred and ten, on the 30th page:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to teams, wagons, or vehicles used in transporting silver ores from the mine where the same are extracted to the place of reduction.

I hope this amendment will prevail. It will obviate the principal difficulty we have in Nevada, and prevent the putting of an impediment in the way of opening new mines and trying experiments, which is the great business of the country. It will not operate in any other State. While silver mining is in its infancy it will do no harm to the revenue, and it will enable the teamsters to bring the rock from the desert for the purpose of experimenting. I think it will be a great relief to our people; it will allow them to go ahead with their experiments. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDUGALL. This is a desirable amendment, and a just one. I wish not to argue, but merely to affirm that as a matured opinion from a knowledge of the country, and the Senator from Nevada understands it much better than I do myself, and much better than any of us. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Davis, Foster, Grimes, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Wiley, and Wilson—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Hale, Harding, Harris, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilkinson—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 45, section four, after the word "ninety-four" in line two, I move to insert "and fifty-five," so as to read: "That in addition to the duties imposed in sections ninety-four, and fifty-five," &c.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the effect of that?

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain in a word. As the bill now stands section four imposes an additional tax of twenty per cent. upon the present tax on manufactures generally. This amendment will impose the same increase of tax on manufactured liquors. I see no reason why the same rule should not apply. I do not wish to argue the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The effect would be to increase the tax on whisky to $2 40 a gallon instead of two dollars. I am satisfied the article will not bear that. I am satisfied that the present duty is almost driving its distillation into such secret places that it is very difficult to avoid frauds. I believe it would be very unwise to attempt to increase the tax on whisky. At any rate, at this period of the session, it is very unwise to introduce that controversy into the other House.

Mr. MORRILL. I was told that they contemplated an additional tax of fifty per cent. in the other House, which led me to make this suggestion. I do not know how it is, but it seems to me very difficult to see why it is there should be a discrimination in favor of the manufacture of whisky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the fourth section. That section taxes all kinds of manufactures twenty per cent. in addition to the tax now assessed. The present tax is five per cent., and this is one per cent. in addition, making it six per cent. The manufacturing interest in this country and in England is satisfied with two and one half per cent. profit. The Government of the United States propose by this bill to take from that interest in this country two profits and a half. The Committee on Finance have suggested, and the Senate has confirmed their suggestion, that one half per cent. be taxed upon all sales. That proposition was rejected by the other House. It has struck me, on examination of the question, that the proposition to tax sales, which is eminently proper and judicious, would be more sure to prevail in that House if this increased tax on manufactures was stricken out of the bill.

I tell the Senate in good faith, in as good faith as it is possible for one man to tell another anything, that the present tax of five per cent. is destroying an interest that is producing very much income to the Treasury. I tell you that those who are employed in the manufacture of cottons—and it is in regard to that interest that I speak more particularly—are not half as well paid as they were before this war, but they have been obliged to continue in that employment because they have no means to remove from it. I tell the Senate, too, that during the greater period of the war cotton manufacturing has been a losing business to those engaged in it, but they have employed their machinery and tried to keep their capital intact for the purpose of being ready when the war closes to continue their business. Throughout the country to-day not one fourth of the capital or of the machinery employed before the war is employed; and those engaged are not half so well paid as they were before the war. The Government derives every mill of profit and more upon that interest.

I should not feel that I had done my duty if I did not protest against and resist this exaction. It has appeared to me that Senators do not comprehend this question at all. They have not exhibited any information on this important interest, for look at it: they impose a high ad valorem tax on cotton manufactures when the war has made the value of cotton ten times what it was before, and this taxation falls on those who are least able to bear it; men who get their one or two dollars a day are taxed by this bill more than any tax that was ever levied in the history of any civilized country.

I tell you, sir, this policy is destroying this great interest. I tell you that the three per cent. tax which you put upon the manufacturers in the beginning gave to you more revenue than the five per cent., and the five per cent. has given you more revenue than you can get from the six per cent. now proposed. You tax it at that rate, though previous to the war it would have been satisfied with two and a half per cent. profit. I tell you one fourth of the capital invested in this interest is dead capital. I tell you that the operatives engaged in this employment are engaged at one half the compensation they received previous to this war. And I tell you the capital invested in it receives no compensation, but is losing money, and has been for two years past.

These facts are known to me, and they must be apparent to everybody who is obliged to buy cotton fabrics, and to any one who examines the question. It seems to me that there should be some discrimination for an article of prime necessity, an article which the masses of the people are hardly able to procure now, and yet that article is taxed three or four times the amount that any other article which is consumed is taxed.

I move that this section be stricken out. That motion may not prevail. If not, I shall move that cotton manufactures be included in the proviso to the section so as to exempt them from the increase.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now move to amend the fourth section by inserting "cottons" among the list of manufactured articles in the proviso to that section.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That whenever distilled spirits shall be taken from a bonded warehouse for consumption, the spirits shall, if the owner shall require it, be again inspected and gauged, and the duty shall be paid on the number of gallons thus ascertained to be in the barrels taken from the bonded warehouse.

This amendment is just to this effect: as the law now stands the barrels are gauged when taken from the distillery to the bonded warehouse, otherwise they would be gauged when taken from the distillery for sale, if not to the bonded warehouse. This proposition is that they shall be gauged for the purposes of taxation at the time they are taken out of the bonded warehouse for sale; that that quantity solely shall be the quantity taxed.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. For the purpose of getting an amendment that I wish to be adopted before the Senate, as I want it acted upon, I will offer it once more. It is after the word "accounting," in the forty-fifth line on the 3d page, to add:

And by adding after the first proviso in the same section the following: "Provided further, That no more shall be allowed to any assessor for clerk hire in any one year than seventy cents for each hundred names assessed in his district, and no more shall be allowed to any assessor for stationery in any year than one cent for each name assessed in his district."

I gave some figures on which I was induced to move this amendment; and now, not to detain the Senate by reargument of the question, but in order to inform the country of my reasons for urging this amendment upon the Senate, I ask leave to present some tables that they may be printed in the Globe.

These tables illustrate the question of clerk hire; they give the number of names in thousands assessed in each district, the present rate allowed for clerk hire in each district, and the amount which would be allowed for clerk hire in each district, calculated after the rate named in the amendment, seventy cents for each one hundred names. I have already stated that this amendment would save to the Treasury about fifty thousand dollars, and yet I have said and the tables will show that it will increase the allowance for clerk hire in more than half the districts of the United States. With reference to the question of stationery, I only wish to say that I have been furnished with a list of thirty-eight districts in different States of the United States assessing in the aggregate three hundred and eighteen thousand names, where the whole amount allowed for stationery is $3,110 99; and I have been given another district, a single district, in the State of New York, the thirty-second district, where twenty-four thousand names are assessed, and $3,071 40 is allowed for stationery, within a few dollars of the amount allowed in the other thirty-eight districts.

I could give some further curious illustrations of the way this amendment will affect the expenses in different districts. I will mention two or three. It would decrease the amount allowed for clerk hire in every district in Massachusetts, I think, but one, and it would increase that $890. In the State of Maryland it would decrease the cost in one district $90, and increase the cost in every other district, one $110, one $240, one $110, and one $90. In the State of Illinois it would decrease the cost in two districts and increase the amount in all the other districts of that State. In the State of Michigan it would increase the amount allowed to the assessors, in one district $540, in another district $240, in another district $170, in another district $230, in another $30, in another $190, and would not decrease it in a single district. It would increase it in every district in the State of Iowa; it would increase it in every district but one in the State of Wisconsin; it would increase it in every district in Vermont; it would increase it in the District of Columbia; but it would decrease the cost in some districts in the State of New York very heavily; in one district $3,320, in another $3,320, in another $2,520. It would decrease it in the State of Pennsylvania in a large number of districts, and make very heavy discounts on the present cost. In the State of Indiana it would increase the cost in every district in the State.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Will the gentleman give way for a motion to take a recess?

Mr. HOWE. I will give way for a vote on the question in one moment. It is a matter that interests me no more than it does every other Senator and every other tax-payer. I thought it proper, however, inasmuch as these tables had been furnished me and I understood them to be correct, to lay them before the country and let them see what it is the Legislature will not agree to correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are one or two verbal amendments to which my attention has been called since the action of the committee.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the chairman be authorized to make the corrections.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would not take that liberty.

I have not got them now. They are not very material at any rate; they are verbal. Let the bill proceed.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. POWELL. I am opposed to the bill. I am for no bill taxing the State banks ten per cent. and taxing sales.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss anything at length, but simply to make some few affirmations.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will my friend allow me to insert the words "meters and other apparatus" after "hydrometer" in a certain place?

Mr. McDUGALL. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move after the word "amended," in line two hundred and ten, to insert "by inserting after the word 'hydrometer' the words 'meters and other apparatus.'"

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move before "by," in line four hundred and ninety-nine, to insert "by striking out of the first paragraph relating to sugar the words 'brown or muscovado,' and by striking out of the second paragraph relating to sugar the words, 'clarified or refined,' and by striking out of the third paragraph relating to sugar the words 'or clarified or refined.'"

Mr. CLARK. These words were omitted by mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These corrections will be made in the bill unless objected to. The Chair hears no objection. They will be made.

Mr. McDUGALL. It is known to many Senators that I disagreed with the system or policy adopted in regard to the collection of internal revenue, thinking it might, with better advisement, have been better done; but I acquiesced in the action of the majority and supported it because it was the only thing that could then be done, although I did not think that wisdom governed the councils of those who had to do with the drawing from our people the means whereby to support our war.

The first rude legislation of 1862 has not been improved upon, but has been made more disintegral from that time to this time, and this legislation which is proposed now, and which will receive the sanction of the Senate, and to which it would be folly for me to offer any particular opposition, is, of all, the farthest from the right. This bill is full of wrong—wrongs to individuals, wrongs to organizations, wrongs to the Constitution, and to all principles of right. I have given always my support, and given it cordially, to bills introduced for the purpose of collecting revenue, although I differed as to the policy; but to this I cannot give my support, for it is a bill that has elements in it that strike at the foundations of our Government. It means disruption, and that involves destruction, and who will make the reconstruction—who? Echo answers, who.

I am sad that I am compelled to acquiesce, without the power of resistance, in the legislation that will be the result of this action. It is the tiger's claws taking hold of the blocks that lay at the foundation and turning them over, and not the hyena's claws. There is more of danger and of death in this bill than any measure that has been brought before the Federal Congress since 1787. Gentlemen may not see it now; it may not be in their mind's eye; but it will come to them before they are many years older. I say that one single provision in which I have no interest myself personally, that simple ten per cent. provision driving the States out of their authority to conduct their own financial affairs, is a piece of usurpation that amounts to tyranny, and it is the affirmation of a power in the central Government absolute in itself, ignoring all rights in the States, and inaugurates—no, does not inaugurate, because the policy has been inaugurated sub modo, but this is the first bold, wicked assertion of it, and upon those who do it must the consequences fall. Upon them they will fall, and fall as the deluge came out of heaven and as the waters of the great deep break up.

I want to say these things though gentlemen may smile at the consequences. Some men only live for a day, or think they only live for a day. Some think they live for eternity. I, at least, think in my place here I ought to live the age of my country and do it full justice. If gentlemen propose to establish a hierarchy, or a monarchy, or an absolutism here in Washington and maintain it, very well. If that has become a thing necessitated by the condition of our people, by the want of public morality, by the want of public justice, let it come; I am prepared to meet it. As long as I believe in the faith of my fathers, as long as I believe in the faith in which I was instructed, as long as I believe in the faith in which I was educated by the lessons of old antiquity and of modern ages, I will not believe it. This bill contains such features as tend to destroy the foundations of the Government. I will vote against it.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866, insisted on by the Senate; and upon its amendment to the sixth amendment of the Senate, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. F. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. W. S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. THOMAS T. DAVIS of New York, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives insisted upon its amendments to the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes and their treatment by the civil and military authorities, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM WINDOM of Minnesota, Mr. J. D. BALDWIN of Massachusetts, and Mr. PHILIP JOHNSON of Pennsylvania, managers of the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 88) regulating proceedings in criminal cases, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 649) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1866, and additional appropriations for the current fiscal year; and

A bill (H. R. No. 763) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; and to amend an act amendatory thereof, approved July 2, 1864.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. I believe that is the unfinished business, and then I shall move that we take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall take no recess.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move to postpone the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill until half past seven o'clock, and that it be made the special order at that hour; and in the mean time I will not interfere with the business of other Senators.

Mr. POWELL. I hope we may have a recess. Let us go and have some dinner. We have had none to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to postpone the Indian appropriation bill—I believe it is now in order as the unfinished business—and make it the special order for half past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The bill has not yet been taken up.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to postpone all prior orders, with a view of taking up a little naval bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe my motion is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has my motion been put to take up the Indian appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I now move that it be postponed until seven o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be made the special order.

Mr. GRIMES. And that it be made the special order for seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. I move that it be made the special order for eight o'clock. ["Oh, no!"] I have some other business that I want to dispose of in the mean time.

Mr. SHERMAN. You will have an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eight o'clock is named; and the Chair will put the question on the longest hour first, according to the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF MIDSHIPMEN.

Mr. GRIMES. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 605. This is a House bill, and as the Committee on Naval Affairs propose an amendment to it it must go back to the House in order to become a law.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POWELL. I now move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 9, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON and Mr. RAMSEY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 5, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Henderson, Powell, Riddle, and Sprague—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nye, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Carille, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—24.

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask the Senate to consider Senate bill No. 419.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another bill now before the Senate.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I believe the Chair recognized me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did so.

Mr. GRIMES. But this bill was taken up before the motion for a recess was made.

Mr. SPRAGUE. But I do not suppose it takes precedence of all others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill No. 605 is before the Senate, and the Secretary was about to read the bill when the motion for a recess was made. That bill is now before the Senate, subject to the decision of a majority of the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 605) to increase the pay of midshipmen and others. It provides that midshipmen, after their final academic examination and until their promotion to the grade of ensign, shall be paid at the rate of $800 per annum while on sea service; that acting masters' mates shall be styled mates, and the Secretary of the Navy is to be authorized to increase their pay not exceeding sixty dollars per month. And hereafter mates may be rated, under authority of the Secretary of the Navy, from seamen and ordinary seamen who have enlisted in the naval service for not less than two years, but such rating of an enlisted man, or his appointment as an officer, is not to discharge him from his enlistment. No person appointed or rated an officer or clerk in the Navy is to receive any bounty while holding an appointment.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported the bill with two amendments. The first amendment was in section two, line three, after the word "pay" to insert the words "to a sum;" so that it will read:

That acting masters' mates shall be styled mates, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to increase their pay to a sum not exceeding sixty dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That acting passed assistant surgeons and acting surgeons may be appointed in the same manner as acting assistant surgeons are now appointed, who shall receive the compensation of their respective grades.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed. The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and it was read the third time.

Mr. FARWELL. I do not think I am in favor of this bill, which proposes, as I understand, to increase the pay of midshipmen after they have graduated. That is one of the main features of it. Am I right?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARWELL. Perhaps it is a small matter; but I do not think, when we are reaching around in every direction, trying to get a little money, that we should increase the pay of these young gentlemen.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator will permit me, perhaps he does not exactly understand what the bill is.

Mr. FARWELL. I want some explanation of it.

Mr. GRIMES. The first section of this bill proposes to increase the pay of midshipmen after they shall have left the Academy and while performing sea duty and before they are promoted to the grade of ensigns. Under the organization as the Department has heretofore existed, these midshipmen, when they graduated, became ensigns and received $1,200 a year. Now it is proposed, not to make them ensigns immediately, but to allow them to go to sea in the capacity of midshipmen, and to give them a mean pay between that which they would receive if they were immediately promoted and that which they are receiving at the Academy. The truth is, that it is a saving of the difference between $1,200 and $800 over the system that has prevailed during the last four years. It is proposed now to send these young men to sea as midshipmen. During the last four or five years when they graduated they became ensigns, and being ensigns they received $1,200. It is now proposed that they shall have some experience in the grade of midshipmen; and if they go to sea in that grade they are to have $800 in place of the $1,200 they would receive as ensigns.

Mr. FARWELL. Does this bill change the position they hold when they go to sea?

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir; this bill does not say that they shall go to sea in any grade. That is a matter that is regulated by the Navy Department, and has been from the foundation of the Navy.

Mr. FARWELL. I observe that the bill proposes to increase their pay.

Mr. GRIMES. It proposes to increase their pay while they are at sea and obliged to keep up their mess, over what they now receive at the Academy, where they are not compelled to furnish their provisions. They receive at the Academy $500. This bill proposes to give them $300 more, if they go to sea, to support them while at sea.

Mr. FARWELL. After they have graduated?

Mr. GRIMES. After they have graduated, while they are at sea as midshipmen.

The bill was passed.

NOTIFICATION TO VICE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the joint committee of the two Houses appointed to wait upon Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, and notify him of his election as Vice President of the United States, reported that they had performed the duty assigned them, and that Mr. Johnson replied that he acquiesced in the will of the people, and that he was ready at the proper time to take the oath of office and enter upon the discharge of his duties.

MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 170.

Mr. HOWARD. What is it?

Mr. WILSON. The title of it is, "A joint resolution declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants," to which I desire to propose an amendment of some eight or ten sections which it is very important to pass, and it is very important that it should go back to the House of Representatives as early as possible. I consulted with the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, and told them I would get it down there last night, and I expected to be able to do so then, or early this morning. I do not think it will take more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope it will not be taken up. We have a great many bills of much more importance to act upon.

Mr. WILSON. You have none at all. It involves in it the organizing of six regiments of engineers; it involves in it the clothing of our volunteers; and it involves several other important things which we will all agree upon if they are only read and considered. I think we can settle it in ten or fifteen minutes, and it is of great importance that it should be passed.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to ask the indulgence of the chairman of the committee to permit us to take a vote upon the paymaster's bill before that resolution is taken up.

Mr. WILSON. That bill cannot pass Congress at this late hour in the session. It is a Senate bill, and if passed here it would have to go to the House of Representatives, and it is a trifling affair compared with one single item in this proposition. The amendment that I shall propose to this resolution makes provision for the clothing of our volunteers, which the Quartermaster General of our Army says is essential. They received forty-two dollars when the war opened, and the regulars now receive about sixty dollars, and they have to pay the difference out of their own pocket.

ets. There are several just provisions in the amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Does the Senator decline to permit me to take up this bill?

Mr. WILSON. I cannot give way to a measure of this character for the one the Senator desires to take up, because there is no comparison between the two. This is a House resolution upon which I propose to offer an amendment of great importance, and the bill of the Senator, if it should pass here, may reach the House and may not pass at this session; but this is of vital importance, and I am very anxious to have it passed.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether the measure to which he alludes has been before the committee?

Mr. WILSON. It has been before the committee, and has been reported as a bill; but in order to save it, as we are pressed for time, I propose to offer the bill which we have reported as an amendment to this resolution, so that it may have a better chance of passing. If we were to pass the original bill now, it would have no more chance to become a law than this paymaster's bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope this measure will not be taken up. From the remark made by the Senator from Michigan I do not believe it has received the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs, and at this late period of the session I do not believe that it is a proposition that should pass.

Mr. WILSON. I am utterly amazed at the declaration made by the Senator from Rhode Island that this has not received the consideration of the Committee on Military Affairs. It has received that consideration, and I know it, whether the Senator knows it or not. Now, sir, I propose to show what this bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the merits of the measure are not strictly in order on a motion to proceed to its consideration. Reasons may be given why it should be taken up; but that does not involve a debate on its merits.

Mr. WILSON. Well, sir, without discussing it, I hope the Senate will take it up. We could have passed it before this if there had been no opposition.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I observe that the committee report an amendment to strike out all of the original resolution, and insert a substitute; and I presume the Senator from Massachusetts does not wish to have the original resolution read.

Mr. WILSON. No, sir; I only desire to have the substitute read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the original resolution will be dispensed with if there be no objection, and the substitute only will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

That the measure of allowance for pay for an officer's servant is the pay of a private soldier as fixed by law at the time; that no non-commissioned officer shall be detailed or employed to act as a servant, nor shall any private soldier be so detailed or employed except with his own consent; that for each soldier employed as a servant by any officer there shall be deducted from the monthly pay of such officer the full monthly pay and allowances of the soldier so employed; and that, including any soldier or soldiers so employed, no officer shall be allowed for any greater number of servants than is now provided by law, nor be allowed for any servant not actually and in fact in his employ.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That non-commissioned officers and privates in the volunteer service shall receive the same amount of clothing as non-commissioned officers and privates of the same arm of the regular Army.

Mr. HOWARD. I notice that the Secretary omitted to read section two of the printed amendment, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, in these words:

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That hereafter the bread ration shall be fourteen ounces of hard bread or twenty ounces of soft bread, or its equivalent in flour; or, in lieu of an increase of the bread ration, the allowance may be made in vegetables.

I beg to inquire of the chairman whether that is not a part of their amendment.

Mr. WILSON. That is a part of the bill that was originally reported, and which I now propose as an amendment to this resolution; but I concluded to leave that out, because, on investigation and consultation with the committee in the House who had the same subject under advisement, they thought it was doubtful whether it could carry, and that it had better be abandoned. I have a letter from the commissary department, stating that it was not necessary.

Mr. HOWARD. I was merely inquiring for information; that is all.

The Secretary continued the reading of the amendment; as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That if a soldier, discharged for wounds received in battle, die before receiving the bounty provided by the act of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the employment of volunteers, and so forth," the bounty due shall be paid to the following persons, and in the order following, and to no other person, to wit: first, to the widow of such deceased soldier, if there be one; second, if there be no widow, then to the children of such deceased soldier, share and share alike; third, if such soldier left neither a widow, or child or children, then, and in that case, such bounty shall be paid to the following persons, provided they be residents of the United States, to wit: first, to his father; or, if he shall not be living, or has abandoned the support of his family, then to the mother of such soldier, and if there be neither father nor mother, as aforesaid, then such bounty shall be paid to the brothers and sisters of the deceased soldier resident as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. And be it further resolved, That every non-commissioned officer, private, or other person who has been, or shall hereafter be, discharged from the Army of the United States by reason of wounds received in battle, on skirmish, on picket, or in action, or in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the same bounty as if he had served out his full term; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this are hereby repealed.

SEC. 5. And be it further resolved, That the legal heirs of those persons who shall have become entitled to the bounty under the preceding section of this act, and shall have died before receiving the same, shall be entitled to receive the bounty upon making application for the same, as in the case of the heirs of those who die or are killed in the service.

SEC. 6. And be it further resolved, That all persons of color who were enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States in South Carolina, by and under the direction of Major General Hunter and Brigadier General Saxton, in pursuance of the authority from the Secretary of War dated August 25, 1862, "that the persons so received into service, and their officers, to be entitled to and receive the same pay and rations as are allowed by law to other volunteers in the service;" and in every case where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that any regiment of colored troops has been mustered into the service of the United States, under any assurance by the President or the Secretary of War, that the non-commissioned officers and privates of such regiment should be paid the same as other troops of the same arm of the service, shall, from the date of their enlistment, receive the same pay and allowances as are allowed by law to other volunteers in the military service; and the Secretary of War shall make all necessary regulations to cause payment to be made in accordance therewith.

SEC. 7. And be it further resolved, That the President is hereby authorized to enlist or organize, out of troops already in the service, six regiments of volunteer engineers, to be organized by existing regulations, to have the same pay and allowances of engineer troops of the regular Army and to be subjected to the rules and articles of war.

SEC. 8. And be it further resolved, That the President is hereby authorized to enlist two additional companies, to be added to the regiment of volunteer engineers raised under the provisions of an act approved May 30, 1864, entitled "An act to organize a regiment of veteran volunteers," and said regiment shall be considered one of the regiments authorized in the preceding section of this act.

SEC. 9. And be it further resolved, That whenever a regiment in the regular Army is reduced below the minimum number, no officer shall be appointed in such regiment beyond those necessary for the command of such reduced number.

SEC. 10. And be it further resolved, That "acting assistant surgeons" and "contract surgeons," while in the military service of the United States, shall hereafter be exempt from all liability to be drafted under the provisions of this act and the acts to which this is an amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the rereading of the eighth section, providing for volunteer engineers.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator want an explanation of that section?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. Last year the House of Representatives passed a bill for a regiment of volunteer engineers, and provided that it should be composed of ten companies, when it should be twelve; and they desire now to have the same number of companies as other regiments.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that in addition to the six regiments that are provided for?

Mr. WILSON. This regiment was ordered last year, and instead of having twelve companies was composed of but ten, and this section proposes to make it uniform.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that; but there is a section in the amendment which proposes to make six new regiments of engineers. Does that stand?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. These two companies are in addition to that?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; to be added to another regiment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to strike out all of the original resolution and insert what has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That officers by brevet in the regular Army shall receive the same pay and allowances as brevet officers of the same grade or rank in the volunteer service, and no more.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has proposed to me to offer Senate bill No. 419 as an amendment to this resolution; and I therefore move to add the following as additional sections:

And be it further resolved, That the Paymaster General of the United States Army shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and emoluments of brigadier general.

And be it further resolved, That there shall be added to the pay department of the United States Army, as now organized, two Assistant Paymaster Generals, who shall be, ex officio, inspector generals of the department, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels of infantry. And, in addition to the two Deputy Paymaster Generals now authorized, there shall be added ten others, subject to the same conditions and provisions as by existing laws provided for Deputy Paymaster Generals.

And be it further resolved, That the appointment to the offices herein created shall be made by selection from the officers from the pay department of the United States Army, including the additional paymasters and the chief clerk, and who shall have had at least two years' service and experience in the duties of the pay department: Provided, That at least two thirds of such appointments shall be made from the additional or volunteer paymasters; and after such appointments have once been filled, all vacancies occurring shall be supplied as now required by law prescribed for other staff departments of the Army.

And be it further resolved, That the Assistant and Deputy Paymaster Generals shall give bond in the manner now required of Deputy Paymaster Generals, and shall be subject to any duty in the pay department to which they may be assigned by the Secretary of War.

And be it further resolved, That whenever a pay district shall be established, for the charge, superintendence, and command of which no Assistant or Deputy Paymaster General shall be available as chief, the Secretary of War may detail any paymaster or additional paymaster of the Army to do the duties of such chief; and during the continuance of such detail and duties, and no longer, the officer so detailed shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of a Deputy Paymaster General: Provided, That the total number of such acting deputies shall not at any one time exceed ten.

And be it further resolved, That the Secretary of War shall have authority to detail officers of the pay department for duty as inspectors of such department, not exceeding four at any one time, who, during the continuance of such detail and duties, shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of Deputy Paymaster Generals. And they, together with the inspector generals herein provided for, shall have the powers and authority within their own department now by law and regulations conferred upon inspector generals of the Army.

And be it further resolved, That the provisions of this resolution shall continue and be in force during the continuance of the present rebellion, and one year thereafter, and no longer: Provided, however, That when this resolution shall expire all officers who have been promoted from the pay staff of the Army under this act shall retain their respective rank in the Army, with such promotion as they would have been entitled to.

Mr. GRIMES. In the second line of the second section of this amendment, before the word "pay," I move to insert the words "volunteer or additional;" so that it will read:

That there shall be added to the volunteer or additional pay department of the United States Army, as now organized, &c.

Mr. SPRAGUE. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment to the amendment being accepted by the mover of the amendment, will be considered as a part of the original amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, as modified; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Sprague, and Wilson—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Ramsey, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Harding, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Richardson, Riddle, Sausbury, Sherman, Stewart, Wilkinson, and Wright—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further resolved, That in all cases where non-commissioned officers, privates, musicians, or artificers of cavalry shall have furnished, previous to the 20th day of June, 1864, horses and equipments for the military service, as provided by the act entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," approved July 22, 1861, and who shall have continued in the service with such horses and equipments after the date first aforesaid, such non-commissioned officers, privates, musicians, and artificers shall be entitled to receive the pay allowed by the said act of July 22, 1861, for the use and risk of such horses and equipments so long as the same remained the private property of such persons, and were actually used by them in the military service; and nothing contained in the act of June 20, 1864, entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes," shall be construed to prevent the payment thereof up to the period of time when horses and equipments shall have been furnished by the Government to such persons so engaged in the service.

This amendment is in the words of a bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The act of 1861, which authorized the employment of volunteers provided:

That the allowances of non-commissioned officers and privates for clothing, when not furnished in kind, shall be $3 50 per month, and that each company officer, non-commissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer of cavalry shall furnish his own horse and horse equipments, and shall receive forty cents per day for their use and risk, except that in case the horse shall become disabled, or shall die, the allowance shall cease until the disability be removed or another horse be supplied.

The act of July 17, 1862, repealed that portion of the act of 1861. The tenth section of that act is in these words:

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That so much of the fifth section of the act approved July 22, 1861, as allows forty cents per day for the use and risk of the horses of company officers of cavalry, and the tenth section of the aforesaid act, approved August 3, 1861, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

That repealed so much of the act as allowed company officers to receive pay. The ninth section of the act of June 20, 1864, provided:

"That so much of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," approved July 22, 1861, as provides that each company officer, non-commissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer of cavalry, shall furnish his own horse and horse equipments, and shall receive forty cents per day for their use and risk, is hereby repealed, except only so far as the same may hereafter be made to apply and relate to mounted troops called into the service of the United States for a term not exceeding six months."

At the time that act was passed, during the last summer, there were some cavalry regiments in my State in active service and the exchange of their horses could not be made. They were in active service pursuing the enemy in the State, and they were unable to make the exchange until Price was driven out of the State. It will be observed that this amendment does not exempt company officers; it only refers to the non-commissioned officers and men who furnished their own horses. I addressed a letter to the quartermaster, Colonel Myers, in order to ascertain why it was that these men were not paid. Great complaint has been made on this subject. They were not paid for their horses after the passage of this act; and I think, perhaps, under the strict terms of the act, it was right that they were not paid. The quartermaster replies to me in this way:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 16th instant. The raid of the rebels into the State last fall occasioned some delay in purchasing the horses of enlisted men belonging to cavalry regiments serving in this department. The matter, however, was attended to as early as practicable. The men have, as far as possible, been given an opportunity to present their animals for inspection, and the purchase is now complete."

I need not read any further. It shows that there was a delay in this matter in consequence of the activity of these men in service at the time. As the men had their own horses in the service, and could not be mustered to some rendezvous in order to have their horses exchanged and purchased by the United States, in accordance with this law, I think they ought to be paid during the short time that intervened until it was done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the amendment, and declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will withdraw the amendment. I consider it but a simple act of justice; but if the Senate is prepared to say that they will not pay these men in the service for three or four months that they were thus actively engaged so that this exchange could not be made, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That whenever the head of any bureau in the War Department accepts any position of a higher rank than that provided for by law for the head of said bureau, then and in that case he shall be deemed and held as having vacated his position as head of said bureau, and shall be subject to detail for field and other duty as other military officers.

Mr. NESMITH. I should like to understand the object of this amendment. I presume it is all right. I do not know, though.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. We have by law provided that the heads of these bureaus in the War Department shall have the rank of brigadier-generals. The heads of these military bureaus aspire to obtain higher rank, and we are called upon here to elevate them to higher military rank. This amendment provides that whenever they shall accept this higher rank they shall thereby vacate their positions as heads of bureaus. I hope it will be adopted. These men obtain higher rank, and still retain the positions to which they are appointed, which positions give them the rank of brigadier-general. I think this is a matter of sufficient importance for the Senate to place it as an amendment to this resolution. Let us stop somewhere this continual aspiring for promotion contrary to law and in the face of law.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know of any case to which this amendment can apply unless it be the case of General Meigs, and I do not think we ought to make any special law on that subject. If General Meigs has rendered such distinguished service that the President thinks he is entitled to the rank of brevet major general, I do not know of anything that should prevent it. He has been nominated as brevet major general, and I do not think we should pass a law vacating his position on that account. The President appoints him, and I am for acquiescing in the will of the President in that matter.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I do not know why my colleague makes an application of this amendment to any particular officer. This provision is so important that I desire at least a division of the Senate upon it. If it applies to General Meigs, well and good. Let us hold these officers to the law.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish simply to inquire whether this amendment has been considered by any committee?

Mr. WILSON. It has not; but it is very plain, and I do not think there is any opposition to it.

Mr. HALE. What is it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The amendment is simply this, that when the head of any bureau accepts an office of a higher grade than the law allows to that bureau, he shall thereby vacate his position as head of the bureau, and be liable to be sent to the field in the grade which he has accepted. If he takes the higher grade he cannot remain in a bureau that does not allow that grade.

Mr. POMEROY. What I said was that I did not think it necessary for us to make a special law upon this subject, as there was but one case that would be affected by it; and as the President himself wanted that officer where he was, I was for acquiescing in the will of the President.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that this provision is not retrospective; it would not operate back; it is prospective.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to it if that is so.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Senator from Wisconsin asked if this amendment had been submitted to a committee. I submitted it to the gentlemen who had charge of this measure in advance, and they were content with it, and there was no objection to it; and I hope the Senate will pass it. It simply provides for holding these officers to the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. There is one provision in the first section of the substitute to which I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is in these words:

That the measure of allowance for pay for an officer's servant is the pay of a private soldier as fixed by law at the time; that no non-commissioned officers shall be detailed or employed to act as a servant, nor shall any private soldier be so detailed or employed except with his own consent.

I want to strike out all of that section after the word "employed," because it is very easy for a commanding officer if he wants a servant out of the ranks to get his consent. If a general or a colonel wants one of the privates for a servant it is very easy to get his consent, and the private ordinarily would not withhold it. But we do not enlist and pay men and give them bounties to be servants for officers. They are privates and put into the ranks, and they ought to serve there, and they ought not to be subjected to this servile duty, even with their own consent. I move to strike out all of the section after the word "employed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order now to move to strike it out, because the amendment has just been adopted as a substitute. As soon as the bill is reported to the Senate, it will be in order to agree to the amendment with an amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that at the last session of Congress we made the law in regard to the employment of soldiers as servants very stringent, and from that time to this hour we have had a great deal of difficulty about it. It is said that down at the front it is with the greatest difficulty that servants can be obtained at all, and it is very important to make this modification and this change. The House of Representatives made a construction of the act of last year that would cost the Government $1,000,000. We have saved that amount by striking out the original resolution, and this provision simply applies to the employment of these persons in the future; and I hardly see how they can get along without it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it in order to offer to amend a single word in the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A verbal change can be made by common consent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The sixth section provides, in the seventeenth line, that the persons referred to in the former part of the section shall receive the "same pay and allowances as are allowed by law to other volunteers in the military service." It ought to be in the past tense, "as were allowed by law to other volunteers in the military service." The law has since been changed; but I presume it is not proposed to pay them a different sum from what other persons in the service at that time received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further resolved, That where any revised enrollment in any congressional or draft district has been obtained or made prior to any actual drawing of names from the enrollment districts, the quota of such district may be adjusted and apportioned to such revised enrollment, instead of being applied to, or based upon, the enrollment as it may have stood before revision.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know something about that amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It is to authorize the proper officer to apply the quota to the actual enrollment as revised and existing at the time when the draft is made. He finds some difficulty in the question of his power to do so. There is no question about the propriety of it; and I desire to add it to this resolution for the purpose of relieving him from all question on the subject of his power; that is all.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose we have got to abandon the enrollment act passed by the House of Representatives. The Senator from Pennsylvania intended to move this amendment on that bill, and I see no harm in it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to strike out the fifth section of the amendment as it is included in the first section, and I supposed it was marked out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, that section will be stricken out.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to move an amendment to this resolution that has passed the Senate once or twice, and which I believe met the approval of everybody. It ought to be adopted, and it would have saved a vast number of men to the Army, probably one hundred thousand, if it had been adopted a year ago:

And be it further resolved, That no person owing military service shall be exempted from liability to perform the same on account of furnishing a substitute for the Navy, unless the substitute is presented in person to the board of enrollment by which the principal is enrolled, and is accepted by said board of enrollment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggested an amendment in committee which will be in order if he desires to offer it.

Mr. HALE. No; I do not care about it. The chairman says the section is right as it is.

The amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the title of the joint resolution was amended by adding the words, "and for other purposes."

VERIFICATION OF INVOICES.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 697) further to provide for the verification of invoices, have directed me to report the same back without amendment and recommend its passage; and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to pass this and two or three other short bills that are very important to the interests of commerce, and will take no time. I do not think it will take more than ten or fifteen minutes to dispose of them; and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate for that space of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill just reported at the present time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have several House bills that have been reported for some time from the Committee on the Judiciary, which I have been struggling, I think for a week, to call the attention of the Senate to; and they are bills of a public character. I think there would be no objection to any of them. I think they ought to have precedence over a bill that is reported at this time and is not in order. My friend from Michigan had the floor the other day and I think passed six bills in about as many minutes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Only five.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senate will allow me a few minutes, I think I can get rid of, not six, but three or four bills that ought to be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any objection to this bill carries it over. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes all consular officers of the United States to require, before certifying any invoice or invoices under the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, satisfactory evidence, either by the oath of the person or persons presenting such invoices or otherwise, that such invoices are correct and true; but in the exercise of the discretion hereby given they are to be governed by such general or special regulations or instructions as may from time to time be established or given by the Secretary of State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALIFORNIA LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 238.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will let me go on with my bills.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This bill, if not passed now, cannot pass at this session. It is reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, in ten or fifteen minutes I can pass two or three bills from the Committee on Commerce, and I hope I shall be permitted to go on for that length of time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the bill that I propose to take up will occupy but very little time. It is simply to authorize a party to appear in the courts, waiving the statute of limitations, in California, respecting one of the California claims. It has been thoroughly examined by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a private bill; and I move that that and all prior orders be postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is not before the Senate yet. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chair please tell us what the title of the bill is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. "A bill to ascertain and settle certain private land claims in the State of California."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the Senator from Indiana ought not to insist upon taking up a private bill now when there are so many bills of public importance that have passed the House of Representatives that ought to be acted upon. That consideration governs me entirely. If his bill were a public bill, I would vote with him to take it up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will explain to the Senate the difficulty about this bill. It has been elaborately considered by the Senate at a former session. A very elaborate report was made by Senator Bayard, representing the Committee on the Judiciary at the time, and the bill passed the Senate upon discussion, I believe, by an almost unanimous vote. The point is just this: this particular claimant was kept out of the courts by the invention of another claim that at first was supposed to be right. It was afterward decided by the Supreme Court that that other claim was not a correct claim against the Government of the United States.

Mr. HARLAN. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] is opposed to this bill, and as it affects people in his State, perhaps it would be courteous not to call it up at this time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That being the case I hope the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his motion and let me take up two or three public bills.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands makes that suggestion, I of course have no interest in this matter, and I will not press the motion.

PRESTON STARRETT.

Mr. POWELL. I move to take up the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary for the relief of Preston Starrett. It will take but a single moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the following resolution was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole:

Resolved, That Preston Starrett be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the amount of his compensation as messenger of the Senate from the 23d of July, 1861, until the 17th of December, 1861, at which time his office is considered as vacated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a simple resolution of the Senate. Does it require three readings?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does, as it proposes to take money from the Treasury.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been suggested to me that the rule of the Senate requires that a resolution of this sort should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I make that suggestion. I do not know how the fact is.

Mr. POWELL. This resolution is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. It is to pay this little pittance to a poor old man who was appointed a messenger by a resolution of the Senate and was then turned out.

Mr. MORRILL. I make no motion but merely the suggestion.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSITIONS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 779.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is the title of it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. "A bill to regulate the taking of depositions in certain cases." It is reported unanimously from the Committee on the

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

NEW SERIES.....No. 82.

Judiciary, and it provides for the taking of depositions by a defendant in a criminal case in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With the Senator's permission I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. At an early period of the session I felt it to be my duty to introduce a bill regulating the right of giving testimony in one's own case, so that a man should not swear in a case where he was litigating with an administrator or a guardian, the other party being dead. I introduced that bill at a very early period of the session, but have been unable to ascertain what the Committee on the Judiciary intend to do with it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have it in my bundle now, and hope to be able to get attention to it if the Senate will allow me to pass these bills.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well; that is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on taking up the bill indicated by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If that is a bill which will lead to discussion it will hardly be worth while to take it up, as there is a special order for eight o'clock this evening, and it is very near that time now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not suppose there will be any discussion upon it. I am not going to offer any bill that will lead to discussion if I know it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 779) to regulate the taking of depositions in certain cases.

It provides that any defendant in a criminal case, in the District of Columbia, either after preliminary examination, indictment, or information, may examine witnesses on commission in such manner as is hereinafter prescribed. A defendant wishing to take the deposition of a witness residing more than one hundred miles from the city of Washington may select any of the following officers as a commission to take such deposition: the clerk or judge of any court of record, or any notary public, or any consul of the United States, either by the name of office of such officer, or by his individual name and official style; and the name of the court of which such constituted commissioner is clerk or judge, and the name of the State and county, or if without the United States, the name of the State and town, or city, in which such notary or consul resides, must be stated in the notice and in the commission.

Five days' notice must be given by a defendant, or his or her attorney, of the time when a commission will be sued out of the office of the clerk of the criminal court for the District of Columbia for taking the deposition of the witness, (giving the name of the witness,) which notice must be accompanied with a copy of the interrogatories to be asked such witness. At or before the time fixed in the notice the district attorney may file cross-interrogatories; but if he fail so to do, the clerk shall file the following:

First, Are all of your statements in the foregoing answers made from your personal knowledge? and if not, do your answers show what are made from your personal knowledge, and what from information, and the source of that information? If not, now show what is from information, and give its source.

Second, State everything you know concerning this case favorable to either the Government or the defendant.

The notice and copy of interrogatories may be served and returned in the same manner and by the same officers or persons as is provided by law for the service and return of a summons or subpoena in civil actions within the District of Columbia.

The commission is to issue in the name of the criminal court, and under its seal, and must be signed by the clerk, and need contain nothing but the authority conferred upon the commissioner and instructions to guide him, a statement of the cause in which the testimony is to be used, and a copy of all the interrogatories filed appended. The person before whom any of the depositions above contemplated are taken must cause the interrogatories appended to the commission to be written out, and the answers thereto to be inserted immediately underneath the respective questions; the whole, when completed, being read over by or to the witness, must be by him or her subscribed and sworn to in the usual manner. All exhibits produced before the person taking the deposition, or proved or referred to by any witness, or correct copies thereof, must be appended to the depositions, and returned with them, unless sufficient reasons be shown for not so doing.

The person taking the deposition is to attach his certificate thereto, stating that it was subscribed and sworn to by the defendant at the time and place therein mentioned; the whole, including the commission and interrogatories, must then be sealed up and returned to the clerk of the criminal court of the District of Columbia, by mail, unless the defendant and the district attorney agree upon some other mode; and, when received by the clerk, he is to open the package and place the deposition on file in his office. Unimportant deviations from any of the above directions are not to cause the depositions to be excluded where no substantial prejudice could be wrought to the Government by such deviation; and subject to these regulations, the court may establish further rules for taking depositions and all other acts connected therewith.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 707) to provide for the publication of the opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States. It authorizes the Attorney General to contract on behalf of the United States with a suitable book publisher for the printing and publishing of the unpublished opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, delivered since the 4th of March, 1857, on the following terms: the opinions are to be published in as many volumes as may be necessary, which are to be, as to the quality of paper, printing, and binding, of uniform style and appearance with the eighth volume of the opinions published by Robert Farnham in 1858, and, as nearly as possible, of uniform size with that volume, and numbered in regular order after that; the copyright to be taken out by, and be for the use of, the publisher, who is to deliver to the Attorney General, for the use of the United States, within one month after the publication, three hundred sets of volumes, at the price of three dollars per volume, payable after they are so delivered. The Attorney General is also authorized to employ a competent person to edit and prepare the opinions for publication, with proper head notes, and a full and complete index, and to supervise the publication. When the three hundred sets have been delivered for the use of the United States, the Attorney General is to cause them to be distributed as follows: for the President of the United States, two sets; for the Department of State, ten sets; for the Department of the Treasury and the heads of bureaus thereof, twenty-five sets; for the Department of War and the heads of bureaus thereof, twenty-five sets; for the Department of the Navy and the heads of bureaus thereof, fifteen sets; for the Department of the Interior and the heads of bureaus thereof, twenty sets; for the Department of the Post Office, ten sets; for the Attorney General's office, ten sets; for the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, one set each, and the library of the court, three sets; for the judges of the Court of Claims, the solicitor, assistant and deputy solicitors of the court, one set each; for the Library of Congress, fifty sets; for the use of both Houses of Congress; the residue of the three hundred sets to remain in charge of the Librarian of Congress, at the future disposal of Congress. The bill appropriates the sum of $7,000 to pay for the editing of the opinions and the price of the three hundred volumes, which money is to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the Attorney General.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I now move to take up the PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour specified by the Senate for the consideration of a special order, the Indian appropriation bill, has arrived.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask that that be laid aside informally until I can get through with these bills. It will not take more than fifteen minutes. I will not ask for more than a quarter of an hour; and as we are on these bills at this time, I trust the Senate will allow me to proceed with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The special order can be laid aside by unanimous consent only.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator can get through with his bills in fifteen minutes I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the special order will be laid aside for the present.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I now move to take up House bill No. 758.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 758) amendatory of the acts relative to the Attorney General's office, and to fix the compensation of his assistants and clerks. It provides that hereafter the salary of the Assistant Attorney General shall be raised to the sum of $3,500 per annum. In lieu of the provisions of law prescribing the Attorney General's powers as to the employment of clerks in his office, the Attorney General is to be authorized to employ in his office one chief clerk at a salary of $2,200 per annum, two fourth-class clerks (being one "pardon clerk" and one "opinion clerk") at annual salaries of $1,800 each, two third-class clerks at annual salaries of $1,600 each, and one first-class clerk at an annual salary of $1,200, besides such temporary clerks as may from time to time be needed; but the allowances to such temporary clerks is in no one year to exceed $1,000. For the purpose of paying for the current fiscal year the increased compensation provided for in the bill, the Attorney General is to be authorized, in addition to the amounts already appropriated for the payment of salaries in his office in the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, to draw on and use from the unexpended balance of moneys standing on the books of the Treasury on the 1st of July last, to the credit of his office for the pay of clerks and messenger, or from any other appropriation then standing to the credit of his office, and yet subject to his control and unexpended, a sum not exceeding in the whole $2,400, toward such additional compensation for the current fiscal year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the bill (H. R. No. 749) providing for the confinement of juvenile offenders against the laws of the United States in houses of refuge, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. According to its provisions, juvenile offenders against the laws of the United States, under the age of sixteen years, who may hereafter be convicted of crime by any court of the United States, the punishment whereof shall be imprisonment, shall be confined during the term of sentence in some house of refuge to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be transported and delivered to the warden, or keeper of such house of refuge by the marshal of the district where the conviction shall have occurred; or if such conviction be had in the District of Columbia, then, and in such case, the transportation and delivery shall be by the warden of the jail of said District, and the reasonable actual expense of the transportation, necessary subsistence, and hire, and transportation of assistants and the marshal or warden, only, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of the judiciary fund.

It is also provided that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to contract with the managers or persons having control of such houses of refuge for the imprisonment, subsistence, and proper employment of all such juvenile offenders, and to give the several courts of the United States and of the District of Columbia notice of the places so provided for their confinement, and such offenders shall be sentenced to confinement in the house of refuge nearest the place of conviction so designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAW OF EVIDENCE.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the bill (H. R. No. 657) to amend the third section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1865, and for other purposes," so far as the same relates to witnesses in the courts of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill as passed by the House of Representatives provided that the third section of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes, should be amended by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided further, That in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color, nor in civil actions because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried: Provided, That in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court, except in cases arising upon contracts made with the executor, administrator, or guardian of such estate.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to suggest that if the amendment be adopted it is doubtful whether it can be acted on by the House of Representatives and secure the sanction of the House so as to become a law, and as the measure is in legal effect precisely the same, I ask that the House bill be passed without the amendment. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FOSTER] who has examined this measure in the Judiciary Committee will say, I think, that the legal effect of the House bill and of the committee's amendment is precisely the same; and I ask that the House bill be allowed to pass, inasmuch as there is danger of its being lost if it be sent back.

Mr. FOSTER. The Senator from Indiana, I think, is right in regard to the legal effect of the House bill and of the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary. I did not agree with the report of the committee, and am opposed to that part of the amendment which limits the testimony of the witness. That portion of it I will read: "that in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction," &c. In my opinion the wiser and better way is to allow all persons interested to testify, although the opposite party is deceased, and the action is by or against his administrator or executor. The theory on which the testimony of parties interested is admitted is that they will tell the truth. It is true that that theory is sometimes contradicted by the fact, for certainly it sometimes happens that they do lie; and so do witnesses who are not parties and not interested. This proviso goes upon the ground that they always will at least avoid telling the truth, and will impose a false claim upon the estate of a deceased person if their testimony is admitted. As I say, the theory on which we allow interested witnesses to testify is that they will tell the truth, or if they do not that a cross-examination will expose their falsehood; and that is equally applicable to cases where the opposite party is dead, and where the action is by or against the executor or administrator of the deceased party, and to cases where both parties are living. I think it is better to allow the person in interest to testify, leaving him of course subject to cross-examination, which I think in all ordinary cases will test his truth or falsehood; and it will certainly be a wiser administration of justice than will be secured by closing the mouth of a party because the other party to a contract is dead.

I do not think there will be any danger—certainly there has been none in States where the experiment has been tried—in allowing all parties in interest to testify; and where witnesses, parties to a cause, are disposed to falsify if they are allowed to give testimony, their disposition to tell a falsehood and to impose upon the tribunal before which they appear will be more certain to be found out where they testify than where they do not. It is safer to allow a party that is a dishonest man to testify than it is to allow him to proceed with his cause and not testify; his purpose to cheat and defraud will be the more likely to be discovered.

When this change in the old law of evidence was first adopted in this country, I believe that Connecticut was the first State—certainly among the first—that allowed witnesses to testify in all cases without regard to interest, and the law was so general that even parties accused of crime could, if they pleased, come forward and testify; and they did so. The consequence was that every man who was guilty almost always convicted himself by his own testimony, and the law was altered so as to except criminal cases. It was not deemed fair that a criminal should have the opportunity of coming upon the stand to testify where his testimony was almost sure to convict him. It is true the law did not compel him to testify; but where he had an opportunity to testify and did not, it always created a prejudice against him in the mind of the jury. If there was even slight proof against him, and he did not come forward to purge himself, they would infer his guilt, and the consequence was that the law was repealed so far as it was applicable to criminal cases, and was confined to civil cases, leaving it, in them, entirely open to all parties interested to testify. I believe the result has been, in all States where the experiment has been tried in the most liberal manner, to do justice and promote the ends of justice. I now move that the amendment of the committee be amended by striking out all after the word "tried" in the fifth line of the first section to the end of the section, so as to leave that section to provide simply—

That in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color, nor in civil actions because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried.

Such a law will be short, simple, and intelligible.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the law now, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER. The proviso restrains it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I must interpose, unless this debate is arrested and the vote at once taken, and call up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The time that I asked for has expired, and I will not insist on going further if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to go on with the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do.

Mr. HOWARD. I venture to appeal to my friend from Wisconsin to allow me to call up a House bill relating to a ship-canal at Portage lake, which is of great interest to his State and mine.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I cannot yield.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I appeal to the Senator from Wisconsin to allow us to pass the bill which we have been considering. I shall not want more than two minutes to reply to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand from gentlemen around me that that bill will be opposed and will be further discussed. I must insist, therefore, on going on with the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. HALE.] The bill referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin is the regular business before the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF WAR COMMITTEE.

Mr. WADE. There is a resolution on the table to enable the committee on the conduct of the war to complete their investigations. I desire to have it taken up, so that the amendment of the other House may be concurred in. There will be no discussion on it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As that is a matter pending between the two Houses I give way to it.

Mr. WADE. The Senate resolution allowed the committee to sit thirty days after the adjournment of Congress. The House amendment is to strike out "thirty" and insert "ninety." I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign merchandise, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print five thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in relation to the condition of the Indian tribes, reported in favor of the motion, and it was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1866.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I offer an amendment to which there can be no objection. It is the same provision that was contained in the last two Indian appropriation bills, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ the money annuities which belong to the rebel Indians for the purpose of aiding in the sustenance of the loyal Indians. The amendment is a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend such part of the amounts herein appropriated to carry into effect any treaty stipulations with any tribe or tribes of Indians, all or any portion of whom shall be in a state of actual hostility to the Government of the United States, including the Creeks, the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, the Seminoles, the Wichitas, and other affiliated tribes, as well as the Cherokees, as may be found necessary to support such individual members of said tribes as have been driven from their homes, or reduced to want, on account of their friendship to the United States, and enable them to subsist until they can support themselves in their own country: Provided, That an account shall be kept of the sums so paid for the benefit of the said members of said tribes, which account shall be rendered to Congress at the commencement of the next session thereof; and all purchases of articles for the purposes above set forth shall be made of the lowest responsible bidder, after sufficient public notice by advertisement in appropriate newspapers: Provided also, That the said Secretary shall not be required to accept any bid which is in his judgment unreasonable in its character: Provided further, That no part of said annuities shall be expended for Indians outside of the Indian Territory South of Kansas, except in providing for such Indians or families as are sick or unable to remove to that Territory, and such as may be driven out of that Territory by armed rebels, after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I also offer the following amendment, which is precisely in the words of a bill passed by the Senate some days ago:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in lieu of the bonds for the sum of $250,000 appropriated for the use of the Choctaw Indians by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1863," approved March 2, 1861, to pay to the Secretary of the Interior $250,000 for the relief and support of individual members of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Wichita, and other affiliated tribes of Indians who have been driven from their homes and reduced to want on account of their friendship to the Government, as contemplated by the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1863," approved July 5, 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now offer two additional sections:

And be it further enacted, That for subsistence, clothing, blankets, shoes, and for transportation of clothing, &c., for fifteen thousand seven hundred destitute refugee Indians in the Indian Territory and Kansas, for the six months ending June 30, 1865, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, $500,000.

And be it further enacted, That for subsistence, clothing, blankets, shoes, and for transportation of supplies, clothing, &c., for destitute refugee Indians in the Indian Territory and Kansas, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, $250,000.

This amendment is so important that I desire very briefly to call the attention of the Senate to the facts. The estimates of the Department are for the quarter ending March 31, 1865, $244,015; for the quarter ending June 30, 1865, $371,000; and for the next fiscal year, $830,000, if the same object of expenditure shall occur.

Mr. POMEROY. If there is no objection, let the amendment be adopted.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Some gentlemen inquired of me the nature of the amendment, and I deemed it my duty to the Senate to call their attention to it, for there may be some gentlemen who are doubtful of its propriety.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to this appropriation in a very few words, and then I shall ask for a vote by yeas and nays. The appropriation proposed amounts to $750,000 for the purpose of clothing, feeding, and paying Indians on our border who are just as well able to take care of themselves as any of the families in any of the States on our border. There are in the State of Missouri to-day hundreds and thousands of white persons who are more in need of appropriations of this kind than these Indians; and I think, at a time when we are straining every nerve, when we are stripping ourselves to the girth to raise money, when our armies are six months behindhand in pay, it is not proper that we should here donate nearly a million dollars, three fourths of which I believe will go in the shape of fraudulent contracts. I trust that the Senate will not assent to this amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I must call the attention of the Senate dispassionately but briefly to some of the facts. When this war began, the Indian Territory was a flourishing Territory. The Cherokees, about twenty-one thousand in number, occupied the northern portion of the Territory; the Creeks immediately adjoined them. When the rebellion opened the Indians were divided. The Indians below the Canadian joined the rebels. The Choctaws and Chickasaws almost unanimously united their forces with rebels. Joining with Magruder and the rebels from Texas, they entered the Creek territory, and a portion of the Creeks joined with the rebels. Pressing through the Creek territory they entered into the territory of the Cherokees, and a portion of the Cherokees also united their fortunes with the rebels, and Stand-Watie, one of the Cherokee chiefs, has been a rebel and is to this day in alliance with the rebels and fighting against the Government of the United States. But the large majority of the Cherokees, and a majority of the Creeks, and a large portion of the Seminoles, remained true and loyal to the Government of the United States; and after the war had progressed, with a unanimity which I believe has existed nowhere else among the loyal Indians the male Indians, boys and men, have been enlisted into the armies of the United States; and from the withdrawal of our troops in the Indian country, the rebels and their Indian allies have been let in upon the Creeks and the Cherokees; and they drove out twenty thousand old men, women, and children, into the State of Kansas. There they were refugees in that State, and we were compelled, as they were upon our hands, to provide for them. Since they have been driven out of their own country the rebel armies have been fed upon the flocks and the herds that belong to these Indians in the Indian Territory. Our own forces on going back into that Territory have supplied themselves also, until now that country is to a very great extent stripped of its resources and laid waste.

Mr. President, better than any language I can use is the description which is given by the agent of the Cherokees, Mr. Justin Harlan, a gentleman who is well known in the State of Illinois, and upon whose statement every man who knows him will certainly rely. Mr. Harlan says:

"As near as I have been able to ascertain from all the sources at my command, I judge there are not far from twenty-one thousand Cherokees, properly called the nation. Of these, about eight thousand, in the year 1862, joined the rebels, and almost all the men have since entered the rebel army, and are now beyond the Arkansas river. Most of their women and children have also left the Cherokee territory, most likely never to be allowed to return to or form part of the Cherokee nation. The balance of the nation are loyal; almost all the men and large boys are in the Union Army, and doing good service. Many have been killed in battle, and died of wounds, sickness, and exposure.

"The women and children have been still more exposed to sickness and death than the men, and great numbers have died. Robbed by the rebel army and driven from their houses, some took refuge in the mountains, and others fled out of the Territory in inclement weather, and by exposure contracted disease of which they died; and many others, no doubt, are yet alive who will die from the same cause.

"It is believed that there are many now in the rebel army who were loyal but were forced into the rebel service. I have, however, very serious doubts whether that is true to any considerable extent; but of this I am satisfied, that there are more disloyal Cherokees in the nation, who adhere to the rebels, than there are of those who are loyal. From all sources of information in my reach, I think there are left nine thousand loyal Cherokees, and that they are determined never to forgive the disloyal, or permit them to live in or form a portion of the Cherokee nation. They have a clear majority and have possession. If they remain firm, and I believe they will, I do not doubt that that portion of the Cherokees now absent will never return, or be any part of the Cherokee nation in future.

"Their condition is the most pitiable imaginable. They were, only a few years ago, the most powerful, wealthy, and intelligent Indians in the United States, and were proud of their power, wealth, and intelligence. They are now reduced to a third-rate power among Indians, and their wealth all gone. They fully understand their position, and are humbled. At the breaking out of the present rebellion the Cherokees assumed a neutrality, but the rebel army forced them to take sides, and they joined the rebellion; but when the Union army drove the rebels out, the loyal portion returned to their allegiance and still remain loyal.

"During the summer of 1862 our Army drove the rebels out, and enlisted almost all the able-bodied Cherokees into the Union Army, and immediately left the country, and took the Indian soldiers with them, and left the women more exposed than they were before."

This is a fact which should not be forgotten.

"The rebels, maddened at their conduct, followed up the retreat of our Army, and robbed the women and children of all they wanted, and destroyed without hindrance large amounts of property valuable to the families. The Union Army again, in the last fall and winter, advanced and fought several successful battles and drove the enemy across the Arkansas river, and again retreated into Missouri and Arkansas, and again left the rebels to their revenge on the women and children, of which they took advantage, and again robbed and plundered.

"During the last winter (1862-63) the military authorities became much interested in the welfare of the Indians and in their early removal to their homes, and, by public proclamation, assured them that they had protected and would protect them there. The Indians believed it, if I did not. They fretted at the delay in removing them home, complained, and the military encouraged them to press the matter upon me. I promised the military as soon as they drove out the rebels I would take them home, and would follow them in a week at the furthest. The military seemed absurd, and the Indians also. Tardy as I was charged with being, I beat the army to Tahlequah by about two hours. Induced by military promises, the Indians scattered themselves over the entire Territory. Colonel Stand-Watie (the rebel Indian chief) then entered the Territory in three different raids and drove the women into Fort Gibson, took everything he could ride or drive or carry off, and destroyed their crops, and prevented the tending of everything planted. Seeds of all kinds and farming tools were furnished by the Government, and all lost, nothing saved. What wheat was sown was not saved; there was nobody to save it and the military, and they were holding Fort Gibson. Three thousand five hundred men, a strong fort, and six cannon were all required to hold Fort Gibson and the Territory as far as the cannon would reach.

"Watie, with seven hundred ragamuffins, was permitted to rob at will over the whole Territory. If anything was left by Watie, it has not yet been found. Destitution, total and entire, followed his last raid."

This is the description given by Mr. Justin Harlan as to what occurred up to that period in the history of this war in relation to that people. They were then driven out into Kansas. Subsequently they were removed when it was believed they could be safely removed to their own Territory; but the failure of the Red river expedition—you will remember that the Indian Territory reaches down to the Red river—reopened that country again to the ravages of the rebels. The truth is that in the Indian Territory beyond the Arkansas river we have never yet taken and held military possession. The rebel Indians and their allies hold the country below the Canadian.

We were under treaty stipulations with the Cherokees and Creeks by which we bound ourselves to defend them against invasion and against all depredations to be committed upon them. We took their warriors into our Army, and as soon as we enlisted them we withdrew the very Army into which we had enlisted them and left the women and children to be the prey of merciless savages and rebels; and they were driven out under circumstances beyond all power of language to describe, and they came in the midst of winter, half-clothed, with bleeding feet and frozen limbs and starving, into the State of Kansas, where they remained for a considerable time upon some of the Indian reservations in that State.

Mr. BROWN. Permit me to ask the Senator a question. Were not these very Indians driven out by those Indians whom he claims we are bound to protect? Were they not driven out by members of their own tribe?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Some. I agree that a portion of the Cherokees are in hostility against the United States.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Our treaty stipulations required us to protect them against their own people.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Our treaty stipulations bound us to protect these people, to protect them in the enjoyment of peace, to protect them against invasion, and we have by a law of Congress directed them to be removed from Kansas into their own Territory. Driven out as a people they were becoming demoralized. They were driven out in a herd together, families broken up, all their houses and arrangements broken up. They were becoming demoralized, and it was felt that there was a necessity upon us, if it were possible, to send them back to their own homes. We have sent them there, but, as I have said, the failure of the Red river expedition has not given that kind of peace to the Indian Territory which has allowed them to cultivate the soil, to raise what is necessary for their own sustenance. They are upon our hands, and the simple question is whether they shall starve or whether they shall be supplied. When you look into the estimates which are made for supplying these people you find that they are upon this basis:

For the subsistence of fifteen thousand seven hundred destitute refugee Indians in the Indian Territory and Kansas from the 1st day of January to March 31, 1865, both inclusive, ninety days, at the rate of fifteen cents per day each, fourteen thousand one hundred souls in the Indian Territory and one thousand six hundred in Kansas at ten cents a day.

Mr. Coffin, the superintendent, who makes this estimate, puts their daily support at the rate of fifteen cents a day in the Indian Territory and ten cents a day in Kansas. The committee, however, in the report which they make and in the amendment which they have moved, do not come up to the estimates which were made by Mr. Coffin and by the Interior Department. They estimated for the quarter ending March 31, 1865, $244,000, and for that ending June 30, 1865, $371,000, amounting in all to over $600,000 for the present fiscal year; whereas the committee have recommended but $500,000 for that period. For the year to come the superintendent estimates $830,000, and the Department recommends an appropriation of $600,000; but at the same time the Secretary of the Interior expresses the hope that some good turn of fortune may intervene and we may be saved from the necessity of the expenditure of that money or a considerable portion of it. The committee recommend an appropriation for the next year of only $250,000. Under the action of Congress directing the removal of these Indians, under the action of the Secretary of the Interior, under the state of the case as it exists, I think that these appropriations are necessary to be made.

The honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FOSTER] the other day made a remark in relation to these Indians which, if he were present, I should be glad to notice for a single moment; but he is absent, and I shall not take up the time of the Senate any further than to say that one of the reasons why the committee reported the bill for the organization of a civil government over the Indian Territory grows out of the facts which I have stated in the course of my remarks on this occasion. The fact is that anarchy reigns throughout that Territory; the Indians, who were once rich and powerful and were a nation, and worthy to be regarded as an independent nation, have been peeled and stripped and impoverished and broken down; and we think that some kind of governmental organization which will give moral force, and at the same time secure the Territory for the Indians and only for the Indians, may put them upon their feet once more and establish them again in their nationality. But, Mr. President, I do not wish to go into that subject.

Mr. HOWARD. I should be glad to ask a single question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. If I understand rightly, there are about fifteen thousand Indians in Kansas now who are in some sort provided for by the United States.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Not in Kansas. There are fourteen thousand one hundred souls in the Indian Territory and sixteen hundred souls in Kansas still of these Indians.

Mr. HOWARD. It is not at all material to my purpose where they are. What I rise to inquire about is whether these fifteen thousand Indians are now supported chiefly or wholly by the Government of the United States; whether they are dependent on our contributions, our charity, our benevolence, or whether they provide for themselves in some degree? I wish to ascertain how they have been supported during the last two or three years, and how long this state of things is to exist. I inquire merely for information.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If we had peace, and the Indian Territory was at peace, I believe they could begin this season and raise their own support after this season; but they are in such a condition, the very Territory where they are is in such a condition, that it is impossible for them in peace to cultivate the soil at present.

Mr. HOWARD. Then this follows, I suppose, that we are now actually supporting these fifteen thousand Indians, we are paying for their bread and meat, or for their subsistence. My question is, how long it is probable we shall be compelled to do this. It is a very heavy charge on the Treasury.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My hope is that we shall not be compelled to do it after this year; but if the war continues we shall have to do something toward their subsistence or allow them to starve.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have heard so much of a painful character in regard to the manner in which these Indians have been cared for in Kansas—

Mr. POMEROY. There are none of them in Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have heard so much in regard to their treatment there, and since they have been sent back to their own country, that the subject is a painful one to me. I do not know but that common charity compels us to do something for these Indians; but I believe that if we could protect them from our own race, if we could leave them alone without a dollar, with no white man, woman, or child within fifty miles of them, they could take better care of themselves than we could of them with all our appropriations for them. Their troubles have grown out of their contact with the white men. They were driven out of their own Territory into Kansas first by the rebel whites and by the rebel Indians. They were there impoverished, and if the statements I have heard often made by persons from that State are to be relied upon, they were in many cases cheated and badly treated.

Mr. POMEROY. They were badly treated in Ohio before they ever came into our State.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were badly treated there, no doubt; the Wyandotte Indians were driven from their home; I remember well their emigration from Ohio to Kansas, when I was quite young. I believe that tribe is now nearly extinct. The Chickasaws and the tribes from the Arkansas are, I believe, gradually fading away; perhaps we ought to appropriate some money to take care of them. It is always a painful subject to me whenever I hear anything about the Indians, because I believe their worst enemies are those of our own race who are brought in contact with them.

I do not myself see any proper basis for this very large appropriation. The statement before me, which is furnished to me by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, among the other items to make up the sum of $830,000 for the next fiscal year, under the head of "contingencies," has this: "one thousand bushels of seed-corn, at twelve dollars per bushel." When I was in Iowa not many years ago seed-corn was worth about fifteen cents a bushel, and now it is probably worth fifty to sixty cents a bushel. It is here estimated at twelve dollars a bushel west of Arkansas.

Mr. HARLAN. What does the Senator quote from?

Mr. SHERMAN. From a document giving the detailed estimates which make up this sum.

Mr. HARLAN. I can give the Senator the elements in the calculation by which he can arrive at the value of corn in the country where the Indians are.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear the Senator on that point. Probably he is better informed than I am.

Mr. HARLAN. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, under a resolution of the Senate passed at the last session, I visited Kansas near the present location of these Indians, preceding the commencement of this session. I learned there that persons were hired to haul goods and corn to these Indians at the rate of five dollars a day, the party defraying his own expenses for a wagon and two horses; that a team would haul on an average one thousand six hundred pounds; that they would on the average be about thirty days in making the round trip. Corn at that time was worth in Kansas about a dollar a bushel; it is, I understand, now worth about a dollar and a half. Estimating, then, the cost of the hauling and the cost of the corn, connected with the number of pounds that a team will draw down through that country, it will make the current cost about twelve and a half cents a pound at the present price of corn, a bushel of corn weighing about fifty-six pounds.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know but that we had better bring these fifteen thousand Indians to the city of New York, and send them to the Astor House or some other comfortable place and take care of them. The same rule, applied to the support of all the people of the United States would ruin us as a nation in six months. These fifteen thousand seven hundred destitute Indians are to cost us $1,000,000, and this in addition to other appropriations. The ordinary appropriations to carry into effect the Indian treaties are contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. This is a special appropriation. They are exhausting all their Indian fund. One amendment before offered by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin appropriates $250,000, the principal of bonds upon which they were to draw interest. Instead of continuing to draw the interest, the principal is now to be paid to them.

I am not prepared to say that there ought not to be some appropriation made for the care and maintenance of these Indians, but it seems to me that the principle of spending $1,000,000 for the care of fifteen thousand seven hundred Indians, at a time when we are involved in war, is a very erroneous one. If the able-bodied Indians of this tribe are employed in the Army, as it is said they are, they are paid precisely like white soldiers; they draw their clothing, and they draw their pay, and they can support their families. It seems to me there is no just basis for so large an appropriation. I am not, however, prepared with facts, nor have I access to facts, on which I can oppose it.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from Ohio will give way, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the enacting clause of its first section, and inserting the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish the so-called refugee Indians in the Indian Territory such temporary relief as may be absolutely necessary during the residue of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, to be furnished out of any funds that may be at his disposal for the support of refugees.

This amendment of mine proposes to place the care of these Indians, so far as it may be necessary, under the Secretary of War, who is far more competent to judge and direct in this matter, I think, than the Indian department itself. If most of these Indians, as is stated here, are enlisted in the Army of the United States, they are drawing pay, and their families can be better provided for and better supplied by the Secretary of War in cognizance of all the facts that come within the range of his observation and that of the military authorities, than they possibly can through the Indian Office. I trust, therefore, as this is proposed to be merely a temporary matter, that these refugees will be placed upon the same footing and upon no other footing than the white refugees of the border States, and that the Secretary of War may have the opportunity which this amendment will give him of extending to them the same relief which is occasionally extended to white refugees by the military authorities, and no other.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish the Senate fully to understand the question. These Indians are to be cared for; I do not suppose that any person would propose to allow them to starve to death, and unless the Indian department, which by law has charge of the Indians, is intrusted with their care and with furnishing the means by which to provide for them, the War Department must as a matter of course do the same thing; but I venture this prediction, that every expenditure made by the War Department in the care of Indians will cost the Government three times as much as a proper administration of the funds in the hands of the Indian Bureau. Of all the expensive and extravagant modes of providing for or dealing with an Indian people the attempt to do so through the commissary department and the quartermaster's department of the Army is the most so. In relation to this matter of these very refugees, last year the Indian department asked for the appropriation of four hundred or four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. That was denied; some two hundred thousand dollars was given, and it has involved the department and the Government in the deficiency necessary to provide for their support, because sufficient appropriations were not made. In relation to the Indians of New Mexico, the Indian department asked last year for an appropriation large enough to produce irrigating canals, and so arrange matters that the Navajos could provide for themselves. Only a small appropriation was given. The War Department, however, had those Indians upon their hands, and have contracted, through the commissary department for the supplies to feed them, at the rate of nearly twenty-two cents per pound, amounting to more than a million dollars, and nobody raises any question of it. Run this affair through the commissary department and the quartermaster's department, where you make your appropriations not specific for a given purpose, but where you make them in a general form of fifty million or one hundred million dollars without any specific estimates, not for any specific purpose, and allow them to draw upon the general fund that is appropriated and put at the disposal of the department; do that in this case and you will not make it as economical an affair so far as the Government is concerned.

I tell you, Mr. President, that if the commissary department and the quartermaster's department of the Army were compelled, as the Indian department is, to make specific estimates for each specific appropriation, the people of this country would ascertain where the money goes. The truth is that there is no control whatever practically over the expenditure of money through these great departments, the commissary and the quartermaster's department. You come in here and pass through their bills appropriating two, three, four hundred millions at a time without any question; but if a proposition is made to provide for fifteen or sixteen thousand starving men, women, and children who are on our hands, on the hands of the department where you have placed them, when you have not only authorized but directed that department to look after them, and an appropriation of $1,000,000 is asked for, we always meet with just this opposition.

So far as I am concerned personally I have no greater interest in it than any other Senator here. I do not believe it will be a measure of economy to support these Indians by rations from the War Department. The estimates for these Indians in the Indian Territory are at the rate of fifteen cents a day. Will fifteen cents a day answer if the commissary department takes care of them? If the Senate are so disposed, they can try it; turn the Indians over to the War Department, if you choose; take them away from the Indian department; direct the Indian department to bring home their superintendents and their agents; change the whole system, if you will, but I do not think it would be wise.

Mr. HARLAN. Some three years ago, when Congress was asked to divert annuities which were due to the hostile Indians under former treaties to the use of these refugees, amounting to some two hundred and fifty or two hundred and sixty thousand dollars per annum, it was believed that that amount would be sufficient in addition to the regular annuities paid to these tribes themselves and what subsistence they might be able to derive from their own herds, for some of them were known to be owners of herds of cattle. Since then it has been found necessary, as it seems from the report of the superintendent of Indian affairs in that country, to expend a vastly larger sum of money. I think we have expended at least three quarters of a million of dollars during the last year, and the estimates now before the Senate for the residue of the present fiscal year amount to some six hundred thousand dollars, I think, and for the coming fiscal year about eight hundred thousand dollars. I must be frank and say that I do not believe that any such sum of money ever was or is now necessary; I cannot figure up any such result from any elements that I have been able to collect; and I therefore am not averse to turning this matter over to the War Department. It will not be necessary for the superintendent of Indian affairs for that district and the agents to come home. They will still have control of the regular annuities and the $200,000 which has been diverted from year to year from the hostile portion of these tribes, and they might, as I believe, derive a very large proportion of the support of these Indians from their own cattle.

I must say, Mr. President, that I believe nearly the whole of the amount necessary for the subsistence of these Indians might be derived from their own herds. I was told when I was in Kansas last autumn that there probably had been during the preceding two years driven from the Indian country not less than sixty thousand head of beef cattle. One of the Senators from Kansas in private conversation—I am almost sure he will not object to my naming it—says that the estimate is entirely too low, that in his opinion the number of cattle driven out will not fall short of one hundred thousand head.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And I will inquire of my friend if those cattle did not really belong to these Indians. Have not those cattle gone to the use of the Army of the United States?

Mr. HARLAN. I think some of them have. Perhaps I ought not to utter a mere belief without proof, but still I do believe that a large number of these cattle have been taken from the Indians by contractors and sold to the quartermasters, and a large number of them have been bought at nominal sums, and stolen and driven out through Kansas, and sold on private account. I have no doubt of this. I am therefore not averse to putting this whole matter for the time being, so far as the application of extra means is concerned, into the hands of the Secretary of War. As I understand, it is merely a temporary matter for the residue of the present fiscal year. I would suggest to my friend, the Senator from Missouri, that I think an additional sum probably would be necessary for clothing, but I leave that to the wisdom of the Senate.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Legislature of our State has just got through investigating this question of cattle stealing from the Indian Territory, and I desire to say to the Senator from Iowa that the people of Kansas denounce that practice as vindictively as he can. Our Legislature unanimously passed a resolution denouncing it as demoralizing to our own people. They estimate the number of head of cattle taken from the Indians, not by Kansas men, but by the employes of the General Government, at one hundred thousand within the last two years.

I desire, and I hope I have the ear of the Senator from Missouri, to state a fact that perhaps he is not aware of. Recently the Committee on Indian Affairs, to enable the heads of these Indian families to become self-sustaining, has requested the War Department to muster out of service the Indian regiments, and they are probably by this time ordered to be mustered out. The Senate should understand that these fifteen thousand Indians are now cooped up around Fort Gibson covered by the guns of that fort, and unless some provision is made they must starve, and starve to death; we may look it in the face, they will starve to death. The Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I form a part, have recommended to the Senate $500,000 for the first six months and $250,000 for the fiscal year thereafter, hoping that the Senate will pass the territorial bill now pending before this body, and through that territorial government make these Indians self-sustaining.

One other suggestion and I have done. The Indian Committee in moving this amendment have estimated the ration at about twelve cents on the average—twelve cents per head each day for the Indians. If you turn them over to the War Department they will issue to each Indian a ration, and that ration will cost the Government from thirty to fifty cents for each Indian. As a matter of economy I think it would be much better to allow them to remain in the custody of the Indian Department. I think you will save a large sum of money by permitting them to remain in the Indian Department.

Mr. POMEROY. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as a substitute for the pending amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to mean that the War Department shall take into custody and meet the expense of these Indians for the residue of this fiscal year. I hope that is not urged on the score of economy. If that amendment is to be urged, let it be on some other ground, for I think there is hardly a Senator who has not seen the wasteful and profligate manner that the War Department undertakes to do anything, much less to feed and take care of Indian women and children. I submit to the Senator from Missouri that it seems to me it can hardly be urged in good faith that the women and children of these tribes should be thrown on the War Department. I would ask, what has the War Department done that it is to be charged with such an incumbrance as this in a time of war? The contracts for the quartermaster's department in my State have been as high as $2.03 a bushel for corn this year, and yet, as the Senator from Iowa says, it was purchased by private parties out there for $1.50. Then think of assigning officers of the Army and the volunteers to this service, distributing food to the Indians. The proposition either means that these Indians are not to be taken care of, that they are to be left without care, or else that they are to have the most profligate and expensive system that was ever inaugurated. I venture to say that if the care of these Indians is undertaken by the War Department, $3,000,000 in its hands will not go as far as the $750,000 proposed by the committee to be expended by the Indian department. The Indian department has machinery organized for this purpose. The War department must inaugurate an organization at great expense.

So far as I am concerned, the only feeling or interest I have in this matter is on the score of economy and philanthropy, for it is really a question of philanthropy to some extent. These poor people are dependent, helpless wards. They are on the hands of the Government. The only question is whether you will turn them over to the tender mercies of the War Department or allow them to be taken care of in the manner they have been taken care of for the last two years. I think every Senator who reflects candidly on the subject will never vote for this amendment of the Senator from Missouri on the score of economy. I do not think the War Department can manage a philanthropic enterprise any better than a Department inaugurated partly for the purpose. For one, I cannot vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and I hardly think it could have been offered in good faith either to the Indians or to the economy of the Government.

Mr. BROWN. I can assure the Senator from Kansas that it was offered in good faith, and it was offered believing that it would result in a great economy to the Government. I believe the fact to be that very little relief will be needed for these Indian tribes from this time forth until Congress shall assemble again. I believe that the cases of destitution and starvation of which Senators speak will be exceptional, will be cases that occur in consequence of the immediate presence of hostilities, and that those cases can be better judged of by the War Department through its officers operating on the spot than they can be here at a long distance with contracts being made in advance for supplying these Indians from day to day, to the tune of fifteen thousand, with rations and clothing. I do not believe that it will be necessary to issue rations to these Indians any more than I believe it will be necessary to issue rations to the wives and children of our soldiers engaged in our armies to-day. At all events the War Department, which is most in need of money of all the other branches of the Government, which is most desirous of using it for warlike purposes, will see that they are protected from invasion, and that their cattle and other perquisites are appropriated to the proper use, which it is said is not now done under the protection of the Indian department; and the result of it will be that instead of having $750,000 expended, and probably $100,000 of it reaching the Indians in the shape of relief, you will probably not expend over $50,000, perhaps not over $10,000, and that will be administered exactly where it may be necessary. It is for this reason that I have offered the amendment, believing that if it is a case of destitution which may occur the War Department is better capable of judging of it, and better capable of administering relief on the spot than this system, which proposes to put them on the bounty of the nation and keep them there all the year round with a premium on doing nothing.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question before he takes his seat. How are these fifteen thousand Indians to become self-sustaining if it is true that they are cooped up around Fort Gibson, within the range of the guns of that fort? And I desire him to answer me another question. A few months ago this War Department made an order to evacuate Fort Smith and Fort Gibson, which would have turned over these helpless women and children to massacre. That order, he is aware, was suspended by the prayers of the Indian Bureau. Now, I ask him as a philanthropist, as a man of feeling and heart, how he can, with that knowledge before him, hand these helpless women and children over to that Department?

Mr. BROWN. I will say, in answer, that if the War Department see fit to evacuate any portion of the country I presume it will be done for sound and substantial military reasons; and until it does that thing, and presents those reasons, I am not here to prejudge it. But I will say that if it should do such a thing the wives and children of my constituents will be entitled to just as much relief as these Indian tribes whom it is now proposed to pension upon the Government.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Government of the United States had military officers at Fort Gibson. This order was made here without a knowledge that these starving Indians were dependent upon those officers and soldiers for protection; and it was not until the attention of the proper officials here was called to it that they were aware of the fact. I have as much confidence in the head of the War Department as in any officer of this Government; but I am confident that it requires a Department framed to deal with Indians to manage their affairs correctly; and if the Indian department is not as we desire we shall soon have an opportunity for a new deal, and we can have officers who will treat the Indians in a proper, honest, and philanthropic manner. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Nye, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomroy, Powell, Ramsey, Wilkinson, and Willey—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wright—20.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I inquire whether the form of the amendment as it now stands is such that the War Department can supply these Indians with clothing; if not, I want to have it so amended.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to inserting the word "clothing," but the phrase "temporary relief" embraces it, all to be furnished by the War Department when necessary.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Let the Secretary read the language of the amendment as it stands.

The Secretary read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish the so-called refugee Indians in the Indian Territory such temporary relief as may be absolutely necessary during the residue of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1865, to be furnished out of any funds that may be at his disposal for the support of refugees.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he insert the words "provisions and clothing."

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order to make that amendment, the Senate having just agreed to the amendment in its present form.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It may be done by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those words may be inserted by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. POMEROY. I would inquire whether the Secretary of War has any fund out of which he can pay anything for this purpose. The amendment says that the payment is to be made out of any funds the Secretary of War may have at his disposal for the support of refugees. I think there is no fund in his hands for that purpose, and therefore the amendment means nothing.

Mr. BROWN. He does it every day for white refugees.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether there is any fund in the hands of the Secretary of War to supply the wants of refugees, Indians or others.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that any appropriation is made for that purpose, but if he wants to do a thing of that kind he will find the money.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The answer of the honorable Senator is just what I anticipated, that the War Department, by the manner in which money is supplied to it, has the power to get hold of money for any kind of purpose. There is nothing specified particularly about it. There is so much appropriated for the grand quartermaster's department, four or five hundred million dollars, and for the commissary department three or four hundred millions, and so on. It is not stated that he shall have a certain sum of money for a certain purpose.

So far as this question is concerned, if it is the determination of the Senate to take these refugee Indians entirely from the Indian department and put them upon the War Department, if the Secretary of War has the funds by which he can take care of them, it will be a great relief to the Indian department, I have no doubt. It will be a great relief to me at the head of the Committee on Indian Affairs, for I shall not have to struggle any more with the Senate for appropriations for the benefit of these Indians, but they will come in under those general heads that cover four or five hundred millions in a single bill which is passed without any discussion some morning in the morning hour. But, Mr. President, I wish to make certain of the fact that there is a fund in the hands of the Secretary of War for refugees. The chairman of the Military Committee says that if that Secretary is directed to provide for these Indians he has a fund out of which he can do it. I wish to know whether that is the fact.

Mr. WILSON. I think I answered the Senator's question fairly. He asked me a question. I answered it as I understood it, that no appropriations had been made for this object, but if we directed the Secretary of War to support certain persons I supposed that out of the commissary and quartermaster's department appropriations enough could be used for that purpose. I suppose that to be the case.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the Secretary to read the last clause of the amendment.

The Secretary read the following words: "to be furnished out of any funds that may be at his disposal for the support of refugees."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to strike out the words "for the support of refugees."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not now in order.

Mr. POMEROY. It will be in order when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate have just agreed to the amendment in this form, and it is not in order now to strike out words which the Senate have agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think there can be no objection to the modification I have proposed.

Mr. HARLAN. I move a reconsideration of the vote on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri in order that we may hear the Senator from Wisconsin. I was not aware that the word "Indian" did precede the word "refugees;" I inquire of the Secretary if that is so.

Mr. WILSON. I think we had better say "out of any money appropriated for the quartermaster's or commissary's department."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves to reconsider the vote just taken agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. The modification suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts might be made by common consent, I think, and save time. I think no one will object to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the proposed amendment?

Mr. HARLAN. To insert "out of any funds appropriated for the commissary or quartermaster's department."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection these words will be inserted, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would like to add at the end of the amendment a proviso that the officer in command or having charge of the Indians shall report to Congress the expenditures made under this amendment specifically.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will reduce the amendment to writing.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will put it in this form:

Provided, That a detailed report shall be made to Congress at its next session of all expenditures made for their relief.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That any person who may drive or remove, except as hereinafter provided, any cattle, horses, or other stock from the Indian Territory for purposes of trade or commerce, shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. That the agent of each tribe of Indians lawfully residing in the said Indian Territory be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, for the benefit of said Indians, any cattle, horses, or other live stock belonging to said Indians, and not required for their use and subsistence, under such regulations as shall be established by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That nothing in this and the preceding section shall interfere with the execution of any order lawfully issued by the Secretary of War connected with the movement or subsistence of the troops of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILKINSON. I offer the following amendment to come in after the amendments that are printed at the end of the printed bill:

For payment of awards made by the Secretary of the Interior, to be paid as damages growing out of the loss and destruction of improvements made upon the land known as the Winnebago reservation, in Blue Earth county, Minnesota, by the bona fide actual settlers thereon, under the preemption laws of the United States, before the same was selected and set apart as an Indian reservation, and which award was made pursuant to an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of preceptors on the home reservation of the Winnebagoes, in the Blue Earth region, in the State of Minnesota," approved July 14, 1862, and to be paid to the several parties named in the said award, $7,302 06.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator explain the amendment?

Mr. WILKINSON. I will. Prior to the establishment of this reservation in Minnesota the preemption laws were applicable to this region of country, and there were some settlers on the land. The Government took possession of the land, and the settlers were driven off; and in 1862 a law was passed for their relief, authorizing an investigation in a certain land office in Minnesota, with the direction that an inquiry should be had as to the amount of damages, and also as to whether their preemption right had been established, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make an award of the damages. That award has been made by him in pursuance of the act of Congress of July 14, 1862.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move to amend the bill by striking out "twenty-five" in line twelve hundred and twelve on page 50, and inserting "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon and Washington Territory not parties to any treaty, and for pay of necessary employes, $50,000.

In relation to this proposed amendment, I will state that in Oregon and in Washington Territory, in the portions of country that are settled, the Indians have been gathered up and placed on reservations. With some tribes in 1855 treaties were made, but not with all. A large portion of the Indians on these reservations are obtaining the assistance of the Government under the annuities provided for by treaty stipulations, but there are five or six thousand Indians who are now in these reservations, where the Government is endeavoring to have them taught the pursuits of agriculture, that get no assistance from the Government. They cannot be released from the reservations and permitted to return to their own country because it is occupied by the whites, and their presence has been a fruitful source of the war which has desolated that country. The Indians who have been gathered up and taken into the reservations without any treaties, compose some four, five, or six thousand, embraced within Oregon and Washington Territory. But in order to explain the matter more fully, I shall read a paragraph from the last annual report of the superintendent of Indian affairs for Oregon:

"In my last annual report I set forth the reasons why a treaty should be made with these tribes, or the one made by General Palmer in 1855 should be ratified.

"These reasons still exist with increased force. About half the Indians in the superintendency, who are under the control of the Government, are located upon this reservation. Their number is about three thousand. Except the small tribe of Shasta Seaton, none of them are entitled to annuities, nor are appropriations made for their benefit. They were induced to remove to the reservation by late Superintendent Joel Palmer in 1855, and a treaty for the purchase of their lands concluded. The Senate failed to ratify the treaty, and they have consequently never received anything under it. But their part of the stipulations have all been complied with. They gave up their lands, and they have since been occupied by whites. Common justice requires that some provision be made for them. They have no means of procuring clothing, are not in reach of any market where agricultural products can be sold, and they are consequently discontented, and eager to leave the reservation whenever they can elude the vigilance of the agent. I still think, as I expressed it in my report for 1863, that a new treaty can now be made with them more economical to the Government, and more suited to their wants and present condition. I recommended that course as best; but whether that is adopted or it is preferred to ratify the treaty of 1855, it is very important that some action be taken without longer delay."

I will state that they have surrendered their country and are now kept upon the reservations without the means of subsistence. I have not complied with the recommendation of the superintendent of Indian affairs by inaugurating a system of making a treaty for this purpose, for the reason that I believe they can be more cheaply subsisted on reservations by a small annual appropriation and avoid the expense which will be incurred and the delay which will ensue from making a treaty. An appropriation of this sum of $50,000 was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and embraced in the estimates submitted to Congress. It was stricken out of the bill in the House of Representatives without any reason being offered, and I now move simply to restore it. I have here a lengthy argument from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, both recommending that that sum be reinstated. I ask that the amendment be made inserting "fifty" in place of "twenty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment to come in on page 53, after line twelve hundred and seventy-six:

To supply deficiencies in the Indian service in Arizona Territory, $12,900, for the present fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed, and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLEMENTARY PENSION ACT.

Mr. FOSTER. I have in my charge from the Committee on Pensions a single general bill making a slight alteration in the pension laws, and four or five little bills of a private character which will not affect the public materially, but are of great importance to the individuals concerned. The whole together, I pledge myself, will not take over fifteen minutes. I ask as a favor of the Senate that they grant me that time to dispose of these bills.

Mr. HARLAN. If the Senator's bills can be acted on in so short a period I will not stand in his way, but I have been waiting a long while to ask the Senate to vote on the bill for the organization of a government over the Indian Territory. I believe no member of the Indian Committee desires to discuss the question. They desire, however, a vote of the Senate on the passage of that bill. I give notice that when these bills of the Senator from Connecticut have been acted on I shall attempt to get the floor to call up that bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I also give notice that I have a bill which I am very anxious to get a vote on to-night, and I have risen more than thirty times in the hope of securing the attention of the Chair that I might move to take up the bill which I have in my hands.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest that we allow the Senator from Connecticut to have his bills passed, and then we can get to our bills; we are all in the condition of the Senator from Massachusetts. I hope we shall go right on and work.

Mr. POMEROY. There is one item that was ruled out of the Indian appropriation bill because it was not in order; there was no objection to it except on the point of order on which it was ruled out. I wish to introduce it and have it passed as a separate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions, report it back with an amendment. The amendment is to strike out the fifth and sixth sections.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides in the first section that no pension shall be allowed to any person as an invalid for any period of time during which he received, or has become entitled to receive, for services rendered to the United States Government in any capacity, the full pay which able-bodied officers or employés rendering like services are allowed by law.

The second section declares that acting assistant or contract surgeons disabled by any wound received or disease contracted while actually performing the duties of assistant surgeons or acting assistant surgeons, with any military forces in the field or in transitu, shall be entitled to the benefits of the pension laws in the same manner as if they had actually been mustered into the service with the rank of "assistant surgeon," and the widows, minor children, or the dependents of acting assistant surgeons dying while performing such duty, shall in like manner be entitled to the same benefits of the pension laws as if the deceased had been actually mustered into the service as assistant surgeons.

The third section provides that all persons now by law entitled to a less pension than twenty dollars a month, who shall have lost one foot and one hand in the military service of the United States, and in the line of his duty, shall be entitled to that sum.

The fourth section provides that if any officer or other person named in the first section of the "act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, has died since the 4th of March, 1861, or shall hereafter die by reason of any wound received or disease contracted while in the service of the United States, and in the line of duty, his widow, or if there be no widow, or in case of her death or marriage, without an allowance to her of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children, under sixteen years of age, shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to under that act had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father, and to continue to the widow during her widowhood, or to the child or children until they severally attain to the age of sixteen years, and no longer; but when such pension has been, or shall hereafter be, allowed to the widow, such child or children shall only be entitled to receive it to commence from the death or marriage of such widow. Nothing contained in this section is to be construed to repeal or modify the tenth section of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 14, 1862," approved July 4, 1864.

The fifth and sixth sections, which it is proposed to strike out, are as follows:

SEC. 5. And he it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, required, on request of the Commissioner of Pensions, to furnish such proof as may be within his possession or control of the death of any person dying in the military service who may be entitled by law to the benefit of the pension laws, together with such other information touching the term of service of such person as may be required to enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjudicate such cases, and the information so furnished, properly authenticated by the signature of the Secretary of War, under the seal of the War Department, shall be held by the Secretary of the Interior to be sufficient evidence of the fact stated.

SEC. 6. And he it further enacted, That the eleventh section of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 14, 1862," approved July 4, 1864, be so amended as to apply to commissioned and non-commissioned officers who shall have actually served as such and were actually in the service as such at the time of their death or disability, and to all officers and enlisted men killed or disabled while actually engaged in the military service in repelling invasion from any loyal State.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EZEKIEL DARLING.

Mr. FOSTER. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Darling, report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow to Ezekiel Darling a pension of four dollars a month during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH B. LEPPEN.

Mr. FOSTER. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Seppien, report it back with an amendment. The amendment is simply to change the initial letter in the surname of the party from S to L. It should be Leppien and not Seppien.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow a pension of thirty dollars a month from May 24, 1863, to continue during widowhood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

SOPHIA BROOKE TAYLOR.

Mr. FOSTER. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 791) granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor, directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Francis Taylor, major of the first regular United States artillery, who died of yellow fever while in command of the post at Fort Brown, Texas, on the 12th of October, 1858, upon the pension roll, at the same rate of pay which he would have been entitled to if he had been totally disabled at the time of his death, for and during the period of her natural life or widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RACHEL MILLS.

Mr. FOSTER. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 565) granting a pension to Rachel Mills, widow of Peter Mills, deceased, late a major in the United States Army, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension roll the name of Rachel Mills, of Binghamton, New York, widow of Peter Mills, deceased, late a major of the United States Army, at the rate of twenty dollars a month from April 1, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRA B. CURTIS.

Mr. FOSTER. The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Decatur, Illinois, praying that a pension may be granted to Dr. Ira B. Curtis, of that place, have instructed me to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, the general law which has been passed providing for that case.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES A. HICHBORN.

Mr. FOSTER. The same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of William W. Thayer, guardian of Charles A. Hichborn, son of Alexander Hichborn, acting assistant surgeon "on contract," who was killed at the battle of Chancellorsville, May 3, 1863, praying for the passage of an act defining the rank said Alexander Hichborn held in the Army at the time of his death, and the amount of pension that should be paid to his son, have instructed me to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, the same general law providing for that.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 303) for the relief of Charles A. Hichborn, which passed the Senate and was returned by the House of Representatives to the Senate at its request, and recommended to the Committee on Pensions, have instructed me to ask the Senate to reconsider its vote passing the bill, and also to reconsider the vote ordering it to a third reading, for the purpose of moving the indefinite postponement of the bill, it being provided for now by the general law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question of reconsideration will be considered as agreed to; and the question will be taken on the indefinite postponement.

Mr. FOSTER. I move its indefinite postponement for the reason given.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 459) to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory.

Mr. SUMNER. That is a good bill; I am for that.

Mr. CLARK. I do not want to interpose against the business of the Senator from Iowa; but it is very necessary that the tariff bill should come up and be acted upon, as amendments have been reported to it by the Committee on Finance, and if they are adopted it will have to go back to the House of Representatives to enable them to be acted on in the House. I hope Senators will allow me to take that up. It is not a long bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will let us get through the few bills that we are all agonizing in regard to, and then we shall come to the tariff bill.

Mr. CLARK. I am afraid Senators will agonize more if they come here the day after tomorrow and find that the public business is not done.

Mr. CONNESS. I am prepared to sit here all night.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not.

Mr. CONNESS. Then the Senator can go home.

Mr. HARLAN. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 459) to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is a verbal amendment that I desire to make to the bill. It is to insert after the word "tribes," on page 2, line sixteen, the words "by a treaty stipulation duly negotiated for that purpose." The section now provides that this act is not to take effect "without the consent of said tribe or tribes." The tribes there are in amity and peace with us. Our treaty stipulations forbid the extension of territorial government over these Cherokees and Creeks without their consent, and I therefore move to insert these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 3, section two, line ten, after the words "United States," I move to insert the words "and suspend from office any Indian agent or employé in said Territory." This will authorize the Governor of the Territory to have power to suspend any of these Indian agents or employés until the decision of the President can be made known. I wish to give the Governor who shall go there full power to control all the Indian agents in the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On page 6, section six, line fourteen, after the word "Governor," I move to insert the following:

And any and all laws, rules, and regulations adopted by said Council may be modified or annulled by Congress.

The effect of the amendment is to give power to Congress to annul any law that may be passed by that Legislative Council.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, this bill was before the Senate four or five days ago, perhaps a little more than that. It has been introduced into the Senate since the 20th of February, and printed since that time. It was not laid upon our tables until the 23d or 24th of February. It is a long bill; I have it not before me; but I think some fourteen or fifteen pages folio, and fourteen or fifteen sections. It changes, I believe, very materially and radically our whole Indian policy. It violates our treaties. It will be very injurious at least to some of the Indian tribes; and worse than all, it will be a stain upon the national honor, a breach of the national faith. These are a portion of its evils.

One of the tribes that this bill contemplates to bring within territorial jurisdiction is the Cherokee tribe of Indians. I am old enough to remember the time when the people of the United States were very considerably exercised, and I may say agitated, on account of what seemed to be a most cruel and unjustifiable course pursued by our Government toward that tribe; or, if not directly, by the Government, at least they were accessory to the cruelty and injustice perpetrated by the State of Georgia upon that tribe. This tribe had its home in what I believe made a portion of the States of Georgia, Tennessee, and North Carolina; and the section occupied by them was among the very finest portions of those States. A portion of that Cherokee country was as attractive and beautiful as any within the limits of the United States. It was looked upon with desire, it was coveted by the surrounding whites, especially in the State of Georgia. They determined that these people should be expelled from those lands, and they carried that determination into effect. The United States for a time struggled against that effort on the part of Georgia, and seemed disposed to protect the tribe in their rights; but very soon our Government yielded, and the State of Georgia triumphantly drove those Indians beyond the Mississippi, took their lands, disposed of them by lottery, and hanged some of our citizens within the Territory, on the charge that they were attempting to impede or thwart the laws of Georgia and the purposes of that State against the Cherokees. In the case of one of those men, after a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States that the conviction was erroneous, and after a writ of error had been issued to bring up the record to the Supreme Court for revision, the State of Georgia, by her authorities, proceeded to execute the man, notwithstanding the pendency of the writ of error, thus flinging defiance in the face of the Government of the United States in the most odious and offensive, and, I will add, in the most savage manner.

These Indians were driven off, under these circumstances, west of the Mississippi. The United States made a treaty with them within a few years after this; I believe in the year 1835. These events occurred in the years 1829 and 1830, and so on up to 1835, when the United States made a treaty with these Indians which is in our volume of treaties. We had previously made treaties with this same tribe. In this treaty of 1835 we entered into very solemn stipulations as to their rights to the country west of the Mississippi river, over which we now propose to extend our jurisdiction and create a Territory. One of the stipulations in that treaty is short, and I will read it, in order that we may see whether or not it is consistent with good faith for us now to incorporate a Territory taking in this tract of country which we then covenanted in the most solemn manner should remain to this Cherokee tribe. The fifth article of that treaty is as follows:

"The United States hereby covenant and agree that the lands ceded to the Cherokee nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time without their consent be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory. But they shall secure to the Cherokee nation the right by their national councils to make and carry into effect all such laws as they may deem necessary for the government and protection of the persons and property within their own country belonging to their people or such persons as have connected themselves with them: Provided always, That they shall not be inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States."

That is one of the stipulations which the United States entered into with these Indians.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senator that the bill which is pending provides that this territorial government shall not extend over that tribe except their assent be first obtained through treaty stipulation.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, Mr. President; and therefore what is the necessity or propriety of passing this territorial bill until we first obtain that consent?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If my honorable friend will allow me, this country held by the Cherokees is larger than the State of Massachusetts. Immediately below the Arkansas lies the country of the Creeks, which probably is larger than New Jersey. Then below that, south of the Canadian river, is the country of the Choctaws and the Chickasaws and the affiliated Indians that were put in there from Texas, which is larger than both the others put together. Those Indians, by their hostilities against the United States, have forfeited all treaty stipulations with the United States, and we are therefore not bound to regard the treaties which we entered into with the Chickasaws or the Choctaws on that subject, they having broken them by open, flagrant war for three or four years against the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me a single word?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not wish to break in upon this discussion; but I beg the Senator to be as short as possible, so that we can get some work done. The Senator will excuse me for saying that.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. It would have been shorter if the Senator had not said anything.

Mr. CONNESS. It will not be much longer from what I said.

Mr. FOSTER. The time the Senator has taken up, if occupied by myself, would have got me along so much farther in my remarks, which will be brief anyway.

In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, as to the Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws, who are at war with the United States, I will remark that I have said nothing whatever about them. I speak of the Cherokee tribe, which, as a tribe, has remained true and faithful to the Government of the United States. No doubt a portion of the tribe have joined the rebels; but they were a small portion comparatively, and they did so under duress and compulsion—of Indians, as a tribe, received annuities from the confederate government for two years.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be. If they have received annuities from the confederate government they have not been paid for a tithe of the property which the confederate government have stolen from them. The confederate government overran their country, took their property, and committed many depredations; if they have had manliness, or honor, or justice enough to restore them anything, either by way of annuities or otherwise, I am glad of it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I said the confederate government undertook to carry out with the Cherokee nation the agreement we had made with them; and the Cherokee tribe of Indians received from the confederate government the annuities which were due from the United States Government as a nation.

Mr. FOSTER. The difficulty then is that the confederate government have taken a portion of the obligations of the United States upon themselves, and have paid to the Cherokee nation for two years the annuities which the Government of the United States were bound to pay. I do not see that the Cherokees sinned greatly in that.

As it respects the other tribes, to reply, as I was replying, to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, I say I have said nothing about them; and so far as this treaty which I have appealed to is concerned, it has nothing to do with them. With this Cherokee tribe I say, however, this treaty has to do; and when the Senator from Missouri suggested that this bill provides that we shall first obtain the consent of the tribe before we extend this territorial government over them, does not every Senator know what that means, and what the passage of this territorial bill creating these officers to go there means? Is there any doubt that these tribes will consent? Does not everybody know that their consent under these circumstances is a mere farce? How would it be if we had a treaty like this with any foreign Power that had sufficient strength to avenge an insult of this sort? If we had made this treaty with such a nation, and then undertook to extend jurisdiction over it, provided we could get their consent after we had thus exerted our authority and created a Territory, what would be the result?

Mr. President, how would we bear it if a foreign nation undertook to adopt this policy toward us? Take the case of Louisiana: it was ceded to this Government by France many years ago, no more solemnly than we have ceded to the Cherokee nation this tract of country west of the Mississippi. Suppose Louis Napoleon should send to Louisiana, as governor or viceroy, Duke Gwin or some other person, to take control of the territory, and he, with all the paraphernalia of an imperial Government, should sail from France for the mouth of the Mississippi; would it make much difference in the character of the proceeding if Duke Gwin should call at the capes of Virginia, and say to the officer in command at Old Point, in the most polite terms ever employed by that gallant and polite nation, "I am on my way to our ancient territory of Louisiana to resume jurisdiction over it; but my imperial master instructed me to obtain the consent of the Government of the United States before commencing my government over the country; of course you will accede to the wishes of the emperor, and give your consent." Would not that bring war between us and France at once? Would not the French Government understand it to be war? If this treaty was with any nation in the world which had any power to resent an insult would we not understand that the passage of this bill was a declaration of war, and would it not be war, certainly and speedily?

I know it will not be war with these poor Cherokees, because they are a powerless tribe; that is, powerless as against the United States. They have sent two regiments into your Army, a greater number of men in proportion to the number of fighting men belonging to the tribe than has gone from any State in this Union; and those men are now fighting as gallantly and as bravely in the ranks of the Union Army as any other men in it, as I am informed. Now, we propose, in violation of these treaty stipulations, to extend our government over this Indian Territory, putting in, by way of parenthesis, "provided they consent." If that parenthesis means anything, we should not pass the bill, because we should first get their consent; and it will take us from now to December at least to make such a treaty, and arrange as between us and them, so that we can establish a territorial government. Let us therefore lay aside the bill; let us make a treaty with these Indians authorizing us to carry into effect this bill as we now propose; and next December will be in abundant time to pass it, if the Indians do consent.

Mr. HOWARD. Move to lay it on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. It would not be fair for me to submit that motion after making the remarks I have against it. I do not wish to be tedious; but I wish Senators would look at this bill.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the further consideration of the bill now before the Senate be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope this may not be done. I have frequently regretted, in listening to discussions on this floor, that other Senators had not the charge of every committee on which I serve. I have no doubt that the Senator from Connecticut would make a much better member of the Indian Committee than I make at least, and perhaps better than any other member of it. It is a little remarkable that of the seven Senators who have been appointed, in the wisdom of the Senate, to serve on that committee, not one has dissented from this bill; but a Senator who has not been detailed especially to look into this subject deems this bill especially cruel to the very people whom it is intended to protect. The design of the bill is to protect these Indians from utter annihilation—not to establish a government there for white men, to introduce white men, but to prevent them from entering the Territory or becoming inhabitants of the Territory. The very object of the bill is to protect the Indians. The very object of this proposed government is to enable the Federal Government to enforce the laws and usages of the Indian tribes. The bill itself provides in express terms that it shall not operate in any way on any Indian tribe until that Indian tribe shall first give its consent by express treaty stipulation. If the Cherokees should not give their consent, then they will not be affected by it.

But is it fair to keep all the other Indian tribes, many of whom are very feeble, in a condition little short of anarchy, because a chief of the Cherokees, now a pensioner of the Federal Government in the city of Philadelphia, remonstrates against the passage of such a bill? The chief of that tribe, from whom these objections originally emanate, is now a pensioner on the Federal Government to the tune of $10,000 a year; and of course he objects to any organization that might in the end take from him any of the despotic power that he now attempts to wield over these helpless people. A majority of the Cherokee nation have been in rebellion against the Government of the United States; they have forfeited all their rights; but this bill does not propose to confiscate their property or to deprive them of any rights until, by express treaty stipulation, they shall have agreed to the provisions contained in this bill; and even then, with the adoption of the bill, it is intended to protect the Cherokees, and every other tribe within the limits of the Indian country, from aggression from the white man, those from whom the Senator himself fears encroachment.

We were told a day or two ago by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that he was opposed to making any more treaties with the Indian tribes. He believes that Congress ought to pass laws for the government of the Indian tribes; and a number of leading Senators expressed their conviction that he was right; that we ought to discard the idea of making treaties with these feeble people. The Indian Committee have not recommended this course, but they have recommended that these Indians shall be consulted, and if they give their consent to an affiliation of all the Indians within the Indian country, or a number of these tribes, to establish such judicial proceedings there as will exclude aggression from without. The Committee on Indian Affairs believe that it will tend to improve the welfare of these feeble people. I have no doubt of it myself; but unless some such policy as this shall be adopted I shall lose all hope of saving a fragment of the people that once controlled this vast country. They are wasting away rapidly now like the snows before a morning's sun, and unless this Government makes some systematic effort to save them they will speedily all be gone. I have no hope for them if we leave them in the condition of anarchy in which we now find them in that Territory. I believe some effort should be made on the part of this Government for their protection and preservation. This bill is intended for this purpose. Hence I think it is unfair for a Senator here who has not given especial attention to this subject, as I believe—I do not think it is possible he could have done so and use the language he has in reference to this bill—to denounce it as he has tonight.

I promised the Senate, however, that I would not discuss this subject; and I would not have done so had it not been for the very severe remarks made by the Senator from Connecticut in relation to this matter. I will now ask that a vote may be taken on the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire. The Chair feels obliged very reluctantly to remind Senators that a discussion of the merits of the bill is not in order on a motion with regard to the order of business.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion. I think we can take a vote as quick on this bill as on his motion.

Mr. CLARK. If I supposed that was so, I would withdraw my motion; but I desire to give notice to Senators that unless they give an opportunity of passing the business now pressing upon the Senate, an extra session of Congress becomes inevitable.

Mr. BROWN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. POMEROY. I think we can now have a vote on the bill.

Mr. CLARK. I withdraw the motion, if there is to be no discussion.

Mr. HOWARD. What is the motion before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to postpone being withdrawn, the question will be on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. It was certainly unnecessary for the honorable Senator from Iowa, as it seems to me, to intimate that I was arrogating to myself skill superior or judgment better than the gentlemen on the Indian Committee, or that I was imputing to him, or to the chairman, or to any member of that committee any lack of all the ability requisite for the proper performance of their duties on that committee, and on every other committee, and in every other position to which this body or their constituents may assign them. I can assure that honorable Senator that I have for him and for the committee of which he is certainly a distinguished member the highest personal respect, and in nothing that I have said have I reflected in any manner upon any member of that committee. As it regards the measures which that committee bring forward, I have yet to learn that they are not open to every member of the Senate as a matter of comment. If the day has arrived or is about to arrive when it is understood that after a committee, detailed as the honorable Senator says to perform a certain duty, have performed that duty, that closes up the matter, and it is no longer open to doubt or question, this body becomes one of very simple character. It consists of so many committees who perform certain duties, and when performed by them there is an end of the matter. This is not a legislative or deliberative assembly; it is a collection of committees. I do not so understand the character or constitution of this body.

I certainly make no boast that I understand this subject even as well as the honorable Senator does; but as it appears to me, I say again, this bill is fraught with danger and dishonor to the country. It may be because I do not understand it that I hold and avow that opinion. It has been before the Senate less than a week, or about a week; and a week spent, as we all know how, in sessions from eleven o'clock in the morning until twelve at night and one in the morning, and in committee meetings from half past nine until eleven o'clock. Under these circumstances, if a bill such as this, laid on our tables for the first time on the 22d or 23d of February, some fourteen or fifteen pages long, has not been well understood by this body, I do not think we are to be charged with great negligence in attending to our public duties. It is not strange that we do not understand it. It is a little strange that that committee did not bring forward a bill so important as this a little earlier in the session; or, if they brought it forward at this period, at least that they did not suggest that it go over until another session in order that it might be understood.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senate passed a solemn resolution instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into the propriety of establishing just such a government as we propose here. The committee therefore acted under the instruction of the Senate itself.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. A month ago.

Mr. HARLAN. Not quite a month ago. In the course of six or eight days after that resolution was received by the chairman we reported this bill. I do not think, therefore, that the committee is justly chargeable with negligence. The Senate instructed them to inquire into the subject. They did it with reasonable dispatch, and reported a bill, and the bill was printed and laid on the tables of Senators. The Committee on Indian Affairs are not culpable for the inception of this bill, nor for delay, at least in introducing it. They did it with reasonable promptness.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not charging the committee with negligence. I am only saying that if they introduced this bill at a late day of the session they ought not to charge the members of the body, who are not members of the committee, with their ignorance of it, however prompt the committee may have been in their action, and however clearly impossible it may have been for them to have acted earlier, or to have avoided acting under the direction of the Senate. I make no complaint, I repeat, of the committee.

Mr. HARLAN. I think it is due to me to say that I do not intend to charge anybody with ignorance; but the Senator said he thought this bill would inflict cruelty, and used other similar words, which I think were a reflection on the humanity, or at least the care and attention of the committee to the subject that had been intrusted to them. That was the occasion of my remarks, but if I was so unfortunate as to make the impression on the Senator's mind which it seems I have made, I will take great pleasure in withdrawing any such remark.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand the Senator to say anything offensive. It is simply a difference of opinion between us, an honest difference of opinion. He, from his superior knowledge of the subject, has perhaps the better opinion; but mine is as sincere and as honest as his. The only question is, which of us is in the right? He no doubt believes that he himself is. I believe that I am; and I yield, so far as better opportunities for understanding the matter are concerned, to him. But there are certain principles which it does not require a great length of time to understand; and one is that we have made a solemn treaty with these people which this bill which we are about to pass violates. It does not do to say that if the Cherokees consent to this it will be right. It is not all right.

Mr. BROWN. I will ask the Senator if the stipulation to which he refers does not say it shall not be done without their consent; and if they give their consent I ask him if it is in violation of the treaty stipulation?

Mr. FOSTER. None whatever; but the consent should be had before the legislation.

Mr. BROWN. It does not follow.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not follow, in the judgment of the Senator; it does in mine, if we keep our faith. Get the consent of the tribe, and then legislate. Why this haste about the legislation? Do we mean to send our officers there to organize a territorial government? What is the purpose of the bill? Is it honest? I ask again, do we mean to send these officers there to organize this government, and are these officers, after they get there with commissions in their pockets, to negotiate with the Indians first whether they may stay and organize the government?

Mr. BROWN. I will explain to the Senator. There is abundance of territory outside of the Cherokee nation which will require this organization. Their territory will not be included in it in any sense; it will not be part of it until they give their assent any more than it is now included in the Government of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, the bill which is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by lines and limits takes in this very Territory. It extends north to the south line of the State of Kansas; it extends west to our other territorial possessions; it extends east to our recognized possessions, and south to our recognized possessions; and it takes in the whole Territory.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; only I hope the Senator from California will not think my speech long.

Mr. CONNESS. I certainly shall, and do.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Have we organized a territorial government since the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, including that bill, that does not contain that same provision, and does not include Indian reserves? When the Kansas-Nebraska bill was passed there was more territory in Indian reserves provided for by a similar stipulation than there was soil belonging to the United States Government. We could not extend our jurisdiction over those Indian reserves, and have not to this day; and yet we exercise power over all other portions of the Territory.

Mr. FOSTER. If we have learned by experience, as the honorable Senator says we have, that when we undertake to violate our pledged faith we cannot really carry out the violation, I think it is time we stop the attempt. The honorable Senator appeals to certain things done in the State of Kansas when it was a Territory. He is much more familiar with all that than I am. I presume there were a great many things done there that were disgraceful. We have heard enough of matters disgraceful in regard to legislation about Kansas—Leecompton constitutions and all. I do not suppose the honorable Senator wishes to quote those as a precedent for legislation like this. They may be like it; but they had better be quoted by way of admonition than by way of example.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Every territorial government since, and those passed last winter, contain the same clause.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be so. All I have to say is that it did not happen to attract my attention; this does. If the honorable Senator from Missouri is right, and we do not mean under this bill to meddle with this Cherokee country, alter the lines in this bill; except this Cherokee country from the operation of the bill. It is pretty easy to point out that portion which belongs to the Cherokee nation. Let the boundaries of this new Territory that is to be organized be amended, and let the boundaries be of a Territory that we intend to take possession of and to govern, and not extend it over that which it is avowed we have no right to govern, and do not intend even to attempt to govern. Then why do it?

Mr. President, it certainly is not for me to interpret the judgments of Providence; but in my opinion, the people who seized and occupied the territory of this Cherokee nation in the State of Georgia and the adjacent regions have been visited within the past six months in a retributive manner for the wrongs done these Cherokees thirty years ago. We have heard of the passage of an army over that country from Chattanooga down to the city of Savannah, near the mouth of the Savannah river in the State of Georgia. It passed over this Cherokee country—a beautiful country, containing some of the fairest land on the face of the earth. The Cherokees were driven from it by the cupidity of Georgia; their lands were disposed of by lottery among her citizens, and the Cherokees compelled to migrate beyond the Mississippi, almost at the point of the bayonet. Bayonets have visited that section of country since; and the people occupying the old homes of the Cherokees have recently fled before the march of the destroyer. Chattanooga, famous in this war, was one of the central points in the old Cherokee nation. That, and the region around it, has felt the iron heel of the soldier. I believe my honorable friend from Iowa has faith in an overruling Power and in the retributions of Providence; and I have thought—it may be a fancy—that there was something of retribution upon these people who were occupying the lands of these Cherokees so unjustly, so wickedly obtained. When the army of Sherman marched over that country, perhaps these people thought of the poor Cherokees who had been driven away thirty years ago. I believe the honorable Senator from Iowa will agree with me in thinking that Providence sometimes visits nations and communities for past transgressions. Let us pause before we drive these Cherokees from their last earthly resting-place—for they have now reached it—to gratify the insatiable desire for land, which, like an evil spirit, seems to possess the minds of our people. You may pass this bill—you may exterminate these Indians and obtain the lands which you solemnly covenanted should be theirs forever—but a day of reckoning will come. It came in fire and in blood upon those who drove them from Georgia. Beware lest it come upon us.

Mr. President, I have no desire to prevent a vote on this bill. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to pass it I certainly shall submit to it, and shall resort to no measures whatever to postpone it except in rather a desultory manner to bring these points which strike my mind to the consideration of the Senate. If they are entitled to no consideration let it be so, and let the bill pass. I was not on the Indian Committee. I have been spoken to by some of the men connected with this tribe, and told by them that this bill would be most disastrous, ruinous, as they believed, to that tribe. The honorable committee may have other and better information. That is the opinion I have; and I am perfectly willing to give the authorities. John Ross, whom the gentleman characterized as a pensioner of this Government, who is at the head of the Cherokee nation, and has been for years, is one. I believe him to be a trustworthy man. The Rev. Mr. Jones, who has been laboring with that people as a chaplain more than thirty years, is another. He tells me that the passage of this bill will be most disastrous and ruinous to that people, as he believes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Since the discussion the other evening, when the honorable Senator expressed himself so strongly against this bill, Rev. Mr. Jones, who has been for forty years a missionary among the Cherokees, called on me in the committee-room and I had a conversation with him. I called his attention to the provision of the bill that it should have no effect over the Cherokees without their consent, and I showed him the amendment which I intended to offer to the bill from the committee, that that consent was to be obtained by treaty stipulation. He said that gave altogether a different aspect to the question, and he went on to speak of the Cherokees. I mentioned to him the fact that by this bill no one in the Territory could have any vote in the choice of members of the Council but the Indians and members of the tribe. He said that the rule of the tribe was that no white man could be admitted unless he was married into the tribe. After these facts were called to his attention he expressed to me a very different state of opinion from what my honorable friend understood him to express in the first instance.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know but that this gentleman has altered his opinion. I have seen him, however, since the honorable Senator has, and he gave no intimation to me of a change of opinion. The great danger he apprehended was that the organization of this territorial government would bring in the whites and surround the Indians there with what are called the "blessings of civilization," which are the curse and the bane of the Indians.

Mr. HARLAN. The purpose of the bill is to prevent that very thing; to avoid it.

Mr. FOSTER. If the intention and object of the organization of a territorial government on the part of the United States is to prevent our people from going into such a Territory and settling upon it, it certainly is a novel idea in a territorial bill.

Mr. HARLAN. It is not called a territorial bill. The title of the bill is, "A bill to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory."

Mr. FOSTER. Exactly; "to establish civil government in the Indian Territory;" and it goes on to ascertain that Territory by boundaries; and it organizes that Territory by the appointment of a Governor and other officers just like our other Territories; and if it is to exclude citizens of the United States from it, I repeat again, that it is a novel organization; it is one that will never work out its purpose. The moment the Territory is organized our people will go upon the Territory, and there will be no power to stop them. Who will have the right to stop them? Who will have the jurisdiction there, the Indians or the United States? I say the United States. And what right have the United States to keep citizens of the United States out of the territory of the United States? Where will the power be?

Mr. HARLAN. They have agreed to do so in the treaties to which the Senator himself has referred, and this bill is intended to carry out faithfully the stipulations of those treaties.

Mr. FOSTER. The honorable Senator from Kansas tells us, and I think the honorable Senator, the chairman of the committee, tells us, that the Indians have broken their faith with the United States; that these treaties are all abrogated.

Mr. HARLAN. No; but some of the Indian tribes that reside in the Territory have forfeited their rights. This bill does not confiscate their property or take away any of their rights.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it does not. I was not upon that subject. I was upon the subject, however, that the effect of this territorial organization would be to have this Territory overrun by the population of the United States, and that population surrounding these Indians would be certain to bring all the evils and curses which civilization brings to Indian tribes when it comes in contact with them.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow this subject to be passed over to allow me to take up a report of a committee of conference which I should like to dispose of tonight?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope we may be permitted to come to a vote on this bill.

Mr. WILSON. Do you think a vote can be taken?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly. Why not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of a committee of conference is regarded as a privileged question.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take it up for consideration.

Mr. POMEROY. It can be received only by unanimous consent at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of a committee of conference has always been regarded as a privileged question.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not consent to any business being done that interferes with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report under the practice of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. The report has been made, and I desire to call it up.

Mr. HARLAN. The report is on the table, and I hope it will not be taken up until a vote is had on this bill. I know not of any other Senator who intends to speak upon it; and all that the committee ask is a vote.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Does it require unanimous consent to take up the report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not. A report of a committee of conference has uniformly been regarded as a privileged question; and if the Senator from Massachusetts calls it up it is before the Senate and will be read.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Connecticut gave way for that purpose. The debate on this bill will go on for some time if we continue its consideration, and I should like to get through with this report to-night.

Mr. CONNESS. When we began this evening's work we gave way by unanimous consent to the Senator from Connecticut, and he had four or five bills passed. Surely he has spoken on this subject until we all pretty well understand it. Everybody is anxious to vote. The clock has very nearly made its hour since it was begun. I hope we shall finish this bill, and then let us take up the conference report, and we will get to each other's business directly.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a bill that I want taken up.

Mr. CONNESS. Do not thrust that in here now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist upon calling up the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. WILSON. If the vote can be taken on this bill I will give way. I want to accommodate everybody if I can.

Mr. CLARK. I move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. HARLAN. I must ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion, if it is insisted upon.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. On what question were the yeas and nays ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the question of postponing the pending orders and proceeding to the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to know when the tariff bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. About half an hour ago, and has never been printed.

Mr. CLARK. And not designed to be.

Mr. GRIMES. Exactly; and here we are asked to vote on the tariff when there is plenty of time to consider it. There is not any trouble about disposing of that bill and all the appropriation bills before twelve o'clock on Saturday. If the Committee on Finance will allow this tariff bill to be printed, when we come here at eleven o'clock to-morrow we can take it up and pass it.

Mr. CLARK. I have only to say that there are several amendments reported to the tariff bill, and if they are adopted by the Senate, the bill must go back to the House; and the Senate can judge whether, with the miscellaneous bill not yet reported from the House to the Senate, and which must then be referred to the Committee on Finance, we can get through with that business by Saturday noon. I leave Senators to judge which measure should give way. It is a matter of necessity that the tariff bill should be acted upon. But Senators can determine the question as well as I can.

Mr. HOWE. I desire simply to say that I find this tariff bill here. It was referred yesterday to the Committee on Finance, and I understand now that it was reported back about thirty minutes ago.

Mr. CLARK. An hour and a half ago.

Mr. HOWE. My first information was incorrect by an hour. I was informed that there was to be a meeting of the committee at six o'clock this evening. I did not attend the meeting because the Senate was in session; and I did not know that there had been a meeting of the Committee on Finance on this measure. I do not think it ought to be pressed upon the attention of the Senate now. I have not seen the amendments reported by the committee, but I have looked over the bill, and I am inclined to think it spends more money than it makes, authorizes the expenditure of more money than it earns; and I do not think it ought to be pressed at this stage of the session to the exclusion of other business.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to have a vote upon it; and if the Senate do not choose to take it up, and it falls, or there is an extra session of Congress, it will not be my fault.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust there will be a vote; but I want it to go out in connection with that statement that this tariff bill only reached us yesterday; that it has been in the hands of the Committee on Finance until an hour or an hour and a half ago, according to the statement of the Senator; that it has not been printed; half the Senators are absent; and there is no man in the Senate that knows what is in it, I apprehend, except the Senator from New Hampshire himself. Certainly his colleague on the committee [Mr. Howe] says he does not know anything about it. I have no fears of an extra session of Congress. I have seen this thing now for six years. We have always been threatened with an extra session, and there never has been any difficulty in getting through all the appropriation bills, and a great deal more of private legislation than the interests of the country required.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish simply to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I, too, a member of the committee, have never looked at this bill and could not until now. I am willing to meet the Senator here to-morrow morning at nine o'clock or ten—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Say ten o'clock, and let us adjourn now.

Mr. CONNESS. At ten o'clock, and go on with these important bills; but I ask him to give us this night for legislation that to us is of the greatest consequence. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. CLARK. If I could feel certain that the Senate would be ready at ten o'clock or even eleven o'clock to-morrow to proceed at once to the consideration of the tariff bill I would not insist on my motion; but I desire to say here to the Senator from Iowa, and to any other Senator who has been here as long or longer than I have, that I have never seen the public business in the condition in which it now is. It is no fault of the Senate, it is no fault of the Finance Committee, that this bill was not reported to the Senate earlier. It is no fault of the Senate that the miscellaneous bill is not yet reported, and cannot be, and will not be here until to-morrow unless we sit here to-night and receive it. I submit to Senators how the public business is to be done. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can only be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not think there will be any objection.

Mr. POWELL. I object.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up the conference report on the Freedmen's Bureau bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts can call up the report, according to the usage of the Senate, without a motion.

Mr. HARLAN. I think not. He can make the report, but he has no right to call it up unless it be the will of the Senate that it be taken from the table. If it can be done by unanimous consent, so as not to displace this bill, I shall not object to it.

Mr. WILSON. Let us have a vote. Nobody objects to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the committee is before the Senate and will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 51) entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows: that the Senate recede from their amendment to the said bill, and the committee agree to the following as a substitute:

An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby established in the War Department, to continue during the present war of rebellion, and for one year thereafter, a Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, to which shall be committed, as hereinafter provided, the supervision and management of all abandoned lands, and the control of all subjects relating to refugees and freedmen from rebel States, or from any district of country within the territory embraced in the operations of the Army, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the head of the bureau and approved by the President. The said bureau shall be under the management and control of a Commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose compensation shall be $3,000 per annum, and such number of clerks as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of War, not exceeding one chief clerk, two of the fourth class, two of the third class, three of the second class, and five of the first class. And the Commissioner and all persons appointed under this act shall, before entering upon their duties, take the oath of office prescribed in an act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1863. And the Commissioner and the chief clerk shall, before entering upon their duties, give bonds to the Treasurer of the United States, the former in the sum of $50,000, and the latter in the sum of $10,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties respectively, with securities to be approved as sufficient by the Attorney General, which bonds shall be filed in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit for the benefit of any injured party, upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War may direct such issues of provisions, clothing, and fuel as he may deem needful for the immediate and temporary shelter and supply of destitute and suffering refugees, and freedmen, and their wives and children, under such rules and regulations as he may direct.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint an assistant commissioner for each of the States, declared to be in insurrection, not exceeding ten in number, who shall, under the direction of the Commissioner, aid in the execution of the provisions of this act; and he shall give a bond to the Treasurer of the United States in the sum of $20,000, in the form and manner prescribed in the first section of this act. Each of said assistant commissioners shall receive an annual salary of $2,500, in full compensation for all his services. And any military officer may be detailed and assigned to duty under this act without increase of pay or allowances. The Commissioner shall, before the commencement of each regular session of Congress, make full report of his proceedings, with exhibits of the state of his accounts, to the President, who shall communicate the same to Congress, and shall also make special reports whenever required to do so by the President or either House of Congress. And the assistant commissioners shall make quarterly reports of their proceedings to the Commissioner, and also such other special reports as from time to time may be required.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner, under the direction of the President, shall have authority to set apart for the use of loyal refugees and freedmen such tracts of land, within the insurrectionary States, as shall have been abandoned, or to which the United States shall have acquired title by confiscation, or sale, or otherwise. And to every male citizen, whether refugee or freedman, as aforesaid, there shall be assigned not more than forty acres of such land; and the person to whom it is so assigned shall be protected in the use and enjoyment of the land for the term of three years, at an annual rent not exceeding six per cent. upon the value of said land as it was appraised by the State authorities in the year 1860, for the purpose of taxation; and in case no such appraisal can be found, then the rental shall be based upon the estimated value of the land in said year, to be ascertained in such manner as the Commissioner may, by regulation, prescribe. At the end of said term, or at any time during said term, the occupants of any parcels so assigned may purchase the land, and receive such title thereto as the United States can convey, upon paying therefor the value of the land, as ascertained and fixed for the purpose of determining the annual rent as aforesaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

HENRY WILSON,

JAMES HARLAN,

W. T. WILLEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,

JAMES S. ROLLINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. POWELL. I cannot agree to this report. This is a matter of very great importance, indeed, and I move that the report be laid upon the table to allow Senators time to examine it; and let us have a vote upon it when we have a full Senate. That bill will involve an expense to this Government of millions upon millions of dollars, and put these freedmen, as they are called, in a state of peonage. I do not think a more offensive bill has been presented to this Congress, or one that requires greater deliberation and more mature consideration. It will create a multitude of officeholders. It will send them upon these States as the locusts were sent upon Egypt, and they will be quite as destructive to the people there. In my judgment, this report ought to lie upon the table to enable Senators to look at it, and then, to-morrow morning, if the Senate be full and they choose to pass it, very well. I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I cannot vote in favor of this report of the committee of conference. It places this whole subject in the control and under the superintendence of the Secretary of War. It becomes a sort of appendage to the War Department; and the government, if there shall be anything in the shape of government, established among the negro population, will be a sort of military government. For one, I am not in favor of extending that peculiar jurisdiction any further than is required by absolute necessity, and I do not think it is required by necessity to be extended among the blacks. The report is full of imperfections. It is wanting in specification of the powers and authorities given to the commissioners and other officers who are required to act under it. It is a loosely drawn statute—one which, in my opinion, is capable of great abuse, furnishing perpetual occasion for construction and interpretation; wanting in certainty and in precision in all points; and, sir, rather than vote for such a bill as that, anxious as I am to establish a good and salutary system over the freedmen, I prefer to have none at all. This is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. President, I regret that we are forced to enter upon the discussion of this bill at this time of night with so thin a Senate. We have had no opportunity to look at it. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will agree to let it lie over until we can look into it and be prepared to make our remarks upon it. I will agree not to discuss it at any length to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON. It has been forty-eight hours before the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. Does not the Senator know that every minute of our time has been employed; so much so that I did not know this report was printed until it was sent up to the desk to be read? The Senator from Massachusetts knows very well that we have had no time to look into this bill at all; and I doubt whether there is a Senator here, except those who were on the committee of conference, that has even read it over. It is certainly not proper to force a vote on such a bill as this at this time of the night, without giving us one moment to look at it. I can say to Senators who advocate this bill that if they pass it, the time will come very quickly when they will regret it. It will do the poor negro no good. It will do the white man that they attempt to relieve no good. But the result will be that you will send and fasten upon this country a swarm of office-holders who will eat up the substance of the people. Why, sir, it establishes a new bureau; and it places all the abandoned lands in all the rebel districts under the control of these persons, to be rented out and leased out for three years. These overseers and negro-drivers that you are to send down there will be your broken-down politicians and your dilapidated preachers, half theologians and half worldlings. Under this system the southern country will be very much like the carcass when the carrion crow and the buzzard come about. The men who are to go down there and become overseers and negro-drivers will be that description of men who are too lazy to work and just a little too honest to steal. That is the kind of crew that you propose to fasten upon these poor negroes.

Sir, I have more sympathy for the negro than those who desire the passage of this bill. If you make him a free man, and he is worthy of being a free man, allow him to go forth and attend to his own interests in his own way without putting up a set of overseers over him to rent him out, and lease and contract and supervise and superintend him. Why, sir, you had better put these negroes in the poor-house at once than do that. All these officers will have large salaries. The bill is accompanied with a great many details, and, as has been very justly and aptly remarked by the Senator from Michigan, it seems to be wanting in form; it seems to be wanting in particularity. The duties and responsibilities of these officers are not particularly or sharply enough defined. In every respect, from the hasty reading that I have heard at the Secretary's desk, it is imperfect. It is wrong in principle and will work badly in practice.

Sir, I am astonished that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, who has preached so much for negro equality and negro intelligence, now that some of these negroes are turned loose by the policy of his party, thinks so poorly of them as to put masters over them to manage them. I am opposed to placing overseers over freedmen. It would be far better for those poor negroes if you allowed them to stay in a state of slavery than to treat them thus. The master has care for them; he has consideration for them. It is certainly to his interest to protect them so far as to preserve them and feed them and clothe them well. It is their labor that he desires. But, sir, all that care and thoughtfulness that will make the master watch closely over them will not animate these overseers and office-holders you send down there. They will give them that kind of care that the wolf gives the lamb.

In the name of God, sir, do you want one half the people of this country to become salaried officers? Do you wish a bureau for every purpose? Do you intend that every interest of the people of the country shall be managed by bureaus in your War Office and your other Departments? This is a step far in that direction. Here you give up the whole of these abandoned lands to these overseers, or commissioners, or by whatever name you call them. You send them down there, and say they may lease them out for three years to these freedmen. I venture to say that if you pass this bill you will have a thousand of these office-holders hanging about here, when you get sick and tired of this scheme, telling you the negroes cannot be maintained at all unless you have this kind of system upon them. I entreat Senators not to enter upon this kind of legislation without giving time for consideration. The Senate is very thin to-night. Let this report lie on the table. Let us have time to look at it. Let us have time to consider it. Let us have time to vote intelligently upon it.

Mr. COWAN. With the consent of the Senator from Kentucky, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not.

Mr. COWAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cowan, Farwell, Harris, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Conness, Foster, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Nye, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—22.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand that the honorable Senator from Kentucky withdraws his objection to the motion I made that the hour of meeting to-morrow be ten o'clock.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, sir; I withdraw my objection to that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be entertained only by general consent. The Chair hears no objection. It is moved that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I now move to postpone the pending subject—

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not.

Mr. CONNESS. We cannot get a vote to-night upon it, and we can do other business if this is laid aside; and I ask my friend to be reasonable in this matter.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the Senator to be reasonable in this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNESS. I voted with my friend on this subject; but I am satisfied we cannot dispose of it to-night; and I therefore move that the further consideration of this report be postponed until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and declared that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. If the understanding is that the report goes over informally, I shall not object.

Mr. GRIMES. The Chair has the faculty of deciding so promptly to-night that it is impossible for those who are dissatisfied with the decisions to rise in time to call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator calls for a division, the Chair will consider the vote as not being taken.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for a division.

Mr. COWAN. It is too late. The Chair decided it, and no objection was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not too late. If the Senator from Iowa objected, the Chair did not hear it; but Senators must be aware that at this stage of the session it is necessary to transact business as rapidly as possible. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California to postpone the further consideration of this report until to-morrow.

The question being taken, there were, on a division—yeas 13, nays 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Harlan, Howard, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Wiley—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—22.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will withdraw that motion I will make a statement.

Mr. POWELL. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Kentucky is very anxious to examine this report, and our friends here are very anxious to act on some other bills to-night. I wish to have as little time as possible taken in acting on this measure; I am very anxious to get a vote on it, and a vote to-night if possible; but if the Senator and those who act with him will agree to let us have a vote to-morrow I will let it go over.

Mr. SUMNER. Make it the special order for half past ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CONNESS. Do not make it a special order.

Mr. SUMNER. Make it the special order at half past ten o'clock merely to take the vote.

Mr. CONNESS. We cannot afford to make special orders in view of the condition of the appropriation bills. We will do the best we can.

Mr. WILSON. I believe a conference report has a preference, so that it is in order to call it up at any time. I will let it go over, if the Senator from Kentucky wishes to examine it further, with the understanding that we take the vote to-morrow.

Mr. POWELL. I do wish to examine this report and the new bill it presents, and I want to have it voted upon in a full Senate. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts for myself that I will make no factious opposition against it. I cannot covenant, however, for others; but for myself I will make no factious opposition, and I will advise none. That is as far as I can go. I wish to keep all covenants that I make, and I will do so, and I want to make none that I cannot keep.

Mr. GRIMES, (at half past eleven o'clock.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Powell, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—20.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. Now, to accommodate the Senator from Kentucky, I move to postpone the further consideration of the report until to-morrow. I shall then call it up at eleven o'clock; he says he will not want to speak over ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSOLIDATION OF INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the indulgence of the Senate—

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. We can dispose of the bill before us while the Senator from California is calling up his bill.

Mr. CONNESS. If there will be no discussion on that bill I will yield to it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Let us try.

Mr. CONNESS. I give way.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I call for the regular order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 459) to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory, is before the Senate, the question being on its passage.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I wish to say a word on this bill before the vote is taken. This bill proposes a complete revolution in the principles which lie at the bottom of our Indian policy. Hitherto the United States have not assumed to possess political power over the Indian tribes; hitherto we have regarded the Indian tribes in most respects as independent nations. The Confederation treated each of the independent tribes as possessing political sovereignty. That principle was regarded and acted upon by the governments of all the colonies even before the formation of the Confederation. It was acted upon by England in all her intercourse with the Indian tribes. And the principle of the tribal independence of the Indian nations is consecrated by a clause in the Constitution of the United States which declares that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes—a plain recognition of the nationality; if you please, of each one of those Indian tribes; a nationality which is as distinct and independent of us as is the nationality of any foreign country, subject to this limitation and qualification; that as to the lands owned and occupied by the Indian tribes the United States claim and enforce the right of becoming the first purchasers—in that respect, and I believe in no other respect, treating the Indian tribes merely as their wards and friends.

Now, sir, what does this bill propose? It proposes to institute over the Indian tribes, or certain of them, a government established by the authority of Congress, enforced within certain geographical limits by the power of Congress, and enforced over the Indians individually and over their tribes as tribes. I deny that Congress have any power to exercise political authority over the Indian tribes as such. They are as independent of us in this respect as we are of them. This bill declares that "said government," that is the consolidated government, "shall not be permitted to interfere with or to affect in any way the rights of any Indian tribe at peace with the United States residing and being in said Territory, secured by treaty between the United States and such Indians, without the consent of said tribe or tribes, or to affect the authority of the United States to make any regulations respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, which it would have been competent for the United States to make if this act had not taken effect." Let me not be misunderstood, Mr. President, on this subject, and let not Senators be misled as to the effect of this clause:

"That said government shall not be permitted to interfere with or affect in any way the rights of any Indian tribes at peace with the United States residing and being in said Territory, secured by treaty between the United States and such Indians, without the consent of said tribe or tribes."

Leaving all other rights, all other relations which are not affected by a treaty to be regulated by the authority of the United States and not by the authority of the tribes as has always existed heretofore.

Again, sir, this bill, after providing for the appointment of a Governor and secretary of the Territory by the President of the United States, proceeds to declare that the affairs of the Indians within the geographical limits mentioned shall be regulated by a Legislative Council, and that Legislative Council to be composed of Indians elected, and if they cannot be elected for certain reasons stated in the bill, to be appointed by the Governor of the Territory.

Mr. HARLAN. The Legislative Council may be elected by the tribes; but if for any cause they shall not elect, the chiefs, to be taken in the order of their authority in the tribe, are to be members of the Council.

Mr. HOWARD. I think I am not mistaken as to the clause to which I refer; but it is not material; I do not mean to misrepresent the bill, nor have I any doubt of the pure intentions of the very competent Indian Committee of this body who reported the bill. I do not rise to find any fault with them, or censure them in any degree, or impute anything but the best intentions to them; but, sir, the bill proceeds:

"That the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects and matters pertaining to the intercourse of the Indian tribes in said Territory, and the administration of internal justice and the punishment of crimes, and the civilization and improvement of the people, consistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Now, sir, I ask the honorable committee who reported this bill where in the Constitution they find authority given to the Congress of the United States to enact penal laws for the punishment of Indians, members of Indian tribes? Of course none whatever. That principle has been decided often by the courts.

Mr. HARLAN. With the Senator's consent, I will explain. It is not intended that Congress shall pass laws on that subject, but that the Indians themselves shall do it; and the bill proceeds in another clause to declare that the rules and regulations of the Indian tribes themselves shall be recognized.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Has the Governor a veto?

Mr. HARLAN. He has a veto on the bills the Council pass, to prevent them making any law which would be in conflict with the civil policy of this Government, and I will say to the Senate that it is not new so far as that feature is concerned. We have heretofore provided repeatedly for the consolidation of Indian tribes by their consent; this only provides for it with their consent.

Mr. HOWARD. There is the distinction: this bill provides for the coercive consolidation of these Indian tribes.

Mr. HARLAN. Not at all.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes. The consent of the Indians is not to be given to the appointment of the Governor, is it? Nor to the appointment of the secretary, is it? The consent of the Indians has nothing to do with the passage of the bill here. We send a Governor among them, and a secretary of the Territory. This is the excuse upon which this new Indian government is passed.

Mr. HARLAN. If it is not annoying to the Senator to be interrupted by me, I think we shall get to a proper understanding in that way. The Governor is superintendent of Indian affairs; we have him there now exercising the same authority substantially that this bill provides for.

Mr. HOWARD. Undoubtedly; but let me proceed with my argument. By what authority is it that justice is administered or crime punished, in the language of the bill, in this Indian Territory? The answer plainly is the authority of the United States. The whole proceeding takes place in pursuance of act of Congress, under the authority of Congress, and without that act of Congress it would not take place. Now, the point which I make is that Congress has no power to interfere in this matter; it has no jurisdiction whatever.

Mr. HARLAN. Allow me to explain. This is being done now constantly in an irregular mode; the Indian agents do this now. If an Indian steals of another Indian, he is arrested by authority of the Indian agent, and he decides as between the parties. This bill proposes that it shall be done by a court regularly constituted, and not by an Indian agent, who is frequently appointed without reference to his judicial capacity.

Mr. HOWARD. It can hardly be said that this legal proceeding depends entirely on the will of the Indian, when in the same bill it is provided that any judgment rendered by that court may be taken by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I take it that is a tolerably accurate test as to the source of the power which is exercised in this case.

It seems to me to be an attempt—for I wish to consume no time on the subject—to extend over the Indian tribes a jurisdiction which is entirely a stranger to them, which is unwelcome to them, inconsistent with their habits, and I fear destructive of their nationality, destructive of their interests and of their habits. Sir, I think we have no authority to intermeddle with their affairs in this way. We treat with them as independent nations; we have recognized them as such a thousand times; what right have we, then, to undertake to treat them as subject to our laws, or to subject them to a jurisdiction which emanates exclusively from us? It is a novelty, Mr. President; it has not been before the country at all. The bill was laid on our tables on the 20th of last month. I really have not had an opportunity to read the bill through even at this moment. I think it will take the whole country by surprise. I think instead of promoting the interests of the Indian tribes it will be destructive of those interests, and I am not prepared at this period of the session to embark in what is to me so dangerous a novelty as this consolidation Indian bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, I was very much struck with the remark of the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] as to the length of the time which I had occupied in my remarks upon this bill. It is amazing how much longer a speech seems to those who hear it than it does to him who makes it. While the Senator from California, listening to my remarks, was under the impression that I had been speaking an hour, I thought I had been speaking much less, and inasmuch as I am enabled to quote from the clock, I can show just how long I was speaking, and how much he was mistaken in this case. As a general rule I admit, having had some experience in this matter, that those who listen judge more accurately as to the time occupied than they who speak. I began to speak at twenty minutes past ten. I was interrupted occasionally, and the Senator from California was making his remarks as to the fact that the clock had not then quite got round to the hour; it was five minutes before eleven; so that I was on the floor from twenty minutes past ten until five minutes before eleven.

Mr. NESMITH. The Senator will permit me to say that I think I can decide that question, for I am a disinterested judge, because I did not listen to either of them. [Laughter.] I think the Senator from Connecticut spoke the longest. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. I am not comparing the length of time, I am only submitting to the Senator from California that he was mistaken. I was upon the floor just thirty-five minutes, during which time the Senator from California, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Kansas, and several others whom I have forgotten, occupied their two, three, four, or five minutes apiece, leaving me only about twenty minutes, which to the Senator from California seemed an hour. Now, I confess to him in all candor that I have frequently been as much mistaken when he has been speaking, and when he has not spoken more than twenty or twenty-five minutes it has seemed to me an hour at the very least. I presume it is the experience of all of us who listen that those who speak seem to speak about twice as long as they really do, and probably four times as long as they themselves think they do. But, sir, this is by the way. It is aside from the question.

I agree entirely with what the honorable Senator from Michigan has said in regard to the power of Congress to legislate over these Indian tribes. We have no power whatever. We have no more right to legislate for these Indians than we have to legislate for the people of Mexico, or of any European nation; and there is a kind of meanness in undertaking to exercise power over those who cannot resist which the United States ought not to be guilty of. If we want to try our strength in legislation or otherwise let us choose a Power, I will not say equal to us, for those Powers are rare, but let us choose one that has some ability to offer resistance. Do not let us fasten upon a poor Indian tribe who are subject to us and who are powerless in our hands.

Mr. President, as to the provision in this bill that no legislation of this sort and no power which this bill contemplates shall be exercised over these people without their consent, it is too transparent a humbug to receive any consideration here. How is this tribe to give consent? We appoint these officers and make this a Territory of the United States, with the Indians' consent. Who is to ascertain whether they give their consent or not, and how is this consent to be obtained? Does the bill intimate the manner that they shall give their consent?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Expressly by treaty stipulations.

Mr. FOSTER. With whom shall that treaty be made?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. With the tribe.

Mr. FOSTER. With the tribe. Who is the chief of that tribe?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Colonel Browning is the acting chief.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, he is not the chief of the tribe, but another man is chief.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Let me correct the Senator. The Cherokees elect a first chief and a second chief, and require them to take an oath. The election has taken place since John Ross has been in Philadelphia. He must be there to take oath. Browning is there and has taken the oath. Ross has not been there, and will not go there in my opinion; and the Senator is speaking in behalf of a man who is rejected by his people.

Mr. FOSTER. It happens very much as I anticipated. The man who will give his consent to this legislation will be the organ of the tribe, and the man who refuses his consent will be the cast-off man of the tribe, and that will be the way the consent will be obtained.

I repeat it, the men who refuse consent will be the men without authority. They have not taken the oath, they are not in communion with the tribe! The men who do give the consent will be the men of authority, and when they give their consent, then the authority and jurisdiction under this territorial bill is complete and may be exercised; and, Mr. President, I will agree, with a barrel of whisky, to procure the consent of that tribe. Senators around me suggest it would take two barrels. I do not know in regard to the precise effect of one or two barrels. As it will be managed, it seems to me that this whole matter of consent is an outrage; it will be obtained to a certainty, and there will be no power on earth for these Cherokees to say "no" to this treaty. Those who say no will be disloyal, will be unfaithful, and any chief who attempts to stand in the way of this legislation will be a rebel! It is said that a portion of the tribe is disloyal. It will be easy to make this charge against any man who does not admit the propriety of this legislation! Make a charge of disloyalty against him and that he does not represent the tribe because he has not complied with their requirements, and there will be no difficulty in getting consent!

Mr. President, if there is any honesty in this provision stipulating that consent is to be obtained, there is no need to pass this act until the next session of Congress. Make the treaty between this and the next Congress; and after the treaty is made authorizing legislation of this description it will be time to initiate it. To initiate the legislation prior to making the treaty is what we would never do with a nation that had any power to resist. But now, over these Indians, we make this stipulation, having the power in our own hands to compel their consent, with the understanding that they shall consent, and whether they do or not, this legislation is to take effect.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate longer on this bill. I simply ask for the yeas and nays on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire to say one word only. My anxiety for the passage of this bill this session grows out of the fact that this Territory, which is utterly disorganized, bounds upon our State, and our State feels deep interest in the passage of the bill and the organization of the Territory immediately.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, I look upon this legislation, as asked for by the Senator from Kansas now, as being an outrage on one of the best bodies of Indian tribes there is or has been in our country. It is true they are now disorganized, destroyed; but we have no right to compel them or compress them as is proposed, and that kind of outrage, although it may be not important to us as a Government, is an outrage on humanity.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, and Van Winkle—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Foster, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Willey, and Wilson—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morrill, Richardson, Riddle, Sausbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—24.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 390) relating to the postal laws.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JUSTIN S. MORRILL of Vermont, Mr. SAMUEL HOOPER of Massachusetts, and Mr. GEORGE H. PENDLETON of Ohio, managers at the same on the part of the House.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 744) disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and

On motion by Mr. DOOLITTLE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. COWAN, and Mr. VAN WINKLE.

SAN JOSÉ MISSION LANDS.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to take up House bill No. 775.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 775) for the relief of the occupants of the lands of the ex-mission of San José, in the State of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert a substitute.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not think the amendment need be read; but I will state the substance of the bill and the amendment. I shall not even take up the time of the Senate by calling for the yeas and nays. The bill as it comes from the House of Representatives provides that the settlers on a certain private land claim in California shall have the right to enter at $1 25 an acre the lands which they purchased, and which they have cultivated and improved, according to the line of a survey they themselves have agreed on. I believe the survey was prosecuted by a deputy surveyor of the United States. Of course it was informal, but I have no doubt it was correct. The amendment of the committee proposes a general law to dispose of all private land claims that shall have been rejected by the judicial authorities, and provides that the occupant may hold one hundred and sixty acres for his improvements; that the residue shall be appraised; that the improvements and the land shall be appraised separately; that the land shall be put up to the highest bidder; and that if any other than the original owner of the improvements shall bid it off he shall pay the owner of the improvements their appraised value. I shall not ask for the yeas and nays upon it; but I think the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands is right in principle.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say now, in response, that the Senate may understand the question, that the statement of the Senator from Iowa is correct in regard to the original position of this land; but these parties settled upon it, and have been there for ten or fifteen years past; their improvements do not consist alone of houses and fences, but of orchards, of vineyards, of the most advanced improvements in the State of California; and to disturb the lines of the survey would ruin and destroy their property. They believed that they bought a good title, and they paid an extravagant price for that title. Now they are willing to pay the Government again. The purchase of this land from the Government at $1 25 an acre will net between forty and fifty thousand dollars at once to the Treasury. The passage of a general law such as is suggested by the Senator from Iowa, while it might do where everything had to be begun de novo upon a ranche, as we term it, would not do at all, and would be utterly destructive of the interests of the settlers, so far as these mission lands are concerned. It applies to the celebrated Santa Clara valley, the old mission of San José, one of the most advanced communities in California. The original bill has been passed by the House of Representatives, and I hope the substitute will not be adopted. I am willing that the vote shall be taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose there is not a quorum here. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that an amendment is reported by that committee to this bill which is not acceptable to the Senator from California, and that a vote is to be taken either upon the amendment or upon the bill, and it cannot be done by yeas and nays, because that vote would disclose the fact that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. HARLAN. I did not say I would ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I understand the honorable Senator did not. I am simply asking whether, under the circumstances, it is right and proper to go on and legislate.

Mr. CONNESS. I apprehend that there is a quorum here.

Mr. FOSTER. At this hour of the night it is certainly improper, with so thin a Senate, to consider matters about which there is dispute.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe I may state that the chairman of the committee is not strenuous in this case.

Mr. STEWART. And the committee is divided.

Mr. FOSTER. Whether the chairman be strenuous or not, I suppose, is not the question. It may be that the man who is in the right is not as strenuous as he who is in the wrong. It sometimes happens that a man who is in the wrong is the more strenuous, and that because he is in the wrong. I submit, simply as a matter on which I think we ought to deliberate, whether it is best at this hour of the night, with a bare quorum, if, indeed, we have one, to legislate about a disputable matter affecting titles to land which is said to be among the most valuable in our Golden State.

Mr. CONNESS. Made so by these people.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not doubting that they have very important rights, but I submit whether we may not be voting away titles to property of very great value without really knowing one thing about the whole matter.

Mr. CONNESS. I will not reply to the Senator, but leave the question to the Senate.

Mr. HOWARD. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Let us take a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is on the amendment, the reading of which has been dispensed with by unanimous consent.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, as I understand it, this bill comes from the Committee on Public Lands, recommended by them with an amendment. We refuse, without hearing the amendment or the bill read, to accept the amendment, and now the question is on the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I am willing to have the bill read. I think when the Senator hears it he will determine how just it is.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not ask to have it read. I do not interfere with the matter at all. I only suggest that this strikes me as being peculiar legislation.

Mr. CONNESS. Do we not know that?

Mr. NYE. The precedent was last year adopted here in this body. They gave to one man who was similarly situated about nine thousand acres, and I take it for granted the same rule that was adopted by a full Senate last year should be adopted now. It is a mere matter of justice.

Mr. NESMITH. As I understand this bill, there can possibly be no person's right interfered with. This bill is accompanied by a map which shows the amount of ground that each man claims, and there are no outside claimants, no litigants, no parties who profess to have any rights that can be interfered with if this bill passes.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; the land is in the peaceful possession of these people.

Mr. NESMITH. It is ground in peaceful possession of the occupants; they have all agreed among themselves as to the lines, and all they ask is the privilege of paying the Government $1 25 an acre. It strikes me as a very simple proposition, and one which cannot compromise the rights of any other parties.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The facts are substantially as stated by my friend from Oregon. There is no one to be damaged. Prices have been paid for this property, very large prices, by the parties in possession, and it is nothing more than simple justice to allow them to acquire title under the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading. It was read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL LAWS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the message of the House of Representatives, informing the Senate that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 390) relating to the postal laws; which report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 390) relating to the postal laws, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows, to wit:

First, that the House recede from their amendment striking out the first section of said bill, and agree to the same amended to read as follows; to wit:

"That all domestic letters, except letters lawfully franked, and duly certified letters of soldiers and mariners in the service of the United States, which are deposited for mailing in any post office of the United States, on which the postage is unpaid, shall be sent by the postmaster to the dead-letter office in Washington; and all letters deposited for mailing, paid only in part, shall be forwarded to destination charged with the unpaid rate, to be collected on delivery."

Second, that the House recede from their third, fourth, and fifth amendments.

J. COLLAMER,
S. C. POMEROY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. COLE,
J. BROOKS,
J. M. ASHLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

FREEDMEN'S SAVINGS BANK.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 443.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. SUMNER. The bill need not be read, only the amendment, which is a substitute. The names in the first section need not be read. Begin at the eighteenth line, with the words "are constituted a body corporate."

Mr. BROWN. I move to dispense with the reading. Let the Senator state whether it is an ordinary savings bank charter.

Mr. SUMNER. It is an ordinary savings bank charter, and its character is indicated in its title, to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. POWELL. No extraordinary privileges?
Mr. SUMNER. No extraordinary privileges, and its object is a simple charity.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have read the bill; it is in proper form, and the only question is whether we ought to establish such an institution outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Pennsylvania was a member of the committee that considered it, and it was reported certainly with his consent.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The form of it is unobjectionable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading can be dispensed with by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I object.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope my friend from California will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I object to the whole thing.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment reported as a substitute for the bill, but before concluding the reading,

Mr. McDOUGALL. I withdraw the call.

The further reading was dispensed with.

Mr. POWELL. I find by the reading of that bill that it is a roving kind of commission for these persons to establish a savings bank in any part of the United States. I think the bill is wholly unconstitutional. I do not believe Congress has any right to establish a savings bank outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, let it be limited to the District. Let the amendment be made by inserting after the words "body-corporate" in the nineteenth line of the first section the words "in the District of Columbia." That is precisely the amendment which was made last night in the bill founding the asylum.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. In section fourteen, I move to insert at the close of the section the words "except the president and vice president." It is supposed these gentlemen may be in active duty, and that therefore the trustees should not be prevented from giving them compensation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. Then in the first line of the next section I propose to insert the words "president and vice president," so as to read "that the president and vice president, the subordinate agents and officers of the corporation, shall respectively give security."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. POWELL, its title was amended by the addition of the words "in the District of Columbia."

PORTAGE LAKE SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up House bill No. 745, granting land to the State of Michigan to aid in building a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior.

The question was put, and it was declared that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask if that bill has been referred to any committee of this body?

Mr. HOWARD. It has not been referred. It is a bill which has been passed by the House of Representatives, and I do not think there is any necessity for referring it. I will say that a similar bill, one almost identical with this, has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands of this body and reported back favorably. The difference between the two bills is very trifling, consisting chiefly in a few phrases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The engrossed copy of this bill is not in possession of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I object to its consideration if it has not been to a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been taken up on motion, one objection cannot prevent its consideration.

Mr. BROWN. It cannot be read more than once on the same day if objection be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill cannot be read a third time to-day if objection be made.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not take any such advantage as this. I will state to him that the bill simply makes an appropriation of land to enable the State of Michigan to make a ship-canal a distance of about a mile and a half on Lake Superior, connecting two navigable waters. It will save a navigation of more than a hundred miles from the Sault Ste. Marie to the head of Lake Superior, and of course more than a hundred miles on the return, saving in a single voyage to the navigator more than two hundred miles of lake navigation. It will cost the Government nothing except a few sections of land to the mile. The whole work is to be carried on by the State of Michigan. The land is to be granted of course to the State of Michigan, to be applied by that State for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill having been read twice to-day, it cannot receive its third reading without unanimous consent. The Senator from Missouri is understood to object.

Mr. BROWN. I do not wish to take any unfair advantage of the Senator from Michigan in regard to this bill; but I understand it has not received the scrutiny of the committee of this body which is invested with the examination of such matters. I have no reason to suppose that it is in conformity with their judgment or their action, and unless some member of that committee who has examined the bill will undertake to satisfy the Senate on the subject, I shall object to it. If they will give any satisfactory explanation of it I do not desire to persist in the objection.

Mr. HARLAN. It is impossible for the Committee on Public Lands to know what this bill is, as it is in manuscript, as I understand, not having been printed; but what is understood to be substantially the same bill has been before the committee, and the committee approve of the object and have reported it. If the bill is on the Secretary's desk we can hear it read, and then decide whether it conforms to the general principles observed in similar cases or not.

Mr. HOWARD. It was there this afternoon. I saw the engrossed bill.

Mr. BROWN. I do not wish to interpose an objection myself if other Senators are satisfied with the character of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER.) The bill is not here, the Chair understands.

WYANDOTTE MISSION CHURCH.

Mr. POMEROY. I have a bill which I should like to have passed by unanimous consent. It was ruled out as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill on a technicality, and unless it is passed now by unanimous consent it cannot be passed at all. There was no objection to it; the chairman of the Committee on Finance did not object to the measure, but only to putting it upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. HOWARD. If my bill does not lose its place I have no objection to receiving that.

Mr. POMEROY. This bill is to pay for a church destroyed belonging to the Wyandotte Indians.

There being no objection, leave was given to introduce a bill (S. No. 485) for the relief of trustees of the missionary church of Wyandotte Indians; and it was read three times and passed. In order to reimburse Jacob Whitecrow and others, trustees or stewards of the Wyandotte mission of the Kansas conference of the Methodist Episcopal church of the Wyandotte nation of Indians in Kansas, for the destruction of their church building, parsonage, and library, the sum of $6,000 is to be appropriated to be applied in rebuilding the buildings and improvements and improving the parsonage.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I think it is important to have a short executive session of five minutes to read and refer the messages. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to say that there is a perfect copy of the bill which I called up now on the Clerk's desk as it passed the House of Representatives. It seems that the engrossed bill has been taken by the printer from the Clerk's table and carried to the printing office without authority, because there was no order for the printing of the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think we had better try to pass a bill which is not in the possession of the Senate. If it was in the possession of the Senate, I would not object. I move an executive session.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope we shall pass this bill.

Mr. POMEROY. If it is in the possession of the Senate I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is no bill before the Senate from the House. The Senator from Michigan can introduce a bill if he wishes to do so and the Senate consent.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 2, 1865.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. COX. I rise to a privileged question. I call up and withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the select committee on the rules of the House of Representatives was ordered to be printed, in order that it may be brought before the House for action. I do not think that it will detain the House long, and may be disposed of now as well as at any other time. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

The Clerk read, as follows:

The select committee on the rules of the House of Representatives report the following resolutions:

Resolved, That rule 74 be amended so as to add to the standing committees to be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, and to consist of nine members each—Committee on Appropriations.
Committee on Banking and Currency.

Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Said amendment to take effect from and after the close of the present Congress.

Resolved, That the following be added to the standing rules of the House from and after the close of the present Congress:

Rule — It shall be the duty of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relative to railroads or telegraph lines between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast as shall be presented or shall come in question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient.

Rule — It shall be the duty of the Committee of Ways and Means to take into consideration all reports of the Treasury Department, and such other propositions relative to raising revenue and providing ways and means for the support of the Government as shall be presented or shall come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereon by bill or otherwise as to them shall seem expedient.

Rule — It shall be the duty of the Committee on Banking and Bank Currency to take into consideration all propositions relative to banking and the currency as shall be presented or shall come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report thereon by bill or otherwise.

Resolved, That from and after the close of the present Congress rule 76 be amended as follows: strike out all after the word "consideration," in line two, to and including the word "expenditure," in line six, and insert in lieu thereof, "all executive communications, and such other propositions in regard to carrying on the several Departments of the Government as may be presented and referred to them by the House."

Strike out in line one the words "Ways and Means," where they occur, and insert in lieu thereof the words "on appropriations."

Resolved, That from and after the close of the present Congress rule 77 be amended by striking out the words "of Ways and Means," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on appropriations."

Mr. COX. I have nothing to say in relation to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, for I think that will recommend itself to the House at once.

In relation to the division of the Committee of Ways and Means, I desire to show the importance and immensity of the labor imposed upon that committee, with a view to a division of the labor. It is not proposed, as seems to be inferred by some gentlemen, to strike out the Committee of Ways and Means, although it might appear so on a superficial reading. We still preserve the Committee of Ways and Means, eo nomine; and if the rules are properly read with the amendments it will so appear.

We divide the Ways and Means into three committees. The Ways and Means are still preserved, and their future duty is to provide "ways and means," that is, raise revenue for carrying on the Government. This includes of course the tariff, the internal revenue, the loan bills, legal-tender notes, and all other matters connected with supporting the credit and raising money. The amendments confine the duty of the Committee of Ways and Means simply to ways and means. That was their original and proper sphere.

The proposed Committee on Appropriations have, under this amendment, the examination of the estimates of the Departments, and exclusively the consideration of all appropriations. I need not dilate upon the importance of having hereafter one committee to investigate with nicest heed all matters connected with economy. The tendency of the time is to extravagance in private and in public. We require of this new committee their whole labor in the restraint of extravagant and illegal appropriations.

As to the Committee on National Banks and Currency, that is not necessarily connected with the other committees. They have a different province. They have in charge all the bank interests of the country. These interests are so connected by the relations of exchanges and currency with bank issues and banking capital in the States that it is as much as one committee can well do to study these questions properly. It is utterly impossible in the present condition of our finances that one committee can do all this labor and do it as well as these interests demand. The committee on rules do not by this measure mean to cast any reflection upon the Committee of Ways and Means. They have labored faithfully, and no set of men, however enduring their patience, studious their habits, or gigantic their mental grasp, when overburdened with the labor incident to the existing monetary condition of the country growing out of this unparalleled civil strife, can do this labor as well as the people have a right to expect of their Representatives. Therefore we propose to divide the labor of the Committee of Ways and Means. We would not, and could not if we would, dim the luster of their names, or depreciate the value of their services. I think that they have been well selected by the Speaker. They do not need any compliment from me. It is hardly necessary to mention them in order that the House may recall their conspicuous ability, their indefatigable industry, their abundant information, their legal talents, and their knowledge of finance. These qualities have all been brought into requisition, and well worked, perhaps overworked, in this Congress. The gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] who has had charge, for the most part, of the tariff bills, whatever may be said of his economic system, is a statesman whose information is coextensive with all the diversified interests of the country. He would perhaps, in a future Congress, take charge of one of these new committees.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] who has had great familiarity with the banking interests of his own State, would perhaps have charge of the Committee on Banks and Currency. The distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. STEVENS] would, doubtless have charge of that committee which has reference to revenue, loans, and legal tender. All the members of the committee here labored diligently.

A MEMBER. You are omitting the other members of the Ways and Means.

Mr. COX. By omitting the other members of the committee I do not mean that they are not also entitled to the thanks of the House. My courteous colleague in front of me, [Mr. PENDLETON,] so well representing the interests of the West, in whose Queen city he lives; the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Blow,] as elegant in manner as he is eloquent in speech, representing another great western city; and still further West, the urbane and accomplished member from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] the sterling, practical statesman of the old school from Kentucky, [Mr. MALLORY,] and the courtly gentleman [Mr. PRYOR] who represents the Empire State with its immense interests on land and sea, are all embodied in the distinguished head of the committee, [Mr. STEVENS,] who combines with great decision of character the abilities of all, without losing his own conspicuous individuality.

Each member of the Ways and Means has his specialty—each Olympian; and as Spenser describes the gods,

"Each easy to be known by his own visdomie,
But Jove above them all by his great looks and power imperial."

And yet, sir, powerful as the committee is constituted, even their powers of endurance, physical and mental, are not adequate to the great duty which has been imposed by the emergencies of this historic time. It is an old adage, that "who-so wanteth rest will also want of might;" and even an Olympian would faint and flag if the burden of Atlas is not relieved by the broad shoulders of Hercules.

I might give here a detailed statement of the amount of business thrown upon that committee since the commencement of the war. But I prefer to append it to my remarks. Whereas before the war we scarcely expended more than $70,000,000 a year, now, during the five sessions of the last two Congresses, there has been an average appropriation of at least $800,000,000 per session. The statement which I hold in my hand shows that during the first and extra session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress there came appropriation bills from the Committee of Ways and Means amounting to $226,691,457.99. I say nothing now of the loan and other fiscal bills emanating from that committee. During the second session of that Congress bills were reported to the amount of $883,029,987.14; and during the last session of that Congress $972,827,829.90. During the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress appropriation bills were reported amounting to $788,124,021.94, and during the present session I suppose it would be a fair estimate to take the appropriations of the last session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, say $900,000,000!

These are appropriation bills alone. They are stupendous, and but poorly symbolize the immense labors which the internal revenue, tariff, and loan bills imposed on the committee. Neither do they represent the actual appropriations; for the House has frequently increased these bills enormously. The aggregate of these appropriation bills reaches the astounding amount of $3,770,673,296.97, or nearly four thousand million dollars! For the Army alone the appropriation bills during the past five sessions are over three thousand millions! And this business of appropriations is perhaps not one half of the labor of the committee. There are various and important matters upon which they act, but upon which they never report. Their duties comprehend all the varied interests of the United States; every element and branch of industry, and every dollar or dime of value. They are connected with taxation, tariffs, banking, loan bills, and ramify to every fiber of the body-politic. All the springs of wealth and labor are more or less influenced by the action of this committee. Their responsibility is immense, and their control almost imperial over the necessities, comforts, homes, hopes, and destinies of the people. All the values of the United States, which in the census of 1860 (page 194) amount to nearly seventeen thousand million dollars, or, to be exact, $16,159,616,068, are affected by the action of that committee, even before their action is approved by the House. Those values fluctuate whenever the head of the Ways and Means rises in his place and proposes a measure. The price of every article we use trembles when he proposes a gold bill, or a loan bill, or any bill to tax directly or indirectly. In ten years these values increased at the rate of more than one hundred and twenty-six per cent., adding in one decade $8,925,481,011 to our real and personal property. Since this war began these values have been drawn upon to give credit and cash to the Government, and so drawn upon that one half of the increase and one fourth of all of these values are already practically under mortgage. Can one committee properly pass upon the immense interests thus bound up, and reaching down to other generations? Not only every rood of land has now to sustain its living occupant, but it has to sustain soldiers in the field and sailors on the sea, who are not producing, but destroying, what is wrought from the soil. Nay, more, it has to pay its tribute to the creditor of the nation, not only in the present, but to the inheritor of our national bonds. The laborer who works now his ten hours per diem must work four hours more for the creditor of the nation. Thus is our nation being overburdened by the legislation of to-day; burdened for the present and for the future. Is it not best to give every facility for the crystallization of the wisest financial policy? And does not this measure assume greater importance because of its far-reaching effects upon our finances and our future? Without discussing the wisdom of our present system of finance, is it not important, in this day when these debts are growing, to have the system as nearly safe and just as possible? Have we not already, like other nations, instead of providing for the principal, provided only for the interest of these great debts? What follows? That money borrowed, being obtained without sweat or sacrifice, is spent lightly, without economy or care. Dr. Arnold well says, that "a revenue raised at the expense of posterity is sure to be squandered wastefully. Waste begets want, and the sums raised by loans will commonly be large." If that be true, is it not a cogent reason for the separation of the old committee which borrows from the committee which pays? One will be a veto on the other; and something of economy may be gained, and something of extravagance restrained.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss this change of our rules in its details. But is there not a necessity for some change? Is it not wise to divide such labors as have been described? Who wishes to overwork any set of gentlemen in this or any future Congress? There are gentlemen who will be in the next Congress when this change shall take effect, who will be glad to share with the old committee the solution of these financial problems. These problems are soon to agitate the country above all other questions. Peace and war depend upon them. They rise higher than peace or war. They rise higher than the freedom and slavery of the blacks. Perpetual and enormous debt is slavery for body and mind. Hence the interests connected with these economical questions are of all questions those most momentous for the future. Parties, statesmanship, union, stability, all depend upon the manner in which these questions are dealt with. Shall the tariff be one of bounty or of revenue only? Shall a Chinese policy ward off all foreign interchange from our shores? Or shall protection, so long abandoned by the scientific and practical men of our generation, be again introduced into our economy? Shall taxes be levied equally on the rich and poor? Shall the funded debt of this nation be paid to the few in gold by the sweat of the many? Shall labor be held in thrall and branded as the serf of capital? Shall one interest or section be pampered at the expense and poverty of another? Shall we forever bury and keep buried the symmetric system of a gold and silver currency, as the standard of the Constitution and of nature, under the lush growth of greenbacks and paper promises? When this war shall end, and the present inflation has collapsed; when the "stocks on hand" of merchant and capitalist shall have suffered in the wreck of credit and crash of paper money; when "settling day" shall come and the meretricious splendors of fictitious wealth shall fade; when the diamonds of to-day shall become the paste of to-morrow; when speculation shall no longer flaunt its upstart pretension in the face of merit and modesty; when a common ruin shall engulf both poor and rich; when the gilded vessel gliding so smoothly over this smooth summer sea of delusive prosperity shall meet the "whirlwind's sweepy way," then who will direct the whirlwind and who temper the storm? Why not now, in the present, look these dangers in the face, and by prescience avert them? As an adjunct in this work, let these finance committees have time and opportunity to do their work, and then it may be well done. This can only be done by a division of their labor as proposed by this amendment. Whichever party deals by these questions most nearly in the interests of labor—the procraestic source of all wealth and taxes—that party will have and keep the ascendancy in the political control of the Government.

There is one thing especially which calls for the division of this Committee of Ways and Means. We know that there is a complaint throughout the country, not partisan by any means, that our promises to pay are so various that the people, upon whom the credit of this Government rests, cannot readily understand them. Scarcely any two creditors of the Government have the same kind of promise to pay from the Government. We have the ten-forties, the five-twenties, the certificates of indebtedness, the legal-tender notes, the notes bearing interest and the notes not bearing interest, securities bearing interest in gold and securities bearing interest in paper, until scarcely two creditors of the Government have the same sort of obligations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he is very doubtful as to whether a discussion as to the variety of the public securities is legitimate on a motion to amend the rules of the House.

Mr. COX. There was never anything more legitimate, in my judgment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is going beyond the legitimate limits of debate.

Mr. COX. No one has raised a question of order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's speech is legitimate, then a discussion of everything connected with the finances of the Government would be legitimate, and the Chair thinks it would not be.

Mr. COX. Perhaps the Speaker misapprehended me. I did not intend to argue these questions; but to state them only. I wished to show the necessity of having these questions properly investigated with a view to educe some order out of this chaos. That was the tenor of my argument, and nothing more. I do not propose to argue the merits of any of these obligations. Here is the statement from which I have deduced my argument for the proposed amendment:

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. COX. I will give the gentleman ten minutes of my time.

Mr. BLAINE. I have a little grievance, Mr. Speaker, which may be appropriately referred to here. At the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of amending the Constitution so as to allow Congress to levy an export tax. At the beginning of this session the matter was referred anew to the Ways and Means Committee, on the suggestion of some of its members, and from that day to this, owing to the great pressure of business before that committee, nothing has been heard of the measure. Now, had it been allowed to remain before the Judiciary Committee it would have been reported long since and could have been fully discussed pro and con, and a conclusion of some kind reached thereon. I had a great desire to submit some remarks on the subject, and though not pertinent to the pending question, I hope under the circumstances I may be allowed to introduce my remarks here. I observe my friend from Pennsylvania is very anxious to hear me.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman is mistaken. I am not in the least anxious to hear a speech on any subject.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that it is a very grave step for Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. A change in that "great charter of our rights and liberties" should be made only after the most mature deliberation and under the conviction of an imperious public necessity. There has always been in the American mind a well-founded and justifiable prejudice against tampering with the provisions of our organic law—a prejudice so settled and so strong that it has been overcome in but three instances since the organization of our Government in 1789. I trust and confidently believe that the fourth instance will be found in the adoption of that great amendment in the interest of impartial freedom which Congress has so recently submitted to the States for their acceptance or rejection.

I speak now in advocacy of a fifth amendment—one which in my judgment is absolutely essential to the financial success of the Government, and to the commercial, manufacturing, and agricultural prosperity of our country in all future time. It is an amendment which I had the honor to propose during the last session of Congress, and which was embodied in the following resolution adopted by the House on my motion, on the 24th of March, 1864:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be directed to inquire into the expediency of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States by striking out the fifth clause of section nine, article one, which forbids the levying of a tax on articles exported from any State.

The subject was referred anew, in December last, to the Committee of Ways and Means, and it was expected until very recently that it would be brought before the House for definite action before the expiration of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. The pressure of public measures already on the Calendar seems now to forbid all hope of securing a vote on the proposition during this session; but I cannot allow the occasion to pass without saying a few words in defense and support of the proposed amendment, and of the great change which it contemplates in the future administration of our system of taxation and finance.

The subject of taxing exports—or rather of giving Congress the power to do it—was discussed at great length in the Convention of 1787; and one of the marked errors of subsequent times is the very general belief that the Convention inserted the constitutional prohibition by a very decisive vote. Another erroneous belief, quite as current as the foregoing, is that which attributes the advocacy of the prohibitory clause to the Southern or "staple States," as George Mason termed them, and the opposition thereto to the northern States. The facts of history do not sustain either of these assumptions, as I shall proceed to show by a record that is undisputed and indisputable.

Any one who will take the pains to peruse the synopsis of the debates of the Constitutional Convention as given in the Madison Papers will be struck with the fact that many of the strongest men of that august body—the really far-sighted statesmen among its members—were opposed to the insertion of the clause prohibiting a tax on exports; and of these there were even more conspicuous examples from the South than from the North.

Mr. Madison himself, at one point of the discussion, expressed himself thus:

"As we ought to be governed by national and permanent views, it is a sufficient argument for giving the power over exports that a tax, though it may not be expedient at present, may be so hereafter. A proper regulation of exports may, and probably will, be necessary hereafter, and for the same purposes as the regulation of imports, namely, for revenue, for domestic manufactures, and for procuring equitable regulations from other nations."

At another stage of the debate on the same important subject Mr. Madison spoke as follows:

"First, the power of laying taxes on exports is proper in itself, and as the States cannot with propriety exercise it separately it ought to be vested in them collectively; secondly, it might with particular advantage be exercised with regard to articles in which America is not rivaled in foreign markets, as tobacco, &c.; thirdly, the southern States being most in danger, and most needing naval protection, could the less complain if the burden should fall somewhat heaviest on them."

Mr. John Dickinson, of Delaware said that

"The power of taxing exports might be inconvenient at present, but it must be of dangerous consequence to prohibit it with respect to all articles and forever."

Mr. Gouverneur Morris, of Pennsylvania, in reply to what he regarded as sectional arguments, remarked that "Local considerations should not impede the general interest. He considered the taxing of exports to be in many cases highly politic. All countries having peculiar articles tax the exportation of them, as France her wines and brandies."

And he added in another place:

"That the state of our own country would change, and render duties on exports of peculiar raw materials politic in the view of encouraging American manufactures."

And he concluded by declaring that taxes on exports would be often more proper and easy than taxes on imports, and that

"To prohibit it was so radically objectionable that it might cost the whole system the support of some members."

Mr. James Wilson, from the same State, one of the purest and ablest men of the Convention, followed Mr. Morris in support of the same position. He declared himself "decidedly against prohibiting general taxes on exports," and in subsequently debating the question he remarked that

"In favoring the general power over exports he opposed the particular interest of his own State. To deny this power is to take from the common Government half the regulation of trade. It was his opinion that a power over exports might be more effectual than over imports in obtaining beneficial treaties of commerce."

Mr. Rufus King, of Massachusetts, opposed the prohibition as a measure "introducing a weakness which will render common defense more difficult."

But I need not multiply these quotations. I have cited enough to show that this prohibitory clause was not inserted in the Constitution without very serious opposition from many of the leading minds of the Convention. The citations I have made demonstrate also that this opposition was not based on narrow, local, and sectional grounds, but that it sprang from great national considerations overriding all these. Neither the support nor hostility to the measure was determined by geographical lines. The statesmen from whom I have quoted represented alike the New England States, the middle States, and the southern States—the three great divisions then comprising the whole country. So on the other hand, among those who labored to deprive the General Government of all power over exports, we find Gerry of Massachusetts, Langdon of New Hampshire, and Ellsworth of Connecticut, quite as zealous and resolute as Mercer of Maryland, Mason of Virginia, and Rutledge of South Carolina.

When the Convention approached a vote on the question, Mr. Madison perceiving the probability of the prohibitory clause being adopted, attempted to have it amended so that an export tax might be laid by Congress with the concurrence of two thirds of each House. He stated that he considered this "a lesser evil than total prohibition," and on this proposition the test vote was taken. Eleven States were present; five voted in favor of Mr. Madison's motion and six against it. Of the six, Virginia was one, and her vote was carried against it by a majority of one in her delegation—it appearing on the record that Mr. Blair, Mr. Mason, and Mr. Randolph voted no, while General Washington and Mr. Madison voted ay. A single member of the Virginia delegation, against the wise and considerate judgment of Washington and Madison, is thus responsible for the vote which deprived Congress of all power over the exports of the country. No important provision in the entire Constitution was adopted by so slight a majority and against the strenuous opposition of leading men.

Thus much, Mr. Speaker, as to the origin of this prohibitory clause, with the circumstances attending its adoption. Stoutly as its introduction was resisted, it has remained in the Constitution without cavil or question from that day to this—a proposition to strike it out never having been even submitted in Congress prior to the one I am now discussing. Indeed, the perfect ease with which the national Treasury has been filled from tariff duties up to the beginning of the present war continually obviated the necessity of looking to other sources of revenue, and hence very naturally little thought has been given to the immense sum that might be derived from a judicious tax on exports. But Mr. Madison and his distinguished associates, from whom I have quoted, admonished the Convention that the time might come when an export tax would be a necessity, for the triple object of obtaining revenue, of encouraging domestic manufactures, and for procuring equitable treaties of commerce with foreign nations. The period thus anticipated by the wise statesmen of 1787 has arrived, and for the maintenance of our national credit in the trials and crisis of the immediate and distant future, there is an absolute necessity that Congress shall have the power to levy a tax on exports.

Of course a wise and cautious discrimination is to be exercised in selecting the articles and commodities that will bear a tax of this character. The general and obvious distinction is to tax such and such only as have no competing product in foreign markets, or at all events such weak competition as will give us the command of the market after the commodity has paid its export dues in this country. As an illustration, take cotton, which is our leading export in time of peace. It is believed with confidence that the American product can pay an export tax of five cents per pound and yet with ease maintain its preeminence in the markets of England and the European continent. Our export in a single year has reached three million two hundred thousand bales of five hundred pounds each, and it would rapidly run beyond that figure after peace is restored and the competition of free labor is applied to its production. But if it should never go beyond the quantity named an export tax of five cents per pound would yield a revenue of $80,000,000 from this single article, as any one will see by a moment's calculation.

Tobacco and naval stores also afford a large margin for an export tax, owing to the superior quality and quantity of the American production of each article. Without attempting to weary the House with a parade of statistics, it may be sufficient to state that in the judgment of our best economists the three commodities to which I have referred would jointly yield in time of peace a coin revenue of $100,000,000, without in any degree impairing their command of the markets where they have always been purchased so readily. Of tobacco alone our export in a single year has exceeded the enormous figure of two hundred million pounds, and a very large proportion of the revenue of France and some other European Governments is derived from the duty laid upon its importation. Might we not, at all events, share with foreign nations the advantage of the enormous tax which this article of luxury will bear, making them pay a moiety into our coffers instead of monopolizing it all for their own? Should petroleum continue to be developed in such immense quantities, without being found elsewhere, it, too, will in due time bear a very considerable export tax, as indeed will all articles (without attempting their specific enumeration) whose production is peculiar to this country, or whose quality may be greatly superior to products of similar kind in other countries, or, in the comprehensive phrase of Mr. Madison, "articles in which America is not rivaled in foreign markets."

The fear which has often been expressed that the congressional power to tax exports might be used to oppress certain sections and to discriminate against particular commodities is manifestly groundless. It is always safe to trust to self-interest in a nation as well as in an individual. The highest national interest in the matter we are discussing is to encourage exports in every honorable and practicable way, and the moment that an export tax tended to check or decrease exportation that moment it would be abolished or reduced. Of course there must be exportation before revenue can be derived from an export tax, and hence I repeat that the interest which underlies the whole design affords the absolute guarantee against any oppressive attempt to discriminate against any section or any particular commodity.

Intelligent gentlemen will tell us, however, that Government can just as efficiently collect the tax on any given article through the excise system of our internal revenue as by levying an export tax, and they hence argue against any necessity for the proposed amendment to the Constitution. I take issue upon this point, and I maintain that an excise tax upon raw products intended to be shipped to foreign countries will prove disadvantageous, if not absolutely disastrous, both to the producer and the Government, and that the export is far preferable, viewed from any standpoint whatever. Let us analyze the process and effect in the case of cotton, as an example, assuming that it is but fair to apply the same arguments to all other articles of large export.

Practically, an excise tax should be as far removed from the source of production as possible; the more remote the less the burden, the nearer it comes the more oppressive it grows. Government derives to-day a very large revenue from distilled spirits, malt liquors, and wines; but should an attempt be made to tax the corn, the barley, and the grapes out of which these articles are made the effect would be most disastrous. Tobacco in its manufactured state pays a very large revenue with perfect ease; but if a tax should be laid on the leaf I predict that production would be greatly discouraged and the revenue correspondingly diminished. So, sir, if you lay an excise upon cotton you increase immensely the difficulties of production, and must of necessity diminish the amount produced. The export tax which I have stated cotton would bear amounts to twenty-five dollars per shipping bale, and the attempt to collect that amount by excise tax on each plantation before the cotton could be removed for sale would prove an intolerable burden to the producer. The small farmer, with a crop of only forty bales, would be compelled to raise $1,000 in coin or lawful money before he could send a pound of his cotton to market; and the large planter, with a thousand bales, would have to make an advance of $25,000, beside all the cost of production, before he could realize a penny in return. Such a system of taxation would be destructive; it would place the enterprising producer, who most of all deserves the patronage and protection of the Government, under a perpetual mortgage, and would subject him to the exactions and heavy charges of the speculative usurers who would at once spring up to feast and fatten upon his capital and his industry. The law which would permit that would be reckless of the highest interests of agriculture, commerce, and the general prosperity of the country.

And now, sir, a glance very briefly at the other side. Let cotton be relieved from all excise tax, and let it be bought and sold and freely moved from point to point within our own country without tax or charge of any kind whatever. Let the planter carry it to market without any hinderance, and when it reaches the point of exportation, having passed from the hands of the producer into the possession of the capitalist or speculator, let the Government, as it is placed on shipboard for transportation to foreign markets, exact its tax of five cents per pound. Collected there and then, it comes from those who are able to pay it, who pay it just on the eve of realizing its return on the other side of the water from the pockets of foreign buyers, and who pay it in a way that does not embarrass or oppress the producer nor tend to decrease production.

Not the least advantage, Mr. Speaker, in this mode of collecting the tax, is the cheapness with which it can be done. The points of shipment of cotton are so few that you may count them on your fingers, and the tendency, owing to the converging of water courses and railroad lines, is against any increase in the number of these ports. The same officers of customs that are already there to collect your tariff duties can perform the labor of collecting the export duties without a dollar's additional expense beyond the salaries of a few extra clerks that the increase of business might demand. Compare with this the vast expense of sending an army of excisemen throughout all the cotton and tobacco plantations, and you will find that the system of export duties would effect a saving of millions to the Government, simply in the mode of collection. And, sir, you could invent no more offensive system of taxation than would be involved in sending your Government agents to every rural home in the planting regions to interrogate the farmer as to the number of bales in his cotton crop, or how many pounds of tobacco he had raised. The officials who should perambulate the country on such errands would acquire in popular opinion as bad a reputation as Dr. Johnson in his dictionary fastened on the English exciseman—"an odious wretch, employed to collect an unjust tax."

The great statesmen whom I quoted in the earlier portion of my remarks as against the insertion of this prohibitory clause in the Constitution, among other grounds of opposition to it, stated that an export tax might be necessary "for the encouragement of domestic manufactures." Sir, this result would be realized in its fullest extent if cotton should be subjected to an export tax of five cents per pound, leaving that consumed at home free of duty except the excise tax which would be levied upon it in the various forms of its manufacture. With this vast advantage in the raw material we should cease to wrangle here about tariffs, for we could in our home markets undersell the fabrics of Europe, and should soon compete with them in the markets of the world. The export tax, as compared with the excise, would thus prove beneficial to all the interests of our country, stimulating the production of the raw material, and developing the manufacturing enterprise of the land in a ratio compared with which the accomplishments of the past would seem tame and inconsiderable.

The amendment which I am advocating, Mr. Speaker, is not a snap judgment against the interests of the southern States, to be hurried through here in the absence of their Representatives for fear their presence might defeat it. If there be any logical truth in the views I have so imperfectly presented, it is the interest of the planting States to have an export tax, and were those States fully represented on this floor to-day I have no hesitation in saying that they would from necessity and self-interest support this amendment. And for this obvious reason, sir: it is evident to every one that when this war is over and the Federal authority firmly reestablished, cotton and other southern products must pay their fair share of the national revenue, and the choice is simply between an excise tax and an export tax. With such an alternative no one can doubt that the South would choose the export duty as the least burdensome and most advantageous to its peculiar local interests. The industrial system, the financial ease, the vital prosperity of the planting States, would demand an export tax in preference to any other that could be laid on their products by the Federal Government.

In the future of our country, Mr. Speaker, the great task and test of statesmanship will be in the administration of our finances and the wise distribution of the burdens of taxation. We began our career as an independent nation without money, without credit, and with an oppressive load of debt. But a great genius in the person of Hamilton evoked order out of chaos, gave stability to the Government, imparted confidence to the people, and established public credit on so firm a basis that until the breaking out of this wicked rebellion we had scarcely known an hour's serious embarrassment to our national Treasury. Unless we are guided by counsels of wisdom we may not be so fortunate in the future as we have been in the past. An immense amount of money will be required to meet the interest on our national debt, to maintain our Army and Navy even on a peace foundation, and to defray the ordinary expenses of civil government. The revenue for these objects may be raised so injudiciously as to cripple and embarrass the commercial and industrial interests of the whole country, or on the other hand the requisite tax may be so equitably distributed and so skillfully assessed that the burden will be inappreciable to the public. Whoever as Secretary of the Treasury shall accomplish the former and avoid the latter result, must be armed with a plenitude of power in the premises. He must have open to him the three great avenues of taxation—the tariff, the excise system, and the duties on exports; and must be empowered to use each in its appropriate place by congressional legislation. At present only two of these modes of taxation are available, and the absence of the third, in the language of an eminent statesman already quoted, "takes from the General Government half the regulation of trade." It is for Congress to say whether the people shall have an opportunity to change the organic law in this important respect, or whether with a blind disregard of the future we shall rush forward reckless of the financial disasters that may result from a failure to do our duty here.

Mr. COX. I will now yield for a short time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who desires to be heard. How long does the gentleman want? I merely desire to hold the floor that I may call the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I will not take long. I do not know that I should have spoken at all on this subject if it had not been for the extraordinary speech of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE.] I did not know that the Committee of Ways and Means had absorbed any business that did not belong to them. I did not know that they had asked for anything that was not referred to them. I am sure the subject to which the gentleman refers has never been taken from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WILSON. That subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary some time during the last session. At the commencement of this session the same subject was referred, in a resolution offered, I think, by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] to the Committee of Ways and Means at the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] Of course the Committee on the Judiciary considered itself discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. STEVENS. We did not so consider it. The matter was referred to us, but we were willing to see what the Committee on the Judiciary would do.

Mr. WILSON. We considered the action of the House equivalent to a discharge.

Mr. STEVENS. The Committee of Ways and Means had no desire to act upon the subject. We were quite willing to leave it where I think it very fairly belongs.

As to the division of the Committee of Ways and Means into various committees, it does not become us to say anything upon that subject. It does not affect us. It will affect the next Congress, and I have no doubt that whoever is Speaker then will make a proper selection of members of the committees. I do not feel any interest in the matter at all. I do not know whether my colleagues on the committee do.

I do not know, however, whether I understand the proposition. I do not know whether it is proposed to abolish the Committee of Ways and Means altogether or whether some portion of its duties are to be taken from it. I do not know whether it is proposed to retain the old name of the "Committee of Ways and Means," with some curtailment of the duties of that committee, or to abolish it altogether. I think it quite proper that there should be a Committee on Banks separate from the Committee of Ways and Means. I think also that the committee on the Pacific railroad may as well become a standing committee, as that subject has now become a permanent part of the legislation of the country. Therefore I think the report of the committee on rules thus far meets with the approbation of the Committee of Ways and Means—at least I suppose so; I do not know that there is any opposition to it.

The only doubt I have in regard to it is the proposition to separate the duties of finance from those of appropriations. I have some doubts as to the propriety of that. I have no desire myself to have it one way or the other. Certainly the labors of the committee would be very much lessened by it. But the two subjects seem to be very properly connected; and I have some doubts as to the propriety of separating them. In the other branch of Congress the two subjects are united in the same committee; yet I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] is sincere when he says that this matter has not been prompted by any action of the present committee. I think, therefore, the only question is whether there should be a distinct committee on appropriations, distinct from the general Committee of Ways and Means. As I said before, so far as I am concerned I do not expect to trouble the Committee of Ways and Means or the House at the next session of Congress upon any of these subjects. I hope there will be a Speaker who will make judicious selections. If the present Committee of Ways and Means have been in any way inappropriately formed, which I do not understand the gentleman to say, I have no doubt at all the next House will correct the source of all that trouble by providing a Speaker who will appoint a proper committee. I would not have made these remarks had it not been for the strange remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE.]

Mr. MORRILL. I am entirely indifferent as to the disposition which shall be made of this subject by the House. So far as I am myself concerned, I have never sought any position upon any committee from the present or any other Speaker of the House, and probably never shall. I have no disposition to press myself hereafter for any position. In relation to the proposed division of the Committee of Ways and Means, the only doubt that I have is the one expressed by my colleague on that committee, [Mr. STEVENS,] in regard to the separation of the questions of revenue from those relating to appropriations. In ordinary times of peace I should deem it almost indispensable and entirely within their power that this committee should have the control of both subjects, in order that they might make both ends meet, that is, to provide a sufficient revenue for the expenditures. That reason applies now with greater force; but it may be that the committee is overworked. It is true that for the last three or four years the labors of the Committee of Ways and Means have been incessant; they have labored not only days but nights; not only weekdays but Sundays. If gentlemen suppose that the committee have permitted some appropriations to be reported which should not have been permitted they little understand how much has been resisted. As it regards the complaint of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] the subject to which he refers was, I believe, properly referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and it has been informally considered by that committee, and would have been reported before this time, provided the committee had seen any opportunity within the last six weeks when it could be reasonably brought forward and have proper time allowed to debate it, and no gentleman, not even the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] would desire to have such a question as that brought before Congress without the amplest time for its discussion.

Mr. STEVENS. I would state that some time ago the Senate committee to which that subject was referred reported absolutely against the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Only ten days ago that was done, and in the Senate that question, as have all amendments of the Constitution, went to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it originally went here, and where it was when it was taken from them by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MORRILL. Being purely a question of revenue, and the Committee of Ways and Means having complete jurisdiction of the whole question relating to financial affairs, I do not myself see that it could have been properly considered by any other committee. I have no feeling on the question now before us, and am utterly indifferent as to what is done by the House upon the subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am very glad to see everywhere the proper feeling exhibited upon this subject. I am sure nobody has been discussing it in any spirit of unkindness to the present committee, or to any of the members of it. This is a question relating simply to the labors of the Committee of Ways and Means. Every one will appreciate that the national banking system has thrown a very large class of new duties upon the Committee of Ways and Means. And it seems to me that with the immense amount of work which they have on hand it is manifestly fitting that the committee should be relieved from a duty so distinct in its character from the others.

The only question is the one which the gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means have raised; that is, whether it is proper to separate the business of appropriations of money from the other legitimate business of the Committee of Ways and Means, from the business of providing for taxation and revenue. It seems to me that those two subjects are quite distinct in their nature. It is true they have relations to each other so far as relates to the support of the Government, but in no other respect are they at all related.

All that the Committee of Ways and Means would want to learn from the Appropriation Committee would be simply what their estimates were as gathered from the expenditures of the Government, actual and estimated. Those being known, the Committee of Ways and Means proper would look to the sources from which they could raise this money. The Committee on Appropriations being one chiefly of detail, would examine the law with reference to appropriations and the necessity of proposed expenditures. This committee could give more time to these subjects than the Committee of Ways and Means as at present organized can possibly do.

I hope this proposition will be adopted. I am very sure that no person has any reason to complain that anything unkindly is intended toward any committee; and especially as it refers to the future and not to the present Congress it seems to me entirely free from anything personal.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. Mr. Speaker, the report now under consideration contemplates radical changes in the committees of this House; and the propriety of those changes should be determined with regard to the future, and not with reference to the manner in which the present Committee of Ways and Means has discharged its duties.

Now, sir, no committee on finance can understandingly make reports to this House unless both sides of the account are before that committee. The merchant prince of New York, transacting commerce with all parts of the globe, his daily payments being enormous, must have before him every day his assets and income, in order that he may understand how to meet his obligations. The cashier of a banking institution, in determining the amount of discounts, must have before him every day the amount of means. So with your Committee of Ways and Means: it must have before it all sources of income; the internal revenue question, in order that it may understand the changes proposed or to be recommended; the import duties, in order that it may propose changes. It must have before it, on the other side, the estimates of the different Departments of the Government, showing the amount necessary to carry on the Government for the coming fiscal year. No committee can make appropriations unless it has before it the income of the Government for the fiscal year. The estimates of your Departments are frequently reduced or enlarged by the Committee of Ways and Means. How could the Committee on Appropriations in the next Congress understand how to enlarge or reduce appropriations unless they understand something of the public income of the Government? The arrangement now presented, if the House propose to adopt it, should be so modified that the Committee on Appropriations should submit the appropriations to the Committee of Ways and Means; else there might be a year when your appropriations would exceed very largely the amount provided to carry on the Government.

Now, sir, during this war, Congress has been, upon all questions of finance, the creature of circumstance, the amount of expenditure depending upon the movements in the field, the magnitude of the movements of the Army and of the Navy. Hence no Committee of Ways and Means, whatever talent it might possess, could bring out the account with precision at the end of any fiscal year. But, sir, it is to be hoped that peace is near, that the expenditures of this Government are to be reduced; and when peace returns, when economy must be studied by the committees of this House, it will be necessary that the ways and means upon the one side shall be so adjusted as to meet the appropriations on the other. And, sir, I trust that this House will act with wisdom upon this question, and leave the question of ways and means and that of appropriations in the hands of one committee.

To me, individually, this is a matter of no interest; for I am not to be in the next Congress, and I trust in no future Congress. But I understand something of these questions, and I can see the evil that will arise from the division of this Committee of Ways and Means.

I may remark that in my view the report now under consideration is wise so far as it proposes to take from the Committee of Ways and Means the banking question and the railway question. Those subjects do not properly belong to that committee. But I say again, do not divide that committee by making one Committee of Ways and Means and another Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COX. One word in reply to the gentleman from New York. I do not think that there is anything practical in his statement. These committees can consult with each other. The Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations can just as well consult with each other as the Committee on Military Affairs can consult with the present Committee of Ways and Means. The argument of the gentleman would drive us to have one committee, and one committee only, for all of our business is interlaced more or less. The Committee of Ways and Means will have before them the estimates of the Departments. They can without trouble get any information they please from the new Committee on Appropriations without any special clause in our rules. That is the duty of a mere clerk. They get information now from the Departments. Estimates are sent here at the beginning of every session and from time to time; and therefore there is no practical objection in the statement of the gentleman from New York. I do not meet with any other objection. I will now yield to my friend from New York [Mr. GANSON.]

Mr. GANSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Ways and Means was organized under a different state of things than that now existing. There have been added to its duties national currency, internal revenue, and larger appropriations than ever before, growing out of the necessities and expenses of the Government in the present war. I think that the remedy would be to have one committee, and to enlarge the number of members composing it, so that it could be divided, one portion to take up and consider the internal revenue and tariff, another portion the appropriations, and so on; all to report to the committee, which shall act upon the facts and suggestions which may be reported to them. In this way they can dispose of all the business with intelligence, with dispatch, and with care. It is like any Department of the Government. I would have one committee, with one head, but I would have it divided into sub-committees like the bureaus of one of the Departments.

The Committee of Ways and Means cannot now attend to all the business which has been thrown upon it. It is like the Committee on Military Affairs, which has more than it can do. Six weeks ago there was referred to the Military Committee to inquire into the Old Capitol and Carroll prisons, and they have not yet reported.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. I ask the gentleman to let me offer an amendment.

Mr. COX. I cannot yield for that purpose. Mr. SCHENCK. With the permission of my colleague I will say one word on the pending proposition. I do not think that the adoption of the proposition will entirely remove the difficulty, although it may to a certain extent. The argument of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LITTLEJOHN,] if it proves anything, proves that we want in the organization of the House nothing except the Committee of Ways and Means. From the duties assigned to that committee, and the course of proceeding here, we have drifted in that direction already. I know as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. GANSON] how exceedingly onerous are the duties of the Military Committee, made a pack-horse as it is for almost everything by the gentleman from New York and others. Yet we are willing, as far as practicable, to do our share of that which comes properly within the scope of the jurisdiction of that committee. In practice how does it turn out? I will give an illustration. During this session the Committee on Military Affairs has applied itself to the investigation of the questions connected with the increase of pay and allowances to officers of the Army, with a view to afford them some relief. The committee prepared a bill which a short time since passed this House and went to the Senate. The first we know of it is that there comes back from the Senate an appropriation bill, which was sent to the Committee of Ways and Means, which embraced the legislation in this regard proposed by the Senate, and I do not know but that it subsequently reached a committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. It was no fault of the Committee of Ways and Means that it came to them.

It was referred to them and they recommended a non-concurrence in the amendments. The Military Committee of the Senate declared that they would not take up the House bill, and therefore it was put on an appropriation bill, which came to us.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have not imputed blame to any one. It went to a committee of conference. The committee of conference disposed of the question, and it has been embodied into a law between the two Houses; and yet the Committee on Military Affairs have had nothing whatever to do with it. Though that committee bestowed the labor of a number of sessions upon the subject of the pay and allowance to officers of the Army, by a sort of side wind, through an appropriation bill, the whole subject is disposed of by a committee of conference, the Committee on Military Affairs standing here sucking their thumbs, I suppose, or at least having no direct agency as a committee in any way in determining what should be the legislation in regard to the pay and allowance of officers.

The same thing is true in regard to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I say this is not the fault of the Committee of Ways and Means. I am making no complaint of them. The fault lies in the mode and manner of the organization of our committees. While the Committee on Naval Affairs may have bestowed their attention for weeks upon the subject of a bill, the whole matter is suddenly disposed of through the agency of an appropriation bill, and the work and labor of the Naval Committee either does not come to light, or only in the shape of an empty report which is never acted upon.

There must be a cure for this in some way, and I do not know in what way unless it is by giving to the several committees the command and disposition of the business which pertinently belongs to them. It is with no invidious spirit that I make these remarks. I have taken these instances as illustrations of the manner in which our rules operate. I say that under the present system all the labor bestowed by the Military Committee upon a particular subject passes into the shape of law without that committee, or any member of the committee, having in any way any hand in or control of it, because it finds its way into law through an appropriation bill. I do not know whether the proposition of my colleague [Mr. PENDLETON] goes far enough to reach this evil. If not, I hope before the House takes action on it that it will be amended or modified so as in some way to distribute the business of the House among the appropriate committees.

Mr. COX. Upon the suggestion of the committee on rules, of which the Speaker is one, I modify the resolution in relation to the Committee of Ways and Means, so that it shall read, "said committee shall have leave to report by bill at any time." I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. COX moved that the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. In this connection I report from the committee on rules the following resolution:

Resolved, That rule 97 be amended as follows, namely: add at the end thereof, "and he shall be required at the commencement and close of each session of Congress to take an inventory of all the furniture, books, and other public property in the several committee and other rooms under his charge, and report the same to the House; which report shall be referred to the Committee of Accounts, who shall determine the amount for which he shall be held liable for missing articles."

Resolved, That rule 134 be amended as follows, namely: add at the end thereof, "or any of the rooms upon the same floor, and opening into the same."

Resolved, That rule 29 be amended as follows, namely: strike out in lines six and seven the words, "before the last name on the roll was called; and if he shall answer in the negative the Speaker shall not further entertain the request of such member to vote; provided, however, that any member who was absent by leave of the House may vote at any time before the result is announced."

The first amendment proposed is in regard to the 27th rule. [Cries all over the House, "All right!" "All right!"] Very well, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The first and second resolutions were agreed to.

The third resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That rule 29 be amended as follows, namely: strike out in lines six and seven the words, "when your name was called," and insert in lieu thereof "before the last name was called."

Mr. BROOKS. What is the meaning of that? Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. We propose to change the present rule. The gentleman from New York and other old members will recollect that it was never the practice of the House, under any circumstances, to permit a member to vote unless he was within the bar when his name was called. The Speaker, when a member asks to vote, is required to propound the question to him whether he was within the bar when his name was called. A practice has grown up, however, which has led to a good deal of carelessness in members not being here, of asking unanimous consent to vote, which we know is almost universally granted. We propose to change that rule and provide that any member may vote if he is within the bar when the last name was called, but if not, that he shall not vote at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman that it ought to read "the last name on the roll."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, sir; I will insert the words, "on the roll."

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the several votes by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the last rule to apply only to the commencement of the next Congress.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table bill of the House No. 763, to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraphic line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean," for the purpose of concurring in some amendments of the Senate.

No objection was made, and the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

First amendment:

Page 1, line four, after "California," insert "the Union Pacific railroad, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, and all the other companies provided for in the said act of the 2d July, 1864."

Second amendment:

Same page, line nine, strike out the words, "from Sacramento," and insert in lieu thereof "of construction."

Mr. STEVENS. Do I understand that this bill relates to this railroad down here?

Mr. STEELE, of New York. Oh, no; it is the Pacific railroad.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe the bill only allows these roads to issue their own bonds.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. That is all.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STEVENS. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. STEELE, of New York. No, it is a House bill to which the Senate has made some amendments.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the Senate were agreed to.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to introduce and have passed a bill to authorize a three-cent coinage.

Mr. STEVENS. I will in about an hour from this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order is closed by order of the House in five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. All debate on the printed bill only. There may be new amendments offered upon which debate will be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition was to limit the debate to five-minute speeches.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated with very great carefulness that he desired to cut off debate entirely in five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania had no right to move to close debate on anything except the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. Unless by suspending the rules or by unanimous consent; and unanimous consent was given.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague [Mr. DUMONT] was to have five minutes to explain his amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but there is to be no other debate on the printed portions of the bill and amendments thereto.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PIKE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question to be upon the amendment of Mr. DUMONT to insert after the first clause, under the head of "miscellaneous," the following:

For the fencing in, repair, and completion of the United States court-house and post office at Indianapolis, Indiana, and paying the sidewalks in front of the same, the sum of $5,000, or such part thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DUMONT. I desire to make a very short explanation of my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What has become of the point of order which I raised last night in regard to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order again? The Chair does not call it to mind now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The point of order was that this is a new appropriation or new legislation, and is therefore out of order under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DUMONT. I beg leave to explain in a few words the amendment I have offered. Some four or five years since an appropriation of about ninety thousand dollars was made for the construction of a court-house and a post office at Indianapolis. The building has been erected, but it is not yet completed, although the appropriation has now become exhausted. The object of the small appropriation which I now ask is for the completion of this building. The post office and court-house are both measurably completed, but there is yet no inclosure around the building. It was intended that the building should be a fire-proof edifice. The heating apparatus has not yet been completed. This post-office building is exposed to danger, and to the depredations of thieves and robbers. The building is on a public street in the town, but has not been fenced in at all. The back portion of the building is used for post-office purposes, and there is nothing to prevent evil-disposed persons from gaining access to the building through the back part of it.

This appropriation has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, with this exception, that he recommends an appropriation of $8,000. But in the hope that I might get the Committee of Ways and Means to consent to the amendment, I have reduced it to $5,000, and have further provided that only such portions of the $5,000 shall be expended as may be absolutely necessary. It seems to me to be a penny wise and a pound foolish course, to erect a splendid building at a cost of $90,000, and then fail to finish it, when the trifling sum of $5,000 will complete and secure it from dilapidation. We have in Indiana one United States court-house, in Illinois there are two; in Indiana there is one United States judge, in Illinois there are two; in Indiana there is one United States marshal, in Illinois there are two; in Indiana there is one clerk of the United States court, in Illinois there are two. And in the neighboring State of Ohio it is the same. And in the States of Pennsylvania and New York there are three districts, instead of one, as in Indiana. Now, we simply ask that our court-house and post-office building may be completed.

And I beg leave to state in addition to what I have said, that the post office at Indianapolis is a distributing office, and the people of the whole State, the constituents of my colleagues as well as my own, as well as the people of the surrounding country, are interested in the safety of the mail matter collected in that office, and unless the appropriation I have asked for is granted the mail matter there will not be secure. I have already stated that the Secretary of the Interior has recommended this appropriation, and the Postmaster General has also recommended it, and based his recommendation upon the considerations which I have just mentioned, and I felt very much in hopes that the Committee of Ways and Means would have consented to this recommendation without any opposition.

I ask that the Clerk read the papers I send to the desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the urgent necessity that exists for certain improvements in connection with the building at Indianapolis occupied by the courts of the United States and their officers, the city post office, the land and other public offices.

The west and north sides of it face two streets, both of which are central and frequented thoroughfares, and the sidewalk of that part of them in front of the building is wholly unpaved. By constant use it is reduced below its original level, and during rain a pool of water is formed. A great deal of mud accumulates in wet weather, rendering access to the building difficult and unpleasant. The large number of persons who are compelled to visit it prevent, in this state of things, keeping the vestibule where letters are delivered in a fit condition. A pavement—and it should be of stone to be in keeping with the building—is, in my opinion, required for the convenient transaction of business and the proper accommodation of the public.

The part of the lot not occupied by the building should be securely inclosed and reserved for the exclusive accommodation of the public officers. In its present condition it is of greater benefit to the owners of the adjoining property than to the Government.

The roof of the building and the flues connected with the heating apparatus are out of repair.

My attention has been called to the subject by the Post Office Department, and on repeated occasions by the marshal of the district of Indiana; but I have no fund under my control applicable to the required improvements.

Eight thousand dollars will be needed for the purpose, and I recommend to the Committee of Ways and Means the appropriation of that amount. I submit a draft of a section to be incorporated in the miscellaneous appropriation bill, should my recommendation meet with the approval of the committee.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. USHER,

Secretary.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, February 9, 1865.

SIR: My attention has been called to the inclosed communication addressed to you by the Secretary of the Interior, respecting certain improvements and repairs needed in the building at Indianapolis occupied by the United States courts and their officers, the city post office, the land and other public offices; and I trust the recommendations of the Secretary on that subject will commend themselves to the favorable consideration and approval of your committee, and that the appropriation of $8,000 requested for that purpose may be granted.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. DENNISON.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

The amendment of Mr. DUMONT was adopted.

Mr. SWEAT. I move to insert after the clause relating to the custom-house at Portland, Maine, the following:

For securing the right of way and building a bridge across the canal to the Marine Hospital near Portland, Maine, $3,000.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to that. Mr. HOLMAN. That is rather legislative in its character, I think. I raise the point of order.

Mr. SWEAT. This amendment is assented to by the committee; a provision of this kind was in fact omitted by accident.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out lines three hundred and seventy-three, three hundred and seventy-four, and three hundred and seventy-five, and by inserting after line four hundred and eight the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase for the United States an appropriate building site at Island Pond or at some point northerly of Island Pond and south of the Canadian boundary line, in the State of Vermont, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building for the use of such officers of the customs as are or may be stationed at that place: Provided, That the cost of such purchase and erection shall not exceed the sum of $10,000, which amount is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I move to amend by inserting, after line three hundred and seventy-five, the following:

For making the alterations and repairs in the custom-house, court-house, and post-office building at Providence, Rhode Island, $1,500.

Mr. KASSON. There is no objection to that on the part of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have been directed by the Joint Committee on the Library to offer the following amendment:

Insert the following as a new paragraph:
To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase files of newspapers for the Congressional Library, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to strike out lines three hundred and eighty and three hundred and eighty-one, as follows:

For the purchase of a library for the use of the officers of the Territory of Arizona, $5,000.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the purchase of libraries for the use of the officers of the Territories of Idaho, Montana, and Arizona, $7,500, to be expended in the proportion of $2,500 for each Territory, and under the legislative authority thereof.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask a division of the motion, so as to take the question first on striking out.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out and insert is indivisible by a positive rule of the House. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"A motion to strike out and insert shall be deemed indivisible."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I move to amend by striking out the following:

For the purchase of a library for the use of the officers of the Territory of Arizona, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. In preparing the bill, the clerk of the committee omitted one item which, by direction of the committee, I now offer:

After line three hundred and eighty-one, insert the following:

For increase of the salary of the territorial judges of Arizona, $1,000 each, $3,000.

This proposes simply to do for Arizona what has already been done for other gold Territories. It simply puts these several Territories on an equality.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I raise a point of order on that amendment, that it proposes to change the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For compensation to John Hopley for services in indexing the national currency act, $100.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved that the appropriation be stricken out.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That the ninth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, appropriating thirty per cent. of the cost of engraving the special dies for internal revenue stamps, not to exceed in amount $20,000, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors, Butler & Carpenter, the said sum of $20,000 in full of all claims for indemnity.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike that out.

The committee was divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 38; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. HOLMAN and HOOPER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 54.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DAILY. I move to amend by striking out the words "may be" and to insert "hereby is," and to strike out the words "if the Governor of said Territory shall so elect;" so that it will read:

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That the sum of $20,000, appropriated at the present session of Congress to defray the legislative expenses of the Territory of Nebraska for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1866, shall and hereby is appropriated for and applied to the payment of the territorial militia called into service by the Governor of said Territory to protect the frontier settlements against the depredations of Indians in the fall and winter of the year 1864; which sum shall be disbursed and paid by the Governor of the Territory, who shall take vouchers therefor; and no other or further sum of money shall be appropriated to defray the legislative expenses for the year aforesaid. And the Governor as aforesaid shall, within one year, make a detailed report of his action hereon to the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth the several sums paid, and the names of the persons to whom paid, under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I move to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House and Senate to the Members and Senators and Delegates from the Territories in the Thirty-Eighth Congress thirty-three and a third per cent. upon their present salaries; and the sum of money necessary to enable the said Sergeant-at-Arms and Secretary of the Senate to carry out this provision is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this provision shall be submitted to the constituents of members of Congress, and that the money hereby appropriated shall not be paid until ratified by them.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 32.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was disagreed to.

Mr. KINNEY moved to add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the probate judge of Great Salt Lake county, in the Territory of Utah, be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter in trust, at the minimum price, for the sole use and benefit of the owners and bona fide claimants, all that portion or tract of land on which Great Salt Lake City is located, according to the recorded plan of said city, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. KASSON. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. KINNEY. I think that it is, for this bill comprises almost everything.

Mr. KASSON. It is not authorized by any law and not germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. WILSON. I move to add the following:

Provided, That the total compensation of United States district attorneys shall in no case exceed $6,000 per annum.

I ask to explain the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report the following new section:

And be it further enacted, That authority to sell the property known as the "Pennsylvania Bank Building" in accordance with the acts approved June 23, 1860, section two, and March 14, 1862, section five, is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the property, if sold at public auction, shall not be sold at a less sum than $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to add the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for the building in New York now occupied by the Government as a custom-house, and known as the "Merchants' Exchange," $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I now move the amendments which the House has already passed attached to the legislative appropriation bill, and which went to the committee of conference. They were not then agreed to, because they had not been considered in the Senate, and in order that they may be so considered we offer the amendments at this place. They are for additional clerks in the Treasury Department, for additional appropriations for San Francisco, &c., which have been read and passed upon heretofore.

Mr. PRICE. I should like to have some explanation of the provision for paying extra compensation to the clerks in the provost marshal's office here.

Mr. STEVENS. It is necessary to pay for clerks who worked often all night.

Mr. PRICE. Were they the same clerks who worked at the same place during the day?

Mr. STEVENS. It was found impossible to get additional clerks to do the duty, and these clerks had to work far into the night. They ought to be paid.

Mr. SCHENCK. These men for whom this appropriation is purposed to be made are some agents or employes of the provost marshal's office. And I know they enrolled persons when they had in their possession the certificates of those persons that they were enrolled in some other State or district. They have done the work very loosely and discredibly, more so perhaps than the work has been done in any other district of the country.

Mr. STEVENS. The deputy marshal was making out the papers of his office in order to adjust them, and it was found necessary to employ additional aid, and the marshal could not find anybody except some clerks in the Departments here, who were willing to do extra work out of office hours. They agreed to work a certain number of hours each night, and the marshal agreed to pay them.

Mr. PRICE. I supposed that was the character of the claim. It proposes to pay men who are employed at sixteen or eighteen hundred dollars a year.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, no. These clerks were mere temporary clerks, who were paid by the day three or four dollars. They were not regular clerks.

Mr. PRICE. They were clerks employed in the Departments. Go to those offices and you will find them coming to their offices at nine or ten o'clock and quitting at four o'clock. In that time they do a day's work. And now these same men, who stay in their offices five, six, or seven hours a day, are to be paid $9,000 extra compensation for working during the same time. I hope this will not be adopted. I move to strike it out.

Mr. KASSON. I move a division of my amendment, so as to take a vote first upon the remainder of my amendment and then upon the clause to which objection is made.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish it understood that I was serious in the inquiry I made. I believe the persons proposed to be paid are employes in the office of the enrolling board of the marshal of the District of Columbia. That being so, I desire to say, as my knowledge goes, that this work has been done worse in the District of Columbia than anywhere else in the country. Whether it be the fault of the clerks in the office or other persons there, or whether it was their object to get the largest amount of work and the greatest amount of extra pay I do not undertake to say. But I do undertake to say that they have enrolled men whose certificates of exemption they had in the office. They have enrolled a number of members of Congress—to which I have no particular objection—but it is rather a loose way of doing business. The whole proceedings in this city are very much of that character. I speak from the information which has come to my knowledge.

Mr. PRICE. My motion is to strike out.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope that the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio will not deceive the House. The persons proposed to be paid are none of those engaged in making the enrollment. They are temporary clerks employed in this city in the various Departments at three or four dollars a day. It was found necessary to get aid, and they got these clerks to make copies of the papers which had been previously prepared, promising to pay them a certain amount for each night's work of four hours each. They did work faithfully, and performed their duty under the contract. The provost marshal states all these facts, and the question now is simply whether these men shall be paid according to the contract.

The amendment of Mr. PRICE was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. KASSON was agreed to.

Mr. POSTON. I move to amend by inserting the following clause:

For colonizing friendly Indians in Arizona on a reservation on the Colorado river and supplying them with implements of husbandry and seeds to enable them to become self-sustaining, the sum of $150,000, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

I desire to say that in the very short time that the Territory of Arizona has had the honor of representation on this floor it has been impossible to mature and pass through the proper committees measures providing for the settlement and regulation of Indian affairs in that Territory. I am therefore obliged to rely upon the generosity of the House to adopt the amendment which is now presented. It is essentially necessary that the friendly Indians of Arizona should be colonized upon a reservation before the white settlers can enter upon an exploration of the rich mineral resources of that Territory without danger of collision, and as a great benefit to both Indians and whites the measure will commend itself to every sense of justice, policy, and economy.

Mr. WINDOM. I simply desire to say that this proposition was before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was carefully examined by them, as well as maps and reports on the subject, and a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, and the committee were unanimously in favor of the proposition; but there not being time to get a bill through the House, the gentleman from Arizona was advised to take this course and test the sense of the House on the question.

Mr. BENNET. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the appropriation $161,000; and I do it for the purpose of correcting a statement made yesterday with regard to the Territory of Colorado. It was stated by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. PEREA] that the Territory of Colorado paid no internal revenue; that there was no collector of internal revenue in that Territory. I have before me the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I find it stated there that the net total collection up to June 30, 1864, in the Territory of New Mexico was $20,259 09, while the revenue collected in the Territory of Colorado was $61,638 69. More than three times the amount of taxes was paid by Colorado than was paid by New Mexico. I state this only for the purpose of placing my own Territory right upon the record. I now withdraw my amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee, at this point, rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the President, by Mr. NICOLAY, his Private Secretary, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bill of the House No. 160 for the relief of Chapin Hall; and bill of the House No. 728, to pay each of the surviving soldiers of the Revolution, five in number, whose names are on the pension rolls, $300 annually, as a gratuity, in addition to the pensions now paid them.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. POSTON. Mr. Chairman, Arizona, more than any other Territory of the United States, rises to the dignity of historic fame; it is even prehistoric, reaching far back into the dim traditions of the Aztecs. As everywhere else on earth, the history of man is here distinctly marked by the struggle between civilization and barbarism. The Aztecs lived in continual warfare with the barbarous tribes of the mountains, and their descendants to this day maintain the warfare bequeathed to them by their ancestors. The Aztecs were peaceable, industrious Indians, living by the pursuits of agriculture, dwelling in communities, and exercising a system of government with eminent principles of justice. The barbarians of the mountains were their natural foes and finally drove them into southern Mexico, leaving only a few degenerate descendants in the north.

The Spanish explorers found a very interesting race of Indians in that part of the continent now belonging to the United States and designated as the Territory of Arizona. A knowledge of these remote people was first given to the European world by the romantic expedition of Cabeza de Vacca, who crossed the continent from the savannas of Florida to the mountains of New Mexico in 1538. In these remote regions he found a people bearing evidences of European origin and practicing many of the arts of civilization. They were supposed to be the descendants of the colony of the Welsh Prince Madoc who sailed from Wales for the New World in the eleventh century—celebrated in song by Southey. They are now called Moquis, and I beg leave to call your attention to their present condition as described in an official report of Colonel Christopher Carson, first cavalry, New Mexican volunteers.

HEADQUARTERS NAVAJO EXPEDITION,
December 6, 1863.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report for the information of the department commander, that on the 15th ultimo I left this post with companies C, D, G, H, and L, first cavalry, New Mexican volunteers, dismounted, for the purpose of exploring the country west of the Oribi villages, and if possible to chastise the Navajos inhabiting that region. On the 16th I detached thirty men with Sergeant Andreas Herrera, of company C, first cavalry, New Mexican volunteers, on a fresh trail which intersected our route. The sergeant followed the trail for twenty miles when he overtook a small party of Navajos, two of whom he killed, wounded two, and captured fifty head of sheep and one horse. En route the party came on a village lately deserted, which they destroyed. The energy and zeal displayed by the sergeant and his party on this occasion merit my warmest approbation.

On the 21st arrived at Moqui village. I found on my arrival that the inhabitants of all the villages, except the Oribis, had a misunderstanding with the Navajos, owing to some injustice perpetrated by the latter. I took advantage of this feeling, and succeeded in obtaining representatives from all the villages, Oribi excepted, to accompany me on the war path. My object in insisting upon parties of these people accompanying me was simply to involve them so far that they could not retract; to bind them to us and place them in antagonism to the Navajos. They were of some service, and manifested a great desire to aid in every respect. While on this subject I would respectfully represent that these people, numbering some four thousand souls, are in a most deplorable condition, from the fact that the country for several miles around their village is quite barren and is entirely destitute of vegetation.

They have no water for purposes of irrigation, and their only dependence for subsistence is on the little corn they raise when the weather is propitious, which is not always the case in this latitude. They are a peaceable people, have never robbed or murdered the people of New Mexico, and are in every way worthy of the fostering care of the Government. Of the bounty so unsparsingly bestowed by it on other Pueblo Indians, ay, even on the marauding bands, they have never tasted, and I earnestly recommend that the attention of the Indian Bureau be called to this matter. I understand that a couple of years' annuities for the Navajos, not distributed, are in the possession of the superintendent of Indian affairs at Santa Fe, and I consider that, if such an arrangement would be legal, these goods would be well bestowed on these people.

C. CARSON,

Colonel First Cavalry, New Mexican Volunteers.

Captain BENJAMIN C. CUTLER, A. J. G.

In antagonism to these interesting people we have the barbarous Apaches, the Bedouins of the desert and the robbers of the mountains.

Time immemorial their hand has been against every man and every man's hand against them; they disdain to labor, and live by robbery and plunder. For three centuries they have staid the progress of civilization in that part of the continent, and now hold its richest mineral treasures from the grasp of the white man. They have successfully defended their mountain homes against the Spaniards, the Mexicans, and the Americans. A few hardy and enterprising Americans have been endeavoring to penetrate that El Dorado for several years, but for want of military support, and on account of the desolating war which has spread its ravages to the confines of Arizona, they are yet prevented from exploring that inviting field of mineral wealth. The subjugation or extermination of this merciless tribe is a measure of stern justice which ought not to be delayed. Their subjugation would open to our hardy miners an unexplored gold field north of the Gila, which the Spaniards considered the true El Dorado. A sickly sympathy for a few beastly savages should not stand in the way of the development of our rich gold fields, or the protection of our enterprising frontiersmen. The settlers around the capital (Prescott) have kept one hundred men in the field for more than a year at their own expense; their leader, Colonel King Woolsey, had been ruined by the Apaches, and adopted this method of retaliation. They have waited in vain for the protection of the military branch of the Government, and were forced in self-defense to take the matter in their own hands.

The Pimas and Maricopas are a confederated tribe, living on the Gila river, one hundred and eighty miles from its confluence with the Colorado. They are an agricultural people, living entirely by the cultivation of the soil, and number some seven thousand five hundred souls. They have always been friendly to the Americans, and boast that up to this day they do not know the color of the white man's blood. They hold one of the strongest positions on the continent, accessible only after crossing deserts in every direction, and have here defended their homes and fields against barbarous Apaches from time immemorial. The early Spanish explorers found them here in 1540, and ruined houses of grand proportions attest their occupation for thousands of years before the Spaniards came. To the north for several hundred miles ruined cities, fortifications, and the remains of irrigating canals, indicate the places formerly occupied by a race now passed away without having left any history. The researches of the antiquarian are in vain, and the degenerate Indian of the present day answers all questions about past grandeur with the mystic name of Montezuma. The Pimas know no more of their origin than if they had come out of the ground, as their tradition intimates. They have no religion, and worship no deity, unless a habit of hailing the rising sun with an oration may be the remains of some sun-worshipping tribe. They are exceedingly jealous of their females; and their chastity, as far as outside barbarians are concerned, remains, with a few exceptions, unimpeachable. They have a very good tract of land, set apart by metes and bounds plainly marked, have their irrigating canals in good condition, and present every evidence of a thrifty population, producing more than they consume. They number some seven thousand five hundred. They deserve the highest consideration of this Congress. It would have been impossible for the Government troops in that Territory to have subsisted there but for the supplies furnished by these Indians. They are, in fact, the laboring population of that Territory. They produce supplies both for the Army and for the miners. They were colonized by the Spanish Jesuits a hundred and fifty years ago, and they are monuments of the civilization and prosperity of that country at that time. They have cultivated the land there from time immemorial. When the Spaniards entered that country three hundred and forty years ago, they found these Indians in a high state of civilization. It is a good country for agricultural purposes, and during my administration of Indian affairs in that Territory the last year, I had the pleasure of contributing something to the improvement of those Indians, by giving them cotton seed, hoes, spades, shovels, &c.

The Papagos are a branch of the great Pima tribe, speaking the same language and having the same manners and customs, modified by civilization; the only difference is, that upon being baptized, they were originally called Vaponia, in their language Christians, which has been corrupted into Papagos; they also cut their hair short and wear a hat, and such clothing as they can get. The Papagos all live south of the Gila river, in that arid triangle known as the western part of the Gadsden purchase. Their lot is cast in an ungrateful soil; but the softness of the climate reconciles them to their location, and contentment is their happiness. The fruit of the Cereus Giganteus furnishes them with bread and molasses; they plant in the rainy season, raise cattle, hunt, and labor in the harvest fields. Their principal settlement is around the old mission church of San Xavier de Bac, nine miles south of Tucson. This mission was founded by the Jesuits in 1670, and is the grandest architectural monument in northern Mexico. Upon the expulsion of the Jesuits from Mexico they gave the Indians a solemn injunction to preserve the church, promising to return at a future day. It was a strange coincidence that two Jesuit fathers from the Santa Clara College, in California, accompanied us to their long-neglected neophytes. They were received by the Indians with great demonstrations of joy; and, amid the ringing of bells and explosion of fireworks entered into possession of the long-neglected mission of San Xavier. These pious fathers immediately commenced laboring with the zeal and fidelity of their order, and in a few days had the mass regularly chanted by the Papagos maidens, with the peculiar softness of their language. Every facility was rendered the holy fathers in holding intercourse with the Indians, and a great improvement was soon perceptible in their deportment and habits. They seemed entering upon a new era of moral and material prosperity refreshing to witness. The captain, José Victoriana Solorse, is a highly intelligent Indian, and is exercising a beneficent influence on the tribe. The family relations of the Papagos are conducted with morality, and their women are examples of chastity and industry. These deserving people should have additional aid to enable them to colonize the straggling members of the tribe; their principal wants are agricultural implements, carts, wheel-barrow, axes, and hoes. With the necessary aids in agricultural implements they can soon produce a surplus to exchange for clothing and the comforts of life, so that they will be an advantage to the community instead of a tax on the Government. They number about five thousand souls living within our boundaries.

Now I come to the Indians of Colorado. They never reaped the benefit of the Spanish colonization, because the Spaniards never extended their conquests north of the Gila. They are of the same family, and are affiliated with the Pimos, and desire to live in the same manner. But they have no means of exercising their industry. As far as that portion of our Indian country is concerned, they never have had an officer of the Government among them until the last year. As superintendent of Indian affairs, I called the confederated tribes of the Colorado in council together. The council was attended by the principal chiefs and headmen of the Yumas, Mojaves, Yapapais, Hualapais, and Chemihuevis. These tribes have an aggregate of ten thousand souls living near the banks of the Colorado, from Fort Yuma to Fort Mojave. They cultivate the bottom lands of the Colorado river, where an overflow affords sufficient moisture; the failure of an overflow, which sometimes happens, is considered a great calamity, and breeds a famine. Their resources from game, fish, and wild fruits have been very much curtailed by the influx of Americans, and it would be dangerous for them to visit their former hunting-grounds. The fruit of the mesquite tree, an acacia flourishing in this latitude, has been the staff of life to the Indians of the Colorado. A prolific mesquite will yield ten bushels of beans in the hull; the beans are pounded in a mortar and made into cakes of bread for the winter season, and a kind of whisky is also made of the bean before it becomes dry and hard. This resource for the Indians has been very much reduced since the irruption of the Americans and Mexicans, as the mesquite bean is more nutritious and less dangerous for animals in that climate than corn. The beans command, at the different towns and stands where they are sold, from five to ten cents a pound as they fall from the tree. The improvidence of the Indians leads them to sell all the beans in the autumn, saving none for the winter consumption. During the past winter they were in such a famished condition that they killed a great many horses and cattle on the river, mostly belonging to American settlers, for which claims are now made.

But as the representative of the Government of the United States at that time, I did not undertake to make a written treaty with these Indians, because I considered that the Government was able and willing to treat them fairly and honestly without entering into the form of a written treaty, which has been heretofore so severely criticised in both Houses of Congress, and with some reason. These Indians there assembled were willing, for a small amount of beef and flour, to have signed any treaty which it had been my pleasure to write. I simply proposed to them that for all the one hundred and twenty thousand square miles, full of mines and rich enough to pay the public debt of the United States, they should abandon that Territory and confine themselves to the elbow in the Colorado river, not more than seventy-five thousand acres. But I did not enter into any obligation on account of the United States to furnish them with seeds and agricultural implements. I simply told them that if I was elected to represent that Territory in this Congress, I would endeavor to lay their claims before the Government, which they understood to be magnanimous, and that I hoped that this Congress would have the generosity and the justice to provide for these Indians, who have been robbed of their lands and their means of subsistence, and that they may be allowed to live there where they have always made their homes. They desire to live as do the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona. Those Pueblo Indians live in settlements, in towns, in reservations, according to the wise policy of the Spanish Government, which colonized the Indians in reservations and made their labor valuable in building improvements for their own sustenance, for churches, and public improvements, and in that manner made them peaceable Indians, instead of having everlasting and eternal war with the people whom they had robbed of their land.

These people having been citizens of the Mexican Government, are not, according to our theory, entitled to any right in the soil; and therefore no treaty with these Indians for the extinction of their title to the soil would be recognized by this Government. It is a fiction of law which these Indians, in their ignorance, are not able to understand. They cannot see why the Indians of the Northeast have been paid annuities since the foundation of this Government for the extinction of their title, while the Indians who were formerly subject to the Spanish and Mexican Governments are driven from their lands without a dollar. It is impossible for these simple-minded people to understand this sophistry. They consider themselves just as much entitled to the land which their ancestors inhabited before ours landed on Plymouth Rock as the Indians of the Northeast. They have never signed any treaty relinquishing their right to the public domain.

I beg to lay before you a memorial of the Territorial Legislature on the subject:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Council and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona respectfully represent, that the four tribes of Indians known as the Yapapais, Hualapais, Mojaves, and Yumas, numbering about ten thousand, are now scattered over an extent of country from the Gila river on the south to the northern boundary of the Territory, and from the Colorado river on the west to the Rio Verde on the east; that these Indians are now roaming at large over the vast territory above described, gaining a precarious subsistence from the small patches of land along the Colorado river, which they cultivate, and from fishing and hunting; that when the seasons are unfavorable to their little farming interests, or the Colorado river does not overflow to irrigate and enrich their fields, they are reduced to a starving condition, and compelled, by necessity, to make raids upon the stock and property of the whites, and not unfrequently do they ambush the traveler and miner, and waylay and stampede the stock of trains and plunder their packs and wagons; that the whites are settling up the country, and necessarily diminishing their means of subsistence, and increasing the dangers of a collision with them; that the late superintendent of Indian affairs of the Territory, Hon. Charles D. Poston, in view of their scattered and destitute condition, selected and caused to be laid off, on the east bank and bottom of the Colorado river, a reservation ample enough for the accommodation and support of all the above-named tribes; that an irrigating canal can be constructed at an expense of a small amount (the Indians performing the labor) that will render highly productive a large tract of land that will yield an abundance for their support, and afford a large surplus to be disposed of for their education and improvement; that when placed upon said reservation they can, under judicious management, be made not only self-sustaining, but to produce largely for the market; that, to enable those who may be placed over them or have charge of them to open said canal, to remove them upon said reservation, and sustain them until they can, by their own labor, provide enough for their subsistence, your memorialists respectfully ask of your honorable body an appropriation of $150,000; that to secure the attention and favorable consideration of the subject and matters of this memorial by the Congress of the United States,

Be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona, That our Delegate in Congress, Hon. Charles D. Poston, be requested to use all honorable means to bring the subject before Congress.

And be it further resolved, That his Excellency the Governor of the Territory of Arizona be requested to forward this memorial, together with such other information touching the subject as he may have in his possession, to Hon. Charles D. Poston, our Delegate in Congress.

W. CLAUDE JONES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
COLES BASHFORD,
President of the Council.

Approved November 7, 1864.

JOHN M. GOODWIN.

In order that the proposition may be clearly understood I will read the report of the engineer who accompanied me on an examination of the valley of the Colorado to select a reservation for these Indians:

LA PAZ CITY, ARIZONA, May 30, 1864.

SIR: At your request I have made an examination of the lands on the eastern bank of the Colorado river from La Paz to Corner Rock.

I have been surprised at the great quantity of rich bottom land and alluvial soil, traversed by many sloughs and lagoons, which extend from the banks of the river for several miles into the valley. Most of them are dry now, as the river did not rise high enough last year to fill them.

I directed my special attention to the lands between Halfway Bend and the Mesa. With the exception of a few stretches of heavy sand land which I estimate at about one fifth of the entire area, I found the soil excellent, most of it consisting of a light loam, of which many thousand acres are covered with mesquite trees, a sure indication of rich ground, while willows and cotton trees grow luxuriantly in the vicinity of the river, the sloughs, and lagunas.

At some places I noticed alkaline efflorescences, but they are not extensive. If these places could be regularly overflowed, much of the salts would be carried off. It is well known, moreover, that Indian corn and wheat grow well in alkaline soil.

If the eastern boundary of the intended reservation runs from the mouth of the principal slough at Halfway Bend (the Indians call it Mad-ku-dap) in a direction nearly north, 28° 30' east to Corner Rock, it will include an area of about 118 square miles, equal to 75,520 acres. Of this, 6 square miles are Mesa lands, leaving 112 square miles, or 71,680 acres, of valley land. One fifth deducted as sand land leaves 90 square miles, or 57,600 acres, of bottom land or light loamy soil. About one fourth of this, say 22 square miles, or 14,080 acres, is covered with mesquite trees. A large mesquite tree yields sometimes several bushels of beans. Supposing, then, that in this year every acre produced five bushels, the crop would amount to 70,400 bushels, which with rabbits, lizards, tul roots, the fish of the river, the little wheat and pumpkins they can raise, and the sale of hay, may give a precarious subsistence this year to the ten thousand Indians for which the Government intends to make provision.

But, not taking into consideration that many Indians do not relish mesquite beans, the mesquite trees do not bear every year, and agriculture depends entirely on the casual overflows of the river. Last year the crops of the Indians amounted to very little, and if the river does not soon rise it will be the same this year.

The most humane and cheapest way to provide permanently for the Indians, and educate at least their rising generation to useful labors, would be, in my humble opinion, that the Government not only give them the land between Halfway Bend and Corner Rock, but also assist them in digging an irrigating canal from the Mesa toward Halfway Bend. They would then become independent of the uncertain rise and fall of the river, could raise regular crops, and would soon be able to sell a large surplus.

From Halfway Bend to the Mesa, I noticed at various points that the ground slopes gently back from the bank of the river toward the valley. The best proofs of this are the numerous sloughs. Ascending finally the Mesa and looking down the valley, I was struck with the evident facility with which a canal could be dug to irrigate many thousand acres of the richest soil, barren only for want of moisture.

According to Lieutenant Ives's report the fall from the foot of the Mesa to Halfway Bend is fifty-five feet, the distance by land twenty-seven miles. The foot of the Mesa seems to have been destined by nature for the head of a canal. The river flows to this point between hills of conglomerate, upon which freshets can make but little impression. A few piles would make an efficient wing-dam. A belt of willows and ash trees should protect the lower embankment for the first few miles.

At the foot of the Mesa I estimated the difference of level between the bottom of the river and the top of its upper bank fourteen feet.

Following the natural level of the country, and giving one foot fall to the mile, which is much for a large body of water, then, after fourteen miles of canal, all the land between the canal and the river for the remaining thirteen miles could be irrigated. If the canal were at this point only two miles distant from the river, deducting one fifth for sand land, 20 square miles, or 12,800 acres up to Halfway Bend, could be irrigated. But long before the canal has reached the first-mentioned point, sloughs could be filled, depressed flats overflowed by branch ditches, and many Indians could plant little patches along the embankments of the canal while it is in progress of construction.

Taking, now, twenty square miles as a minimum of irrigable land at thirty bushels of Indian corn per acre, they could produce 384,000 bushels; and at twenty bushels of wheat per acre, 256,000 bushels; one third of which, even with the propensity of the Indians to waste, would be more than sufficient for home consumption of ten thousand souls, allowing to each of them, women, children, and babies included, five hundred pounds of corn or grain.

How the canal should actually be laid out, how branch ditches and flood-gates have to be constructed and distributed, what amount of earth the Indians have to remove, what dimensions it should have—what, finally, the cost of this canal would be, (probably less than one hundred thousand dollars,) all this can only be ascertained by a systematic survey of the valley for that special purpose.

Since for years accustomed in my profession to ascertain scientifically if the plans conceived by practical men can be executed, I feel some reluctance in making estimates before I have reduced them to a thorough scientific basis. The estimates of the amount of land to be reclaimed from a desert, and its productiveness, are therefore rather underrated.

The foregoing considerations have convinced me that the lands between Halfway Bend and Corner Rock are not only suitable for a reservation, but, in my humble opinion, are in every regard the best that could be selected in this section of Arizona.

The difference of level between Halfway Bend and La Paz is twenty-eight feet for a distance of nine miles by land, so that the canal could easily be continued from Halfway Bend to the foot of the valley, changing La Paz from "the city of the desert" to the city of a terrestrial Eden of laughing gardens and waving grain fields.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ADOLPHUS F. WALDEMAR,
Chief Engineer.

Colonel CHARLES D. POSTON, Superintendent Indian Affairs, La Paz, Arizona Territory.

Irrigating canals are essential to the prosperity of these Indians. Without water there can be no production, no life; and all they ask of you is to give them a few agricultural implements to enable them to dig an irrigating canal by which their lands may be watered and their fields irrigated, so that they may enjoy the means of existence. You must provide these Indians with the means of subsistence or they will take by robbery from those who have. During the last year I have seen a number of these Indians starved to death for want of food. They were eating the bark and leaves of trees, and also the lizards, frogs, and snakes, so that it was impossible for me to procure any of the great natural curiosities of that country for the Smithsonian Institution.

It was a matter of profound regret that the natural history of Arizona could not be illustrated in that depository of natural science; but the starving condition of the Indians forced them to consume the wonderful reptile productions of that country, which, had a better fate been reserved for them, would have delighted my friend Professor Baird and the many visitors at that fountain of science.

I was especially charged to examine and report upon the customs and habits of the grasshoppers or locusts of the western plains, to determine if they were the locusts of Asia, their mode of procreation, subsequent length of life, and many other interesting details; but alas for the lights of science and opportunity of grasshopper fame! these interesting insects had all disappeared down the wide-spread gullets of my red children. The Indian policy that I have the honor to present to you is simple and plain—easily understood by the Indians and not to be mistaken by the whites. We must have peace or war with the Indians, and I propose to give them their choice. The Indians that choose to be friendly with the Americans and one another will move westward to the reservation selected for them on the Colorado river and betake themselves to habits of industry and thrift. The Indians that reject the proffered friendship must go eastward and mingle with the barbarous Apaches and share their fate. It will then be easy to draw the distinction between friendly and unfriendly Indians. No American and no friend of civilization will disturb or be allowed to disturb the friendly Indians engaged in the active pursuits of productive industry on the Colorado reservation. Here they will have a resting-place and a home on the banks of the river they have bathed in since childhood, and with the generous aid of the great Government whose hapless wards they are will soon become a self-sustaining people. They will learn the first great lesson that by the sweat of their brows they shall earn their bread, and in due time reap the reward that sweetens toil.

With an irrigating canal, the soil of the Colorado will become wonderfully productive. In that latitude the sun is over-genial; and the valley, not having an altitude of more than three hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea, possesses an immunity from snows and frosts, so destructive to crops in more northern latitudes. There is no reason why the valley of the Colorado may not be made as productive as the valley of the Nile. In that temperature it only needs the vivifying influence of water to make the productions of nature spring up like magic.

The system of irrigation is no new experiment; it existed in Egypt before the Pyramids were born; it was practiced in Asia before Confucius wrote; it was brought to great perfection by the Aztecs of America, when our ancestors were dressed in skins and furs, and lived by the booty of the chase; it is scientific agriculture, and the only insurance against the uncertainties of a crop. With a proper system of irrigation, you shall surely reap where you sow; yea, even twice or thrice per annum. The sediment of the Colorado will plaster the walls of a canal and make them impermeable to water; such is the beautiful arcana of nature. On this river a lively commerce is already springing up, and some half dozen steamboats plow its turbid waters. It is navigable five hundred miles from its mouth, and its sources drain the Great American Basin. The Indians will have a ready market for the surplus production at their very doors, and the friendly current of the Colorado will bear it, untaxed, to market.

It will be necessary for the Government to furnish the Indians with some intelligent superintendence in opening their irrigating canal, and the necessary implements of husbandry and seeds to enable them to raise a crop. Then let them work or starve; but do not force them to starve or steal without first giving them a chance to labor. It is a cruel thing to force men into a new civilization without preparing them for its duties. As the Americans come into the country the wants of the Indians increase; but without aid the means of satisfying these artificial wants are not commensurate. Without tools a man is helpless indeed. What would a man do without a knife, an ax, a hoe, a spade, or a shovel? He could make very little progress in agriculture; but tenfold is his power of production increased with these simple implements of husbandry. Among these Indians as well as all primitive people the women are the "hewers of wood and drawers of water," the very slaves of the lords of creation. It is only where the light of Christianity and the spread of civilization illuminate the pathway of a people that woman assumes a position "a little lower than the angels." The Indian women have to work out their salvation in sweat and blood or, lacking food and clothing, flock around a military post like moths around a candle. The dusky maidens of the Colorado are fast disappearing under the influences of these debasing establishments of military power, and soon their graceful forms and melodious voices will be only remembered in tradition and song. The disappearance of a people is a melancholy spectacle and bodes no good to us. The tide of civilization is bearing them to eternity with the same certainty that their native Colorado bears its sands to the sea. On what distant shore they will be stranded or saved is a mystery which they do not attempt to penetrate. The smoke of incineration floats away on the breeze and a few charred bones and smoldering ashes are all that remain of the "human form divine."

Ireteba, the great chief of these Indians, was in Washington a year ago, on a visit to the President and the Army. He returned to his own country much pleased with his visit to the Americans. He told his tribe that it would be of no use to go to war against the Americans; that they were a great people, against whom the Indians could never war successfully. He made an effective speech to them; and he and they agreed that, if the Americans would deal with them fairly and justly, and provide them with the means of existence, they would bury the scalps that they had taken from one another; they would bury the tomahawk, and would never strike an American again. The responsibility now rests upon you. The Great Spirit, which deals alike with the destinies of the red man and the white man, will judge between you. In the long muster-roll of nations, which will be called after the echoes of Gabriel's trumpet shall have died away, if it shall be found that you have dealt fairly with your red brethren on this continent, you will stand before the Dispenser of universal justice acquitted of crime. If, on the other hand, it shall be decided that your track across the continent has been a succession of wrong, without an honorable effort at reparation, what terrible judgments may be meted out to you! We have always time to do justice, and to delay it is a crime. It is especially a duty to render justice to the weak and the helpless. Be merciful to the degenerate, for in the cycle of time our own doom may come.

It is not alone for the Indians that I ask your generosity, however much may be their due; but looking far beyond the present moment, it must be apparent to every man who lifts his mind from the struggle of the hour and indulges in a contemplation of the grand future of our country, that the settlement of the aborigines of the mineral Territories in reservations must precede the active and full development of the great treasures of the nation. It is to these great mineral fields that the financiers of the Government and the world are now looking for relief from the financial embarrassments consequent upon a civil war unprecedented in the history of nations. The idea of discounting or repudiating the national debt can never be indulged in for a moment while the mountains west of the Sierra Madre are teeming with mineral wealth. In order to allow scope and verge enough for our hardy and enterprising frontiersmen to prospect the mines of Arizona, it becomes necessary to have the Indians colonized in a reservation, so that a miner may know when he meets an Indian in a lonely gorge in the mountains whether he is a friend or a foe.

It scarcely becomes me to allude to the subject; but justice to the brave and hardy pioneers who have risked their lives a thousand times to carry the institutions of the American people into Arizona deserves a tribute at the hands of their first Representative. No people have ever endured the hardships, dangers, and privations of those brave and adventurous men who left the homes of their ancestors a thousand miles behind and penetrated the wilderness sending its golden sands into the Gulf of California.

In the year 1824, Sylvester Pattie and his son James, from Bardstown, Kentucky, with a party of about one hundred hardy and adventurous frontiersmen, set out upon a trapping expedition to the head waters of the Arkansas river. After many romantic adventures in New Mexico, the party dispersed, and a few of the boldest spirits undertook to reach the Pacific ocean. They spent one winter at the celebrated mines of Santa Rita del Cobre, on the head waters of the Gila river, and the next spring trapped down that river to its confluence with the Colorado. Here they embarked their canoes on the turbid waters of the Colorado, and drifted down to the Gulf of California, whence they crossed the peninsula to the Pacific ocean. Here they were imprisoned by the Spanish commandant at San Diego, and after a long and cruel confinement the elder Pattie died in prison.

The oldest living trapper in Arizona at this day is old Pauline Weaver, from White county, Tennessee. His name is carved in the Casa Grande, near the Pima villages, on the Gila river, under date of 1832. This old man has been a peacemaker among the Indians for many years, and is now spending the evening of his life in cultivating a little patch of land on the public domain in the northern part of the Territory of Arizona, on a beautiful little stream called the Hassiamp.

In the early settlement of our western country the pioneers formed the advancing wave of civilization, and were generously sustained by the friends and relations they had left behind; but the pioneers of Arizona leaped beyond the reach of succor and led the forlorn hope of civilization. Self-reliant and full of manhood, they went forth to battle alone. And manfully they bore themselves in the struggle, until overborne by the misfortunes which have nearly enveloped the nation in ruin. Many of them had seen the glorious banner of our country carried to the tides of the Pacific ocean, where nature said to man, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." We had to turn our course southward, and sought the unpeopled lands of northern Mexico.

The Government followed in the train of the people, and in a period of great prosperity, when the Treasury was overflowing with gold, gave $10,000,000 for what was called the Gadsden purchase. The people rushed into the new "purchase" and soon the indomitable industry and energy of the coming race was apparent in the discovery of mineral wealth and the establishment of relations with the nearest commercial centers. The industry of our people soon spread a beneficial influence in all northern Mexico; the Indians were softening under the influence of civilization, and I wish the sequel could be omitted. Would that Lethian waters could produce oblivion. In less than sixty days after the demon of civil war had commenced his ravages on this side the continent, the infant settlements of Arizona were abandoned and the track of receding civilization was for the first time in the history of this country turned eastward, marked in its retreat by new-made graves. For two years the Territory remained a prey to anarchy.

At the end of that time, by the indefatigable efforts of a few fast friends, a provisional government for the Territory was organized, and a staff of Federal officers of more than ordinary ability and character were sent across the plains to establish civil government in that remote region. In the overwhelming events of the great civil war impending, it was a grand moral spectacle to see the Republic sending its agents to a remote and distant Territory to plant the banner of freedom on the ruins of a former civilization. We are but repeating history in following the footsteps of the Aztecs from their northern homes to central Mexico. The civil officers sent out by the President have discharged this duty, and discharged it well.

At a greater distance from this capital than any consul ever planted the eagles of Rome from the imperial city they established the stars and stripes of the Republic. In a beautiful lap of the mountains where never white man trod before they located the capital of the Territory and named it in honor of the Aztec historian, Prescott. On this very spot there is an Indian mound with the remains of an ancient fortification of the Montezumas, reminding us forcibly of the mutations of time and the rise and decline of nations; but nowhere yet in ruins do we find a temple dedicated to the living God. Let us take warning and lay deep the foundations of the Christian faith, not only in the monuments of Christianity, but in the hearts of the people.

In that peaceful mountain home no sectional political differences rankle in the heart. It was my good fortune on the last anniversary of our Independence to assist in its celebration in that primitive capital. The people who had borne the banner of freedom from Bunker Hill to those distant mountains and the men who had escaped the horrors of war in the Old Dominion joined in fraternal celebration of Independence day, and consecrated themselves to the future prosperity of the Territory. And there in those everlasting mountains the genius of the American people will build a capital which will rear its domes and spires to the heavens when "Times shall doubt of Rome."

Such is the genius of American civilization. It may be impeded now by the horrors of civil war, but the day is not far distant when it will overleap the boundary of nations like an avalanche, and spread itself over northern Mexico. It is destiny, and it may be a duty to carry our institutions into that country; and God send the day when, as a united people, we may heal the discords of civil war by joining the armies now engaged in fratricidal strife to drive from this continent the fungus of European monarchy. I am willing to join in pæans to universal emancipation for the sake of national unity. "The nationality of the American people" is the motto upon which I was sent into this House, and when it ceases I shall leave it without regret.

It is a source of extreme mortification that I am unable to present this amendment with the approbation of the Committee of Ways and Means, but it has not been possible to bring them to an estimate of the justice and importance of the measure. If the same economy pervades every branch of the administration of the Government, the taxpayers will have no cause of complaint. We have neither military protection, mail facilities, nor any of the fostering cares of Government; but we prefer rather to indulge in pleasant hopes of the future than unworthy complaint. The Pacific States and Territories are rich in wealth, filling up rapidly with an indomitable population and "by and by will grow a little stronger." Confident in strength and hopeful of the future, we are willing to "bide our time." With five hundred thousand square miles of mineral lands, we do not despair. With a climate surpassing any other part of the continent, and perhaps of the world, we shall "multiply and replenish the earth."

No Alpine top nor Apennine valley is waked to industry by a brighter sunlight than bathes the mountains and valleys of Arizona. It is the land of the olive and the vine. The pearls of the Orient were not richer in purity and value than those of the sea of Cortez. The gold of Ophir was not so abundant as that which awaits the hand of industry in our pregnant mountains. The "planchas de Plata" are the richest silver mines known to history. We are the children of your loins; give us sympathy. We are brethren of the same family; give us help. Nurture us, strengthen us, raise us up to dignity, and in a few short years we shall come to add another block to this grand mosaic temple of freedom which we hope will endure to the remotest ages.

The uniform courtesy and kindness with which the Delegates from the remote Territories are received in this capital inspires the most grateful emotions.

As this is the first occasion on which I have presumed to occupy the valuable time of the House, accept my sincere thanks for your kind attention.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee here rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. Cobb, one of its clerks, announcing to the House that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities, and have agreed to a committee of conference, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House; and that Messrs. DOOLITTLE, HARRIS, and BROWN had been appointed on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and had agreed to the appointment of another committee of conference, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House; and that Messrs. TRUMBULL, FARWELL, and POWELL had been appointed on the part of the Senate.

CONDITION OF INDIAN TRIBES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the message of the Senate, asking the appointment of a committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the joint resolution (S. No. 89) directing an inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities.

No objection being made, it was ordered accordingly.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House the message of the Senate, asking for another committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866.

No objection being made, it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 649) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1866, and additional appropriations for the current fiscal year; when the Speaker signed the same.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. STEVENS. I am sorry to be obliged to object to the proposition of the gentleman from Arizona, [Mr. POSTON,] who represents a very worthy Territory. An application for an appropriation of this kind was made to the Committee of Ways and Means, who, on examining the matter, thought such an appropriation a little premature. There have been as yet no treaties with the Indians under which appropriations should be made. We found there were some four or five thousand very excellent white men in the Territory, and that the remainder were Indians; and we made such appropriations, which have already passed here, as were necessary for the proper organization of the Territory. We did not think it would be proper to organize this great Indian system at this time. We thought that it would be better for us to wait until the whole matter can be fully considered and reported on by the commission which we have already appointed for that purpose. The Committee of Ways and Means were reluctant, on account of the eloquent gentleman who represents the Territory, to reject these large appropriations, holding them to be wholly disproportionate.

I move to strike out the gentleman's amendment, and insert the following:

For increase of the salary of the territorial judges of Arizona $1,000 each, $3,000.

Mr. WILSON. I ask whether this amendment is in order; for it is certainly not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona and to insert my amendment instead of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania who made the declaration that there is no provision of treaty for these Indians. I remember well, when the Indian appropriation bill was under discussion a few days since, that we were told by gentlemen that appropriations were necessary for certain tribes of Indians in Oregon and Washington because there were no treaties with them. Now, if it were a good reason to make appropriations for the Indians of Oregon and Washington that there had been no treaties made with them, I do not see why the same reason may not be urged in the case of Arizona. I do not know whether the sum is too large or too small; but I do know that the same reason which carried the appropriation for the Indians of Washington and Oregon ought to induce the adoption of the appropriation for Arizona.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I move to reduce the appropriation to $100,000.

Mr. POSTON. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. Poston's amendment, as modified.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 43.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the Joint Committee on the Library be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to contract with Francis B. Carpenter, at a sum not exceeding $29,000, for the purchase of his painting known as the Emancipation Proclamation before the Cabinet, to be put in the Capitol, in such place therein as the Speaker of the House and the Vice President may designate.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment is not to carry out any existing law, and I make the point of order on it. We cannot appropriate money for pictures at a time like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has some doubt in reference to the question of order, and will submit it to the committee.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 31.

So the committee decided that the amendment was not in order.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the Register of the Treasury for the current year shall be $4,000, and the salary of the chief clerk of the Register's office shall be $2,200 for the same period, after which time their salaries shall remain as heretofore fixed by law; and that the office of the Assistant Register under the Treasurer is hereby abolished.

I will barely state, for the information of the committee, that the passage of this amendment will save the Government about one thousand dollars a year. During the administration of Mr. Chittenden as Register of the Treasury, we were called upon to appoint an Assistant Register of the Treasury, on account of the accumulation of business in that Department. That business has not decreased since then, but has, as I am credibly informed, increased. The Assistant Register who was appointed, owing to an unfortunate circumstance, is not and has not been able during the past year to attend to the business of the office, and it has all devolved upon the Register and chief clerk. I am willing, as long as the Register does the whole business of the office of the Assistant Register, to abolish the latter office and increase the salary of the Register to $4,000. The salary of the Register of the Treasury is now $3,000 a year, and it is proposed to abolish the office of Assistant Register and throw the increased duties upon the Register himself, paying him therefor $1,000 more, and save the difference of the two salaries to the Government.

The resolution further provides that the salary of $4,000 shall only be for the current year, and that thereafter the salary shall go back to $3,000; leaving it to Congress, as the public business may require, to increase the salary at their pleasure. This is an economical measure, a just measure, and I hope it will meet the approbation of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire what the salary is of the office which is proposed to be abolished?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. It is $2,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. This proposition increases the salary of the Register to $4,000.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. It increases the salary of the Register from $3,000 to $4,000 a year. The salary of the chief clerk is $2,000 a year, and I here propose to add to it $200.

Mr. STEVENS. If I understand this proposition correctly I should be sorry to vote for it. The Assistant Register is a very worthy man, but has been afflicted with paralysis lately, from which he has now recovered. If I understand it, this proposition legislates him out of office and gives the salary to the Register. I cannot go for that.

Mr. WILSON. I remember very distinctly the discussion which occurred on the proposition to create the office of Assistant Register, and the reason alleged for it was that the Register himself was then in some degree afflicted with paralysis, and was unable to sign his name, and that therefore it became necessary to get an assistant to do the writing which otherwise would devolve upon the Register. But now it appears that the Assistant Register is afflicted with paralysis. If so, I think we had better abolish the office. We have a Register now who is an able-bodied man, who is able to write, and therefore if we now get rid of the paralytic we shall have a man in office who is able to write and do all that is necessary to be done. I hope, therefore, that the proposition to abolish the office of Assistant Register will be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. In that view of the matter I propose to amend by striking out the words "and be it further enacted, that the office of Assistant Register of the Treasury is hereby abolished."

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentlemen from Indiana will not prevail. It is evidently introduced for the purpose of defeating the proposition which is embodied in the amendment I have presented.

Now, sir, I have to say that at the time the Assistant Register was appointed it was deemed important that some additional assistance should be provided in the office of the Assistant Register of the Treasury. I have no doubt that the person who was appointed was a competent gentleman, but for a portion of the last year he has been in such a condition that he has rendered no assistance. The Register, who came from Vermont, (where nobody lives except very industrious gentlemen,) is an able lawyer, a hard-working man, and he has performed the arduous duties which his position devolves upon him with great satisfaction to the Secretary of the Treasury. And I think it is a matter of simple justice, right, and fairness that his salary should be increased for the present year when expenses are so enormous that a man with a family cannot live upon $4,000 a year. The proposition leaves the legislation in reference to the future salary in the hands of future Congresses. We all know that this is a position of great responsibility, requiring great labor, great care, a good judicial mind, and fair legal attainments. The present Register has all these qualifications, and I know of no officer of the Government who accomplishes more labor, and devotes himself more assiduously to his duties than the present Register, Mr. Colby. Now, he is perfectly willing to perform these duties for a year, because the pay is necessary for him as it is for any gentleman who has not an income outside of what he receives here in Washington to make both ends meet; and inasmuch as he is performing the duties so well, and inasmuch as the amendment only asks for a provision for the current year, I do hope, as a matter of justice, that the committee will be inclined to favor this proposition.

I have no particular objection to abolishing the office of Assistant Register of the Treasury, although I am quite sure, from what information I have received and which I know to be true, that the duties of this office have not only immensely increased but are daily accumulating, and that there will be business for an Assistant Register if we shall retain the office and have a competent man appointed. But under the circumstances, inasmuch as the Register is willing to assume the labors which would devolve upon the Assistant Register, supposing that he can carry it along for one year more, I think it is but just that he should receive the increased compensation of $1,000, and for the purpose of saving expense to the Government I have also put a provision into the amendment abolishing the office of Assistant Register of the Treasury.

Mr. SPALDING. If it be necessary to increase the salary of the Register of the Treasury I do not know that I have any objection to it. But I do object most strenuously to this mode of doing it. I understand that the proposition is to break down the Assistant Register. I do not know him. I do not even know where he comes from; but I understand that the man has been unfortunate, and it is proposed to drive him from office because he has been a paralytic and give him pay to the Register.

Now, I do not like this way of doing the national business. If the Register be a competent officer, as I trust he is, let the gentleman bring forward a bold proposition to increase his salary, and we will vote upon it; but do not couple with it a proposition to break down a man who has been unfortunate. I object to that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will this save any money to the Treasury?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. It will.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I am for it.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. It will save $1,000; but I vote for it because it is a matter of justice. I have heard a good deal said here, both in this committee and in the House, in relation to economy. That is a question that ought to be considered by every member of this House; but when the question comes up between doing justice to an individual and saving one, two, or ten thousand dollars to this great Government, I am for doing justice; fiat justitia ruat cælum is the motto that men may well adopt, and the principle should be carried out in legislative action in the same degree that we would carry it out in our own business. No gentleman upon the floor of the House will ask services to be rendered to him without returning an adequate consideration to the man who renders them, and I believe that the Government will be better prospered, as men in their private relations are better prospered, if in any case that comes up it shall be considered on its individual merits, and let right be done, and as I believe that this amendment is right I hope it will be passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend from Vermont know that nothing could be more unjust than to increase this salary while the salaries of the Second and Third Auditors and the other heads of bureaus remain as they now are? The injustice is manifest when you consider the enormous increase in the business of the offices of the two Auditors. It is not proposed to increase those salaries at all. There is no movement in that direction. I object to a discrimination in favor of a particular officer who performs the same class of duties to the exclusion of others. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I call for tellers on the amendment to the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HOLMAN and WOODBRIDGE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-eight, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. SLOAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SLOAN and STILES were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 47.

So the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no person shall be tried by court-martial, or military commission, in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons actually mustered, or commissioned, or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies charged with being spies; and all proceedings heretofore had contrary to this provision are declared void; and all persons not subject to trial, under this act, by court-martial or military commission, now held under sentence thereof, shall be forthwith discharged or delivered to the civil authorities to be proceeded against before the courts of the United States according to law. And all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

I wish to say merely a few words in explanation of this amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to make a point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I hope the gentleman will not persist; let us have a vote.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have raised a point of order on everything that I believed not to be in order on an appropriation bill. I would treat all alike.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Let me explain the amendment before you press your point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Certainly, if my point of order can be reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order can be waived, by unanimous consent, until the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Davis] gets through.

No objection was made.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire at this period of the session to detain the House even by an argument in favor of the amendment I have submitted. I desire to state merely what it contemplates and to beg the House to give a direct vote upon it. It is a measure which touches the very foundation of republican government, the liberty of the citizen, and nothing more, nothing less.

I do not think it is exclusively, perhaps not chiefly, the fault of those in authority that military commissions have tried, contrary to the Constitution and laws of the United States, many of its citizens. It began first in the rebel States, then spread to the border States, the theater of armed conflicts, then invaded Pennsylvania, Indiana, and New York, amid the general acclaim of the people; and now that it reaches as far north as Boston we hear the first murmur of its advocates or instigators. What that amendment contemplates is, not to cast imputation upon any administration or any officer, but recognizing the error which the people as well as the Government have in common committed against the foundation of their own safety, now, before the very idea of the supremacy of the law has faded from the country, to restore it to its power.

This amendment is confined rigidly to the loyal States, to the States in which the courts of the United States are open, to the States whose governments the United States guaranty, so that it does not strip the Government of any power, legal or usurped, which it has thought necessary in its efforts to suppress the rebellion. It leaves everybody to be tried by military court-martial who is actually in the military service of the Government, or who being a rebel enemy is arrested as a spy. But it annuls everything that has been done heretofore under illegal military commissions, directs all persons now in illegal confinement under sentence of illegal military commissions to be either discharged or delivered to the civil tribunals to be there proceeded against according to law. There the amendment stops.

I desire to make an imputation on no one. This amendment is proposed for the benefit of every party and of every administration. And I trust that the House will allow it to be incorporated into this bill, that it may become the acknowledged as it is now the supreme law of the land and the right of the citizen.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now insist upon my point of order that this amendment is not germane to this bill in any way, and therefore is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DAWES. Is the appeal from the decision of the Chair debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

Upon the question of sustaining the decision of the Chair, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 48.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and DAVIS, of Maryland, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 65.

So the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

ENROLLED BILL.

The committee here rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled

Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title: An act (H. R. No. 763) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and to amend an act amendatory thereof, approved July 2, 1864; when the Speaker signed the same.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The committee again resumed (Mr. PIKE in the chair) the consideration of the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this proposition will be adopted by the committee and the House; and I hope that this will be done without anything being said that shall excite partisan feeling on the subject. We owe it to the cause of constitutional liberty and to the preservation of republican government to enact a law that shall abrogate the system of arbitrary imprisonments and trials by military commissions which has been inaugurated, and which shall secure to every citizen the protection guaranteed by the Constitution against these weapons of despotism. If, during the excitement of this civil war, by reason of the real or supposed exigencies of the times, the practice of arbitrary arrests and trials of civilians by military tribunals has grown up, it is our right and our duty now, when it cannot truthfully be claimed that there is any need of proceedings of the kind, to enact a law which shall forbid them in the future, and which shall restore to the jurisdiction of the civil tribunals those who are now in prison.

I will not, sir, in any spirit that can provoke the least angry or partisan discussion or dissension, allude to abuses and outrages which have grown up and been practiced under this system of arrests, trials, and incarcerations. I am sure that during the last and present session every member of each party has had brought to his knowledge, by the applications of men in prison, cases which certainly aroused his indignation, and very often, when he called the attention of one of the heads of the Departments to the case, it was ascertained that no charges existed against the man who had been in prison for months, and he was discharged.

Sir, we owe it to the citizen, to the Constitution, and to ourselves, to abolish and prevent in future a system which has grown up, and which places and leaves the citizen in such a position that he can be held in prison without the right to a speedy trial by a jury of his country, and must owe his liberation to solicitation and favor rather than innocence protected by law. Why, sir, in the State of New York, civilians have been kept in confinement for months by the mere order of sub-officials, without any color of lawful authority. Under this system citizens of the State of New York have been arrested in this District, detained for months in the prison near this Capitol, and then discharged without trial of any kind. Other citizens of that State, civilians, men of unimpeachable character, have been thrust into the same prison, detained for months, subjected to trial by military commissions for alleged violations of the statutes of New York, and only discharged when this military tribunal, even, could find nothing against them.

Sir, it seems strange indeed that such things could have occurred under a Government deriving all its powers from the Constitution of the United States, and the rights of whose citizens are guaranteed by that instrument, and in this District, where and when all the courts were open and daily exercising their functions, and where the highest judicial tribunal of our country was sitting. If such things are done by executive power and not rebuked, what becomes of liberty? The practices which the proposed amendment is intended to rebuke, abolish, and prevent, are destructive of all real liberty. They are familiarizing the American people with despotism in its worst form. They are teaching us to rely on influence and favor for our liberty rather than laws and constitutions.

I think there can be no reasonable objection to the proposed law. It is guarded in its provisions.

It is to operate only in States where the courts are open, where there is no insurrection. It does not remove from the operation of military authority spies or any persons in the military or naval service. It provides for the detention and trial in the courts of those against whom there is or shall be any charge of crime. I rejoice in the belief that we shall now before this Congress adjourn, without any partisan or censorious discussion, enact a law liberating those now improperly imprisoned, forbidding the exercise hereafter of a power from which so many of our citizens have suffered, and by which liberty has been outraged and our form of Government brought into disrepute. After voting for it I think each member will be satisfied that he has discharged faithfully in this respect a duty to the Administration, to the Constitution, and to the people. I trust that the proposition will be adopted by a unanimous vote.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I believe that during the time I have served in Congress I have, to the extent of my ability, devoted myself to the effort to ferret out and punish those who have been engaged in defrauding the Government. During the last Congress I devoted I think some part of my strength, I know I did a great deal of my time, to that kind of work, calling down upon myself the curses of those who had been engaged as contractors and otherwise in supplying the Government. In carrying out what I was endeavoring to do, I, in cooperation with others, reported to the House a bill which became a law, making contractors with the Government, and those engaged in supplying it, subject to trial by court-martial. I was aware that it was an extreme measure; but I felt at that time that it was necessary to check what seemed to be a growing and an alarming evil. In putting into the hands of the officers of the Government this extreme power, I had confidence that they would exercise it with moderation and reason. But, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say that my observation of the administration of that law, of which I take to myself some part of the responsibility, has been such during the past year or two as to compel me to support this amendment. Sir, we seem to have lost sight, in the execution of that law, of the guarantees of the Constitution. We seem to forget that civilians charged with offense have any right to trial by jury, or a knowledge of the offense for which they are frequently incarcerated in prison.

Sir, we seem to be taking very little note of the direction in which we are drifting. Day before yesterday I voted for a bill, and I will read its title. It seemed harmless enough. It is a bill "to provide for the better organization of the pay department of the Navy." It became a law so far as votes in this House were needed for that purpose. There was nothing in its title to attract attention. But to my astonishment, on turning to the last section I found a provision which I did not and could not suspect from anything indicated by the title, and which is of so extraordinary a character that I am glad that a motion has been entered to reconsider the vote by which it passed this House that I can expose its enormous character. I now call the attention of members to this section to show how unconcernedly we are drifting along in this current without seeming to be aware of it into the strangest state of things that ever existed under a free Government. In a bill with the title which I have given it is enacted in the third and last clause that every one, not only in the naval service, but every servant of everybody in the employ of the Navy Department, every little servant who goes in and out of the doors of the Navy Department, every driver of a team which happens to be loaded with supplies for the Navy Department, every one, and every one's agent or servant who happens to deal with the Navy Department, shall be subject to trial by court-martial for any alleged offense in such dealing. Every man in the employ of the Navy Department; every agent, employe, or servant connected with that Department, in all its ramifications, is subject to be tried by a court-martial. And the punishment to be inflicted by that court-martial, without trial by jury in the form guaranteed by the Constitution, is to be a fine not exceeding $10,000, and imprisonment in any penitentiary of the United States not exceeding ten years. I understand from high authority in the Navy Department, from which this section has come, that courts-martial are not organized like courts of law, to guard the rights of the accused and secure justice, but are organized to convict.

I have in the last fortnight had the painful duty devolved upon me to read the proceedings of a court-martial under the law which I reported to the House some two years ago. It is one which, I venture to say, has hardly a parallel for the bitter malignity which seems to run through the whole proceedings, and for wider departure from old and established rules of law, of which the accused were the victims, and by which they were hunted, since the days of Jeffreys. It is the case of Smith Brothers, of Boston. If every charge alleged before the court-martial were taken to be true, just as alleged, they would only have been in default, in transactions covering a business of more than twelve hundred thousand dollars, and the furnishing of thousands of different articles, barely twenty-two hundred dollars, and without anything which deserves the name of evidence that this paltry default was intentional.

They were arrested by a band of soldiers, without warning; their store was shut up, and they were taken to Fort Warren, not being permitted to write to their families and inform them where they had gone. Their dwelling-houses were searched by a band of soldiers, which was the first notice to their families of their arrest, and every private paper, even the private notes between them and their wives, was taken and carried off, and kept from them until this very day and hour. They were denied bail at first, and when it could not longer be withheld, $500,000 bail was demanded, and when the merchants of Boston testified their confidence in the accused by furnishing it, $50,000 was accepted. Nothing but the earnest protest of the entire Massachusetts delegation in Congress saved them, through the President's interference, from being taken for trial from Boston to Philadelphia, and confined in a prison ship there when not in court. Their books and papers and letters were subjected to examination for long months before charges were made against them; and when they came, all told, if true, amounted to only $2,200; and I say, sir, without fear of contradiction by any fair mind who will read the evidence, with nothing deserving the name of evidence of the slightest intention to defraud. No sentence of that court-martial has been publicly announced, but I have reason to believe it is two years' imprisonment and $20,000 fine.

I do not desire to screen any one from his just deserts who attempts to defraud the Government. But why a court-martial to try these men, except that "courts-martial are organized to convict?" The courts of law were open in Massachusetts, the judges are spotless, the juries incorruptible. Righteous judgment could be entered against them if convicted by their peers, and a just sentence executed upon them. There was not the slightest need, or pretense of need, for a court-martial. Yet these extraordinary proceedings were visited upon gentlemen against whom there never was a breath of reproach uttered in the city where they live; gentlemen who enjoy the confidence of those among whom they have done business their lives long, and who to-day, notwithstanding the infamous farce of this court-martial, are enjoying unimpaired the confidence of a business community as sensitive as the apple of the eye to the slightest lack of integrity. I do not say why this unjustifiable course was pursued toward these men. I only say that it happened immediately after they had testified before an investigating committee of Congress in reference to certain frauds that had come to their knowledge very near the doors of certain naval officials. Now, sir, I submit that it is time for us to act. We are in a condition that we can do so. The situation of the country is such, the progress of our arms is such, and the position of things in the Army and Navy is such, that we can afford, at least where our own citizen civilians are charged with crime in States where there is no rebellion, where the courts of law are open, and have been found hitherto, through the whole existence of the Republic, sufficient to mete out justice to the guilty and protect the innocent—I say, under such circumstances, we are in such a condition that we can afford to observe at least the forms of law in the trial of our own citizens. Let me ask you, what need there is of subjecting a mere messenger at the door of the Navy Department to trial by a court-martial for any alleged offense against what is announced to be a rule there?

I hope, therefore, that no desire to mete out punishment to any guilty contractor, agent, or servant—in which desire I claim to be not a whit behind any man in this House—will lead us further to trench upon the rights of citizens. In those States where peace reigns, where courts of justice are still open, and their administration has been such as to commend them to the confidence of the people, when a man is charged with an offense let him at least have a trial according to the provisions of the Constitution; let the offense be plainly and distinctly set forth in information or indictment, and be tried by his peers.

It is because I had a little something to do with furnishing the Department with this artillery which they have turned so much upon the people of the northern States, and have found so fruitless after all in checking corruption, cheating, and plundering upon the part of contractors, and so administered as to become the potent instrument for trampling upon the rights of the citizens, that I have ventured to raise a protest against the very bill I reported myself, that has been perverted from the honest use for which it was enacted by the last Congress of the United States, and to ask the House to do this much and this little for the protection of our citizens.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "spies," as follows:

All proceedings heretofore had contrary to this provision are declared void, and all persons not subject to trial under this act by court-martial or military commission now held under sentence therefor, shall be forthwith discharged and delivered to the civil authorities, to be proceeded against before the courts of the United States according to law; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

If we could indulge in it in these last hours of the session, this subject might be fruitful of debate; but as it is, I shall content myself with saying that if the resolution were confined to its first clause, were made prospective, so that hereafter trials for proper military offenses only should be tried by military courts, I could give it my most hearty support. But the general jail delivery—and it would operate as that—provided for in the latter part of the provision, I cannot assent to, for the reason that it would involve us not only in inconsistency but in some degree, perhaps, in wrong. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] admits that he was the author of the law passed by the last Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I introduced it; I was not the author.

Mr. SCHENCK. He introduced the law for the punishment of contractors and those who in any way furnished supplies to the Government. I have that law here under my eye. Now, however improvident it might have been then, how much more may it be now, when we see our way clearly out of the difficulties of this rebellion. It is very certain that arrests have been made, trials taken place, and convictions had under the operation of what, at least, was taken for law, and having the sanction of the Congress of the United States. Just so, at the last session of the present Congress, in the bill for reorganizing the quartermaster's department, it was provided that all persons, whether civil or military, who were in any way concerned in furnishing supplies to the quartermaster's department, or who were engaged in the inspection of supplies, or who were, according to the meaning of the statute, mixed up in such matters, should be liable to trial by a military court. And such trials possibly may have been had. We again here, the other day, passed a section in an appropriation bill infringing in the same way on the right of the citizen to be tried only by the civil courts, and not by military tribunals. I understand that it was done inadvertently; I was not in the Hall at the time; and I should cheerfully vote to reconsider in order to get rid of the section referred to.

Now, this being the history of the matter, it seems to me that we ought not to go back and make a general jail delivery, but ought to leave these men to their constitutional rights in the courts. But a general jail delivery would let loose upon the community all the conspirators at Chicago who were actually concerned, if the charges be true, in what is equivalent to levying war, who were armed for the purpose of liberating the rebel prisoners in order that the city of Chicago might be sacked and destroyed; and so in several other cases where such trials have been had. If the amendment be modified, so that the first part of it shall be omitted, I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to ask my colleague a question. I listened with attention to what he said in relation to the last part of this amendment. I desire to ask him now how men who are confined under sentence of military commissions or courts-martial are to obtain their constitutional rights when the habeas corpus is suspended as it now is.

Mr. SCHENCK. By application to the courts.

Mr. PENDLETON. But the courts have only an opportunity of exercising their jurisdiction in case you bring the prisoner before them, and when the habeas corpus is suspended he cannot be brought there.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the habeas corpus is suspended, as a matter of course he could not.

Mr. PENDLETON. Is it not suspended in all these cases by proclamation of the President?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, I think not.

Mr. PENDLETON. That has been my understanding.

Mr. SCHENCK. In a particular case when the matter came before a court in this city a short time since, the President indorsed a suspension in that particular case on the papers.

I was about to remark, in confirmation of the view which I take of this matter, that some remedy should be applied, that I have been engaged in an investigation in reference to the Old Capitol prison, and although we found a large number of persons confined there, most, if not all of whom are perhaps properly confined there, so far as the question of their guilt for fraud and rascality is concerned, yet there are some men confined there under military authority for offenses that are triable by the courts of the country, and if the first part of this amendment shall be adopted, they will be admitted at once to that sort of trial.

Mr. GANSON. I would suggest to the gentleman that this amendment provides that these persons shall be turned over to the civil tribunals so that they may be tried. It does not turn these men loose upon the community, as the gentleman suggested.

Mr. SCHENCK. I apprehend the result would be this: when a man is tried before a military court, he objects to the jurisdiction of the court as being a military court, before which he is not triable. If tried hereafter before a civil court you would find him shifting his ground and pleading a former conviction.

Mr. GANSON. Does the gentleman think that any decent tribunal would hold that a good plea? No respectable judicial tribunal in the country would hold such a plea good.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suppose that in reference to these contractors, sutlers, and other persons who are quasi civilians, who are now by law triable by military courts, that law would be sustained. A large number of those persons have been tried under laws which, whether rightfully or improvidently, have been passed. Yet all of these persons are to be turned loose, or turned over to the civil courts, freed from the punishment awarded them under trial by court-martial; and they would plead that they had been already tried under laws regularly passed. That is the difficulty which I apprehend; the sweeping effect of the last part of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. Davis.] The conviction is forced upon my mind more and more strongly every day that a remedy is necessary in order to have some protection against the extreme measures taken in these trials. The former portion of the proposed amendment I think is a proper provision, and therefore I have made the motion to strike out all but that part.

Mr. YEAMAN. I ask my friend from Ohio [Mr. Schenck] to accept the following as an addition to his amendment, to be inserted in lieu of what he proposes to strike out:

Or enemies charged with a violation of the laws of war.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is for guerrillas?

Mr. YEAMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will modify my amendment so as to make it to strike out all of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] after the word "spies," and insert what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. YEAMAN] has proposed.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise not for the purpose of making a speech, but to express my regret that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] should have thought it his duty, at this stage of the session, when so much business is pressing upon us, when it is so necessary to close action upon this bill in order that we may bring in some of the most important measures which have been before us for some time. Now he ought to know that all these arrests and trials have been had by virtue of laws passed by Congress. If the Department ordering these tribunals has proceeded according to the laws which we ourselves have passed, and those tribunals have erred, it is the fault of the tribunals, not of the Department. In all those cases there is more than one side of the story. And that being so, I do think that the attempt to correct all these judicial proceedings in the last moments of Congress is one of the most dangerous things which was ever attempted, and if successful it will set loose a class of people who are likely to destroy us. I know that my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] when he proposed the law to which he has referred, did it when he perhaps thought it was in safer hands, my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. Cameron, being then Secretary of War. That may be some excuse for his having introduced it in that way.

But I will say that I have seen nothing in the conduct of the present Secretary of War which has induced me to doubt his integrity. He is an earnest man. Sometimes mistakes have been committed; but if there be any man in this Administration, any man in this Government, who has sought faithfully to execute the law, who has been above corruption, it is the present Secretary of War, according to my judgment; and if those laws which we have passed have been too broad why not take the matter in hand a week ago and modify them? We have placed within the jurisdiction of courts-martial men who are in civil life, and who in some way interrupt the military operations of the Government. A man in civil life who is not charged with any complicity with interfering with the military operations of the Government is not subject to the operation of those laws.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is due to myself, after the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] to say that in no remarks which I have offered to the House did I intend to inculpate either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy personally in these transactions. For, with the knowledge I have of their true character, I do not think that personally either of them would countenance any such thing. But I understand that courts-martial have ruled that men are criminally liable for what their servants do, whether those who employ them as servants know it or not. It is only in that regard that they are held responsible for what their servants do.

Mr. STEVENS. I did not understand the gentleman as casting censure.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] cannot have a higher opinion of the integrity and earnestness of character and well-meaning purpose of the Secretary of War than I have. But my argument is directed to the fact that Congress itself has been improvident in passing laws of this kind, and it is time to go back from that course.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that courts-martial, being composed principally of men ignorant of law, have very often made mistakes in their rulings and in their decisions on points of law. These things are inevitable. In civil life we find, every day, the decisions of the highest judges reversed by an assembled court. It would be strange if these things did not exist. But can we safely undertake, in a little amendment of three lines, at the heels of the session, to reverse all these decisions and turn loose God knows who, and let it extend no one knows how far? But I pray gentlemen to reserve this for a time when we can consider it deliberately. Let us go on and finish the business, and then, in due time, let this matter be brought up.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will perhaps allow me to suggest a substitute which may meet even his approval—a substitute which the gentleman who offered the last substitute thinks is more complete than his. It is:

That no person shall hereafter be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open for any charge not specified as an offense by military or civil law, nor for offenses cognizable in said courts and punishable by existing civil law, except they are persons actually mustered or commissioned or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies, or spies, or conspirators in aid of the rebellion against the United States who are charged with being spies, or with being the violators of military law.

Mr. STEVENS. Suppose our own citizens act as spies; may they not be tried by a military commission?

Mr. GARFIELD. The moment they turn spies against the Government they become rebel enemies.

Mr. STEVENS. That is not a fair definition of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. They certainly turn conspirators.

Mr. STEVENS. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are throwing open the door for the operations of our open and secret enemies. Its effect may reach much further than is intended. It is no time to consider great questions of this kind. I pray that we may be allowed to proceed and finish the ordinary business which must be finished, and not further interrupt it by the intersection of matters that are certainly not in order. I move that the committee do now rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I trust the gentleman will not insist on that motion till I am heard.

Mr. STEVENS. If the House wish to have no business done, it is for the House itself to decide.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I think this is the first and highest business of Congress.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the weight of the criticism of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and I am sure that nobody will say that I have ever embarrassed the proceedings of this House by any pertinacious adherence to schemes of my own. I have never embarrassed the House week after week by motions to tax or exempt whisky on hand. That would have been a more appropriate subject of criticism than such an amendment as this, which is never too early, and can never be too late until the voice of liberty shall cease to be heard in the United States. Then it will be impertinent to arrest the progress of supplies for the Government by calling the attention of the Representatives of the people to the freedom of their constituents. Let this bill perish a thousand times rather than that any vote should go on the records of this House declaring that the protection of the liberties of the citizens of Massachusetts and the citizens of Maryland are not of paramount importance to a vote of money for the violators of their rights. There has been no other period, sir, at which I could obtain the ear of the House on such an amendment. I have had my eye on the gradual intrusion of the military authority on the rights of the citizen from the outbreak of the rebellion. It was first instigated by the people; and the most eminent jurists of the land converted their clamor into the semblance of the voice of the law by maintaining the right of the President to suspend the habeas corpus without the authority of Congress—in the face of John Marshall's judgment. Gentlemen of the Opposition, on this topic, have no right here to cast imputations on the Administration. George B. McClellan first set the bad example in an order illegally suspending the right of habeas corpus in Maryland. I refer to that not as an imputation on them, but because it shows that it is no party question with which we are dealing to-day, but an American question, a question of republican liberty endangered by the common madness of Government and people. The evil has gone so far that to-day every man feels, without the necessity of an argument, that there must be a stop put to military trials of citizens in the States here represented or there is no law or liberty in the land.

The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania has said that convictions have taken place under laws passed by Congress. I admit it; but that proves only that Congress is also guilty of the usurpation. And the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has told us that the law which he introduced has failed to serve the purpose contemplated, while it has developed consequences of which he did not dream. The honorable gentleman says that it ought to be repealed; and if it ought to be repealed, then carry the remedy to the root of the grievance and discharge the men who were convicted under what was in form a law, but in fact a usurpation which had not the authority of the Constitution.

But, sir, have prosecutions stopped within the limits of the acts of Congress? If they had, I could have heard with more patience the appeal of my honorable friend from Pennsylvania. But every one knows that they have not. We in Maryland have known it by sharp castigation now for three years. It is now being known in New York. And in Boston men have turned gray under persecutions not according to those laws.

But, sir, what do you say with reference to trials for things that are not crimes under any law, for things that are not defined to be crimes, civil or military? What do you say to the trial of a loyal citizen in the city of Baltimore upon the charges and specifications which I hold in my hands, for forging Jefferson Davis's currency? One of my constituents is now in jail under those specifications, having been tried and condemned by a military tribunal for attempting to break down the rebel currency! I can state no other fact that will better illustrate the insolence of irresponsible military tribunals, known to no law, appointed under no law, restrained by no law, authorized by nobody, bound by no law but the will of the men who sit in their uniforms to try the rights of American citizens according to the law of the sword.

Mr. STEVENS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this man was convicted on the ground of having counterfeited the rebel currency?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. He was condemned for that, and is now in jail.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, I think that a man who was fool enough to spend his time in such work ought to suffer some severe punishment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. If all fools are at the mercy of the military courts and they are to judge of it, they have a wide jurisdiction. [Laughter.]

Then there is the case of Weisenfeld. This man was not charged with defrauding the Government, under the act of Congress; he never placed himself within the reach of the law to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred. He was charged, and in my judgment charged falsely, and convicted on testimony which no jury in the world of any political complexion would weigh an instant, of having sold a few hundred dollars' worth of goods to a Government spy to be sent across the lines to the southern confederacy. That trial by military commission was authorized by no law known to any statute-book in the United States. The crime of trading with the rebel States is expressly directed to be tried and punished by indictment before the United States courts for a misdemeanor merely; but he now lies in a New York penitentiary, herding with felons, murderers, and thieves, though if legally convicted before Chief Justice Chase he could by law have been sentenced only to fine and imprisonment in jail!

I am daily beset by letters and solicitations of loyal gentlemen, my firmest and best personal friends in the world, to go to the President and beg as a boon that this man be pardoned! I have had no stronger pressure brought upon me since I have been in public life. My reply is: if a petition is gotten up for Mr. Weisenfeld to pardon the President for his illegal oppression, I will sign it; but I will not degrade the name of an American citizen by signing a petition to beg as a favor the personal liberty of an American citizen illegally and oppressively condemned by a military commission, and that at the hands of the President who twice refused to refer his case to the courts of the United States wide open for his protection, and in the face of the laws and Constitution of the United States subjected him to this illegal persecution.

Sir, let him stay where he is till the voice of public indignation or the whispers of conscience compel his honorable discharge—not his pardon! Till they who illegally confined him shall beg him to come forth!

Mr. Chairman, the alarming fact is, this—military commissions do not even profess to be governed by the laws of the United States enacted by Congress. They have created a department of jurisprudence unknown to the laws of the United States, nowhere embodied in statutes or decisions, called the "customs of war." They try loyal men in loyal States, where no war rages, for a violation of what they call "the usages of war." Here are the pandects of the future empire of the United States; the rulings of the Judge Advocate General on "the usages and customs of war" applied to peaceful citizens in loyal States where the courts are open, where the law alone ought to be the rule of every judgment and every conviction.

This invention of the law of "the usages of war" and "military offenses," applied to citizens and friends instead of enemies, annuls every act of Congress.

In vain does the act of the 3d of March, 1863, punish the aiding a soldier to desert by one not in the military service on legal conviction in the courts of the United States; in vain does the act of the 3d of March, 1863, punish fraudulent claims, false oaths, forged signatures, forging papers, embezzling United States property, false receipts for arms, purchasing arms from soldiers, when committed by a person in the military forces of the United States, on conviction by court-martial, and at the discretion of the court-martial, but in the third section declare that any person not in the military forces of the United States guilty of those acts, shall forfeit certain fines and be subject to certain imprisonment on conviction in the courts of the United States; for the military commissions presume to punish every one of these acts committed by citizens in defiance of the law securing them a constitutional trial. By the act of the 2d March, 1831, forging pay certificates is punishable by the courts of the United States in the District of Columbia; yet a military commission punishes it within sight of the open court-house and of the President's mansion!

The act of March 3, 1863, expressly directs a person guilty of resisting the draft to be arrested by the provost marshal and to be forthwith delivered to the civil authorities, and, on conviction by them, subjects him to fine and imprisonment; but the military commissions have annulled that law, and, instead of delivering the person to the civil authorities for trial, themselves hold and try, convict and punish him; and this when the courts of the United States are wide open in the District where Congress sits in peace and enacts the laws which are thus defied!

If these things be not arrested, there is no law but the sword, no judge but the majority of a military commission holding their commission at the will of the President.

Now, sir, I have a word for the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. YEAMAN,] who moved to include persons engaged in violating the rules and customs of war. Does that mean citizens of the United States in loyal States, where the courts of the United States are open, where their act is treason, for which the statute of the United States says they shall be tried, on indictment, before the courts of the United States, and who, the Constitution says, shall be tried no otherwise than by a jury of the State and district in which the crime was committed, and convicted only on the testimony of two witnesses? ♦

If it is notorious that they are guerrillas, why in the name of conscience and common sense cannot that be made to appear to a jury of their loyal fellow-citizens, to be summoned by a marshal appointed by the President himself; prosecuted by a district attorney that he appoints; adjudged by judges who hold their office during life; many of them now even appointed by Mr. Lincoln, and all liable to impeachment by us and conviction by the Senate if not fit to administer justice? If it be a matter of doubt, then the prisoners are entitled to that doubt; and if it is so plain that there is no doubt, then any tribunal will convict. That is my answer to that proposed amendment.

Mr. YEAMAN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. YEAMAN. I only desire, Mr. Chairman, to state that there is now a law of the Congress of the United States prescribing the mode and manner of trying these vagabonds, cut-throats, and robbers, who have to-day become the greatest scourge to the States of Missouri, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

In reply to the suggestion, if it is so notorious that they are guerrillas why cannot it be proved and established in a court of justice, I will say now that in three fourths of Kentucky we have no courts of justice, because from the acts of these men we cannot hold them. In eight counties of my own district they have burned our court-houses, and the officers of the law cannot go there, juries cannot be summoned, and witnesses cannot testify. I will add, if the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I cannot yield for an argument.

Mr. YEAMAN. I do not propose to make an argument.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. It is impossible for me to yield further. I must go on.

In the first place, if three fourths of the State of Kentucky are subject to incursions of guerrillas, the other fourth is not, and that will furnish jurors enough. If there is room to hold a military court there is room to hold a civil court. If men are not afraid to go to testify before a military court they will not be afraid to go before a civil court. If bayonets are needed to protect them before a military court, bayonets can protect them before a civil court. Sir, this hankering after military courts is not because they cannot be tried and convicted before the courts of the United States if guilty; but men mad with civil war want a sharper and easier way to deal with criminals as enemies. It is the cry for vengeance and not justice! That is what it is and nothing else.

I live in a State that has never disgraced itself by rebellion, but it has been disturbed by internal dissensions; and I know the rancorous hostility which has grown up between men even of the same family. And I do not wish military tribunals to apply their harsh, sharp vengeance between men who live on adjacent estates, at the instigation of personal revenge, of malice, without local public trial, unprotected by the rights secured to them by the Constitution and laws of the United States, when a whispered lie may stain innocence with the penitentiary by the vote of two out of three of a military commission. If they have committed acts which render them dangerous but are not criminal or cannot be proved, we have authorized the suspension of the habeas corpus and the President can hold them; not try, not convict, not disgrace, not degrade, not kill, but hold them under the precautionary discretion conferred by law and rendered secure by the military power. If they have committed crimes known to the law which can be proved, and which it is desirable to punish, the President can prove it before the courts of the United States in Maryland, and they can be convicted in the courts of the United States in Maryland.

Now a word touching the amendment of my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] with whom I always differ with the greatest hesitation. Yet I think that his logic will bring him to this conclusion, that if the Constitution of the United States says that no one shall be tried for an infamous crime otherwise than by a jury of the State and district, except cases arising in the military or naval forces of the United States, any enactment which authorizes any one to be tried in any other way in the States where United States courts are open is itself void. The tribunal which tries a case not arising in the military forces in any other way is a trespasser, and the party who was convicted has a private remedy for the injury he has sustained if the court had no jurisdiction. No one can violate the right of the citizen to immunity from military trial safely, whether we declare it or not, and every one has his remedy to-day in the courts of the United States, in spite of any enactment, for every oppression.

Why then place a provision in the law declaring these proceedings to be void? In order that a loud voice should go out from this Hall to the American people, ringing over the land to announce by authority that their Representatives recognize and declare the nullity of the proceedings of these military tribunals, and to encourage the people to seek redress in the courts of the country, not by crawling solicitations at the hands of the President of the United States, but of right, by law, before these courts, which are the glory and the safety of the American Republic.

My honorable friend also wishes me to strike out that part of my amendment which provides that those not liable to trial by military courts now held under their sentences should be discharged or delivered to the civil tribunals for trial. Sir, if it will satisfy any gentleman here, or remove any doubt or hesitation, I will most cheerfully agree that the word "discharge" shall be stricken out; so that the provision will stand that these men shall be delivered over to the civil tribunals to be proceeded against according to law—the American's birthright.

But it is objected by my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that these men, having first disputed the jurisdiction of the military court, will, when brought before a civil court, plead their former conviction in bar. I know the eminent legal ability of my friend, and if he will run over in his mind the form of plea that must be made in such a case he would find that it would be this: on a given day, at a given place, before A B C D E F and G, a military commission convened by order of the President of the United States, I, a citizen not in the military service of the United States, was convicted for a violation of "the usages of war," or some crime known to the law, but punishable by statute only in the courts of the United States, and sentence and punishment. My learned friend would be the first to put in a demurrer to such a plea. On the record it would appear that the military commission had no jurisdiction of the party or the offense; that the party had not been convicted at all; that he had never been in jeopardy of life or limb; for the Constitution forbids such a tribunal to try such a person. The jurisdiction of every court, especially one of limited and exceptional jurisdiction, may be impeached collaterally, or must appear on its record; and the appearance of generals and colonels and captains sitting, at the will of the President, in place of venerable judges, whose tenure is good behavior, and the absence of a jury, show that it is not a court at all, but an unlawful combination of trespassers usurping the functions of a court, guilty of a crime and not exercising an authority. Any court of the United States will, on habeas corpus, discharge a citizen confined under sentence of such a tribunal.

Let those now in illegal confinement seek that remedy; and if it be denied them, let an impeachment by the Representatives of the people vindicate the rights of the people.

Mr. Chairman, the public safety never has required these illegal and summary trials; it now requires that they cease. The past men are ready to forget, the American people most of all; they instigated or tolerated the usurpations of those in authority; but they now have felt the sharpness of military justice and demand of their rulers a return to the Constitution and laws. If heretofore they have violated the law and Constitution—I do not say criminally, I do not say with intent to oppress, I do not say even knowing it to be criminal—it was the common error; and they may plead the error of the people which misled the leaders of the people at the beginning of the rebellion. More firmness, more knowledge, more coolness in high places, might perhaps have arrested the popular current and silenced the popular tumult and kept the torrent within the bounds of law. It was not found in places of authority; all bowed before the storm and floated with the current. It is in the power of the Representatives of the American people alone to stop it before every vestige of American liberty is buried beneath the waters.

Sir, I am not willing to change one word of my amendment. It was not framed out of my own head, of my old-fashioned whims and fancies, now out of fashion in this era of gold lace and military vertigo. I had frequent consultations with some of the ablest members upon this side of the House, those most conspicuous for the ardor of their support of the Administration; and they think with me that obstinate adherence to these abuses must destroy either the Administration or the Republic. If it would satisfy any one to strike out the word "discharge," I have no objection, because an American citizen is safe when delivered into the custody of the civil authorities to be proceeded against according to law; but beyond that I do not feel disposed to modify my amendment in any particular. Least of all can I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Kasson,] which enumerates the offenses for which citizens shall not be tried by military courts, but yields the whole principle by admitting that persons not in the military forces, in States where the United States courts are open, may be tried for violating the "usages and customs of war;" it recognizes the category of military offenses committed by a citizen, an exception which would place your liberty and life and mine at the beck and call, at the will and pleasure, of any military commission of officers too worthless for field service, ordered to try us, and "organized to convict."

That amendment involves a total misapprehension of the whole question. It is not what offenses a military court may try but what persons they may try for any offense. The Constitution forbids them to try any citizen for any offense.

I will not detain the House by narrating the individual cases of oppression that are fresh in my memory. There is no gentleman that does not know of such cases in his own neighborhood, and has not felt this atmosphere of oppression around him.

If there be, they are happier than we are in Maryland, or they are in Massachusetts. This measure is demanded by the feeling of the country, and in my judgment, if the House will now say that the liberty of the American citizen is of equal moment with the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and will pronounce by such a vote as that by which it referred the resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GANSON,] with only three dissenting voices, to the Military Committee, that law is still supreme, every man in the United States will breathe freer and bear himself more loftily, and look with assured joy to the day when armed rebellion shall be destroyed, to be followed not by armed despotism, but by the peaceful reign of liberty and law, by submission but not by servitude. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PIKE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to propose that this evening's session be devoted to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, in order that we may clear off the business thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot agree to that just yet.

Mr. WILSON. Then I will say so much of the evening session as may be necessary after the pending appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PENDLETON. I object.

Mr. DAWES. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that yesterday I asked the privilege of the House to devote two hours of the session of yesterday to the consideration of election cases, but it was not the pleasure of the House to grant it. I did not desire to ask the House to hear me upon the subject; but there are gentlemen here claiming the right to seats in the House who have been here all winter, and one of them desires to be heard. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is but fair to these claimants that they may be allowed a short time to present the claims of those in whose behalf they are here. I shall not indulge in debate myself if the privilege is granted. I ask, not on behalf of myself or of the committee, but in behalf of those gentlemen, the indulgence that they may be heard, through their chosen organ, for a short period of time this evening.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

Mr. DAWES. I submit to the House that it is but a matter of justice and fairness to them.

I know it is impossible to present the case on the one side or the other at this late stage of the session.

Mr. WILSON. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to move that so much of this evening (after the pending appropriation bill is disposed of) as may be necessary therefor shall be devoted to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WILSON and HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 51.

So the rules were not suspended, (two thirds not voting in favor thereof.)

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting a report of his Department in relation to contracts, &c.; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the unpaid balances as furnished from the books of the Second and Third Auditors of the Treasury; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the rule:

Resolved, That forty-five thousand copies additional of the census of agriculture be printed and bound for the use of the members of the House, and five thousand for the use of the Census Office.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that all general debate upon the bill pending in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be closed in ten minutes after the committee shall again resume its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

The resolution was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PIKE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK to the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of opposing these amendments. In desperate emergencies vigorous measures are required. I am here for the purpose of sustaining with my voice and vote those measures adopted and put in force by the War Department in the punishment of culprits in any manner connected with the Army. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] has dilated largely on those things that have occurred in his own State. He has referred to the act of General McClellan. It is not necessary that I should say here that that act of his rendered his name more popular, brought him into more favor, and attracted to him more of the affection of the people of the country than any other act of his life. Is it not well known that when he ordered the arrest of the Maryland Legislature that Legislature was convened for the very purpose of hurrying the State into secession and involving it in civil war? The gentleman refers to the arrests made in the city of Baltimore, and in Maryland. Has not the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. YEAMAN] told us that in many counties in his own district the civil law could not be enforced; that they have neither judges nor jurors who will enforce it, nor court-houses in which to hold their courts; that they have been burned by secessionists? So it was in the city of Baltimore up to within two years since. I believe that two years ago a rebel could not be convicted in any court in that city. Those vigorous measures of the President and of the War Department are what saved Maryland from civil war and the country from destruction.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. The gentleman will allow me to say that there would be more fear that a disloyal man could not have a fair trial in Maryland, before a civil court, so intense is the desire to punish anything looking like treason.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That may be now, and is a very healthy feeling, but two years ago it was not so.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. There was never a moment, sir, in which it was not so.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There was a moment, sir, when anything looking to the suppression of the rebellion was very unpopular in Baltimore. There was a time when both the civil and military arms of the Government were powerless to preserve peace and order in the gentleman's own city. There was a time when Massachusetts soldiers marching peacefully through that city to the rescue and defense of the capital were ruthlessly set upon by the mob of secessionists and murdered in the streets of Baltimore, and there was no power there to suppress the riot. There was a time when the authorities of Maryland, through their Governor, made application to the President of the United States that no more troops should pass over the soil of Maryland, because the civil and military power of that State could not preserve order. Without the suspension of the habeas corpus, and without the vigorous measures put in force by the Government, where would that State be to-day? Probably in the Union, but she would have been the seat of war, and her fair fields would have been desolated as are now the fair fields of Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I desire to say that there never was a day when the people of Maryland were not masters of her fortunes, and masters of the capital of the United States, and that Mr. Lincoln was inaugurated here only because they were loyal.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If that is the case, it seems to me there is a monstrous lie going the rounds of the country.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I think there is. The people of Maryland have been libeled from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is well known that when the President came here to be inaugurated, four years ago, he was obliged to flee through the city of Baltimore like a stranger, in disguise, to avoid assassination.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. The gentleman says the President had to flee through Baltimore. I say it may be that he did so; but a man of heroic mold would have marched through it safely.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, that my friend from Maryland, who has been, in the main, right, should now, in the last days of the session, surround himself by those who have been heretofore his enemies, and who now beslobber him with their praise. When a man on this side of the House puts himself in such a position as that the unworthy member from Maryland [Mr. HARRIS] congratulates him and smiles his praise on him for the speech he makes, and when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] marches over here and takes him by the hand, and congratulates him for his assault on the Administration, he ought to raise his hands toward heaven, and say, "My God! what have I done that my enemies and the enemies of my country should praise me?"

Why, sir, how long is it since, in the city of Chicago, only the day before the last general election, a stupendous conspiracy was discovered? Among the plotters were persons of that city. They had conspired with the rebel prisoners in Camp Douglas, and with emissaries from the South, to release all the prisoners in Camp Douglas, put arms in their hands, and then sack and destroy the city of Chicago. Those men are now being tried before a military commission, and such facts have been proved against them; so thoroughly have they been fastened upon them that one or two of them have put an end to their own existence in despair, and in anticipation of their deserved doom.

Gentlemen are mistaken, it seems to me, as to the manner of conducting these courts-martial. Every particle of evidence taken before them is preserved in writing. The defendants have subpenas issued for their witnesses, whose attendance is compelled, and all the testimony, pro and con, is taken by the judge advocate and the counsel of the defendants, for they are allowed to have counsel, and the testimony is preserved, and with the specifications and findings is filed in the War Department, where it undergoes the careful supervision and review of Judge Holt, one of the ablest, most honest men in the country. The findings are thoroughly reviewed, and approved or disapproved, and the sentence carried out or not according to that decision. These records go into the archives of the Government and can at any time be called for by this House and published to the world.

Now, this amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] would let loose upon the country some of the very worst characters we ever had among us. It is not long since a resolution was introduced into this House, and adopted, instructing the Military Committee to examine into the military prisons in this city. The Military Committee made that investigation; they examined the prisoners and took testimony. And upon my soul—and I think every member of the Military Committee will agree with me in this—I do think that of all the rascals, of all the miserable, devilish tribe I ever saw in my life, they are those in the military prisons in this city. I have not heard of one of them, no matter how arbitrarily he may have been arrested, but he was properly arrested, for he was guilty.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I have been alluded to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH.] I presume he alluded to me when he addressed himself to the "unworthy member from Maryland."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I alluded to the vote given by the gentleman's colleague, that he was an unworthy member.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. I did not so understand the gentleman. I understood him to state that I had congratulated my colleague [Mr. DAVIS,] or that my colleague was "congratulated by the unworthy member from Maryland." That is what he said. Now, sir, I have no doubt at all that he alluded to me. But the gentleman should have been careful to confine himself to the fact. I had not intended to take any part in this debate in any shape or form. I approve of the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. DAVIS,] and I did not think it would meet with any disapprobation anywhere. But I did not go to congratulate him; so that the gentleman did not state the fact on that point. I only assented to the proposition, as I do most heartily.

I look upon this charge of being an unworthy member as actually having been worn out by this time. It is something singular that many who voted that I was unworthy have made themselves quite agreeable to me, and have made their advances toward me, have always saluted me as one whom they did not consider unworthy. Now, if they had considered me unworthy they could have slighted me as they pleased; I did not seek any kind of intercourse with them, though perfectly willing to have it. Therefore I consider that this charge of being an unworthy member is in his estimation, and in the estimation probably of those upon the other side, except a few, to be taken only in a Pickwickian sense. [Laughter.] That I hope has put you all in a good humor, for I do not intend to make any issue upon this point.

This matter I see is used for political purposes, to inflame the public mind, it may be, or for something of that kind. But it shall not excite me, I assure you. I have every reason not to be displeased at it; for when I went before the people, instead of the fifteen hundred majority from my people by which I was sent here before, I am sent here again with a majority, I believe, of about six thousand. And if it had not been for the restrictions and interference at the polls, I could just as easily have got ten thousand. Now, it is astonishing to me that this proposition of my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] should have met with the least opposition. He has said nothing but what every man in this country, who knows anything, knows to be correct. He has advocated nothing but the plainest, simplest, home-bred rights of American citizens. I must confess that he spoke in that eloquent strain in which he always delivers himself, and more forcibly than many who think just as he does can deliver it, even in good English.

Now, sir, I would like to know how the gentleman formed the idea that the Maryland Legislature desired or intended to pass an act of secession for the purpose of taking that State out of the Union. I deny it. I say that the records of the Legislature of Maryland contradict it. Their record will show that they proclaimed that they had no right to carry the State out of the Union; that, if it were done at all, it must be done by a convention.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his amendment, that I may renew it. I desire to say a few words, and in the present position of the question debate is exhausted.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my amendment, with the understanding that the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. WILSON. I renew the amendment.

I cannot understand how the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] could become so wrought up on this question when I take into consideration his action upon a question which I regarded, and the majority of this House regarded, as of quite as much importance, and which was acted upon about a week ago. I refer to the bill which was reported by myself, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to prevent military interference at elections. That bill was intended to preserve the purity of elections throughout the United States. It was intended to protect the American citizen in the exercise, untrammelled, (except so far as the law may trammel him,) of the most sacred right of citizenship—a right upon the legitimate and conscientious exercise of which depend all other rights, those which are involved in the civil courts of the country as well as all others. Without the just protection of that great right of suffrage you can have no civil courts to protect the citizen—you can have no department of the Government so administered as to guaranty that protection to which the citizen is entitled and must enjoy in order to exercise properly and effectively his rights as a citizen of the Republic. Yet, sir, on the passage of that bill the gentleman from Maryland voted in the negative, thus in effect turning over to the control of the military officers of the land this sacred right upon which all courts and everything else depend. Now, I cannot understand why there should be so much feeling on this question when it was entirely absent on that occasion. By the provisions of that bill, military officers were prohibited from issuing orders defining qualifications of voters other than those prescribed by the laws of the land. Yet the gentleman's vote was cast in the negative on that bill.

Mr. DAWES. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire him to explain his vote upon the struggle of the Committee of Elections during the last session to protect the ballot-box.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose the gentleman wonders that I did not follow him in his ruinous and most absurd raid upon the purity of the ballot-box of the country.

Now, sir, in relation to the question that is involved here, as to the repeal, in effect, as this amendment proposes, of all law authorizing these trials by court-martial, I think that the true principle to be laid down—and it is one which is being followed in the Chicago cases to which reference has been made—is that, if you may try by court-martial a spy who is prowling within your lines, you may try in the same way the man within your own lines who is aiding that spy to accomplish his purpose. If you may try the spy whose duty it was to ascertain in relation to the burning of Chicago you may also try the citizens of that city who are aiding that spy to collect information with a view to destroy the city and release the rebel prisoners.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, without making reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] in relation to striking out, as I propose, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, for which amendment to the amendment I hope to have his vote, I wish to submit a remark or two on that bill to which he has resorted for illustration of the principles involved in this controversy. He holds it to be inconsistent that any one should have voted against that bill and yet be in favor of the present amendment. Sir, I voted against that bill with the small minority to which he refers. Why did I vote against it? Because it is one of the most extraordinary bills, in its abandonment of every principle in regard to interference with the rights of the States at their polls, which has ever been passed or attempted to be passed. If you look at that bill what do you find? It contains a provision that officers and soldiers of the United States may visit the polls for the purpose of keeping peace there; that is, that the officers and soldiers of the United States may become the police officers of the State, but they shall not interfere for the purpose of preventing traitors or rebels from voting there.

I have had some experience on this subject, and I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the absurdity in which it seemed to me (and therefore I voted against the bill) he was involved in attempting to preserve the purity of elections. The gentleman will remember the famous General Order No. 53, of October 27, 1863, from which I propose to read only a few lines by way of illustrating what I mean and of the difference between the gentleman's views and my own. In that famous general order the general commanding the Middle department, who happened to be myself, looking to the election then approaching, made this recital:

"It is known that there are many evil-disposed persons now at large in the State of Maryland, who have been engaged in rebellion against the lawful Government, or have given aid and comfort or encouragement to others so engaged, or who do not recognize their allegiance to the United States, and who may avail themselves of the indulgence of the authority which tolerates their presence to embarrass the approaching election, or, through it, to foment enemies of the United States into power. It is therefore ordered:

"1. That all provost marshals and other military officers do arrest all such persons found at, or hanging about, or approaching any poll or place of election on the 4th of November, 1863, and report such arrest to these headquarters."

I did not go so far as General McClellan; but I went that far.

Now, how was that order modified by a higher authority in accordance with the provisions of this bill?

"That all provost marshals and other military officers do prevent all disturbance and violence at or about the polls, whether offered by such persons as above described, or by any other person or persons whomsoever."

That is the principle of the law of the Committee on the Judiciary. The modification of that order provided that the officers and soldiers might interfere with the elections, so as to become the police at that election; and if Jeff. Davis offered to vote they should not prevent him. I have no faith in anything of that kind; and while I would interfere to prevent rebels from taking control of the election, I would not interfere in time of peace, as now proposed, in order to take charge of the polls, and have the officers and soldiers of the United States in lieu of the proper police of the State.

I think if that bill had not been forced through under the previous question I could have shown that there was this inconsistency in it: in order to preserve the purity of the polls it was a bill to constitute the officers and soldiers of the United States to take charge of the polls, while it permitted rebels to vote.

The question recurred on Mr. SCHENCK's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee rise to close debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PIKE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that all debate on the special order pending in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be terminated in one minute after the committee shall again resume its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PIKE in the chair) on the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Upon that question I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORTH, and DAVIS of Maryland, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the committee, in pursuance of the previous order of the House, took a recess until half past seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The committee resumed its session at half past seven o'clock, p. m.

Mr. YEAMAN. I move to amend by inserting, immediately after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. DAVIS,] and adopted by the committee before the recess, the following proviso:

Provided, That in cases of murder, arson, larceny, robbery, malicious arrest, false imprisonment, assault and battery, maiming, shooting, or stabbing with intent to kill, done by the enemies of the United States, or those in armed hostility to the laws thereof, the circuit and district courts of the United States, and commissioners of the United States, shall have as full and complete jurisdiction as the several courts of the States where any of said crimes may be done, with power to inflict the same punishments: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent or restrict courts-martial of their jurisdiction of offenses against the laws and usages of war, committed by persons in armed rebellion to the laws of the United States.

I ask permission to give my views on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent for the committee to give such permission, as it is acting under an order of the House.

Mr. YEAMAN. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by inserting the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That no officer in the military or naval service of the United States shall be dismissed unless upon the finding of a court-martial convened according to law.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That any officer who shall be reported by his commanding officer absent without leave for twenty days, in time of war or active hostilities, may be dropped from the military or naval service by the President, for that cause assigned, by proclamation; but on the application of the officer so reported and dropped, stating a sufficient defense, under oath, against such charge during the whole absence to the day of application, the President shall convene a court-martial and try him on that charge; and if it acquit him, he shall, on approval of the sentence, stand reinstated; and if the sentence be disapproved for a legal cause, another court shall be ordered for his trial by the order disapproving the former finding.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the President may suspend any officer in the military or naval service, without pay or emoluments, in time of war or active hostilities, who shall be reported by his commanding officer or the Secretary of War for any flagrant offense, for which, under the Articles of War, dismissal or death is a legal punishment, and in the opinion of the President ought to be so punished; but the order of suspension shall specify the charges, and a court-martial for the trial of the officer thereon shall be convened in accordance with the provisions of section eleven of an act approved July 17, 1862, entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes;" and if the court shall not assign dismissal or death as the punishment, the pay and emoluments of such officer shall be restored in so far as they were affected by the order of suspension.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That section seventeen of an act entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1863, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I raise a point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, as he thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question being put, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out all of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. DAVIS,] and incorporated in the bill by the Committee of the Whole, together with the preceding line, and substituting in its place what I send to the Clerk.

Mr. KERNAN. Is it in order to move to strike out what the committee have inserted?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir, when I connect it with something else.

Mr. KERNAN. I addressed my inquiry to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio to propose to strike out anything except that last section?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir; a part of the preceding section, abolishing the office of Assistant Register of the Treasury. I propose to strike that out, together with that which was offered by the gentleman from Maryland, and substitute what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. The words proposed to be stricken out have already been inserted by the committee, and it is a uniform rule that nothing inserted by the committee can be stricken out. All the gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike out has already been inserted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike out the preceding clause of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I modify my amendment so as to strike out the two preceding sections.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. Because those sections have been passed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I believe it is competent to strike out matter that has been inserted together with part of the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done when the matter is all in the same section, but you cannot go back to previous sections.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following as additional sections to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1865, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

For tool and siege trains for armies in the field, $200,000.
For superintendent and four watchmen in the building occupied by the Quartermaster General, viz: One superintendent for the fiscal years 1865 and 1866, at $200 per annum, and four watchmen at an annual salary of $600 each, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1866, $2,800.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the Indian service in Utah, being for money advanced by Brigham Young white Governor and ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs, found due and allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, $38,487 53.

For plates, engraving, printing, and paper, for national currency notes, $323,334.

To supply deficiency in the appropriation for lighting the Capitol and President's house, and public grounds around them, around the executive offices and Pennsylvania avenue, Bridge and High streets, Georgetown, Four-and-a-half, Seventh, and Twelfth streets, across the Mall, and Maryland avenue west, and Sixth street south, per act of March 3, 1853, $13,000.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for making certain alterations in the custom-house building at Philadelphia, $7,425.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fuel for the President's house and Capitol, $6,000.

To pay H. A. Klopfer for ten months' services as a laborer in the office of the Attorney General, at forty dollars per month, $400.

For continuing work at the Brooklyn navy-yard, viz:

for piling, filling in, and building crib-work on cob dock for gun park, $250,000.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a point of order. This amendment is a bill which has already been reported on from the Committee of Ways and Means, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, printed, and made a special order. I submit that it is not in order to offer it as an amendment to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BROOKS. It would puzzle Little & Brown to compile this law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BROOKS. Why not? Debate has not been closed on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been closed entirely.

Mr. BROOKS. Well, I rather like this way of doing business. We have only got a million in this amendment; let's go it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BROOKS, and RICE of Maine, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I will move this as an additional amendment:

And the remaining money in the Treasury is hereby appropriated, without any debate whatsoever on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish a vote on that amendment?

Mr. BROOKS. Oh, no; I will withdraw it.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I offer the following as an additional amendment to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay the interest on the public debt due the Smithsonian Institution in the same funds as the interest on other permanent debts due by the United States prior to the present rebellion have been and are paid; and in case the interest heretofore paid to said Institution has been paid in a different currency and of less value than that paid by the Government on other permanent debts or trust funds, that the Secretary be directed to make up the difference to said Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. STEVENS. Why not put in the word "gold" at once?

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. This is not an appropriation in accordance with law, but it is an attempt to appropriate a specific sum of money in gold instead of the ordinary currency of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. COX. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I desire to be heard a moment in explanation. This is not an appropriation. It is only a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the interest on this special fund in gold, as it always has been paid, and as it ought to be paid now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. Has not the debate been closed on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It has, and the Chair adheres to its decision.

Mr. COX. I wish the Chair could have had the facts of the case before him before he decided it. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to insert the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated for the purpose of making repairs upon the building of the Smithsonian Institution, lately injured by fire, the sum of $50,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I raise the point of order that this amendment proposes to change the existing law, and is therefore out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. I offer the following amendment, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in paying out the appropriations for Army purposes hereafter, the commutation allowed for clothing to non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians of the volunteer forces in the Army of the United States, where such clothing is not furnished in kind, shall be the same in all respects as for soldiers in similar corps in the regular Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the salaries and compensation of the clerks and other employes in the several Departments of the United States in the city of Washington, and in the offices and bureaus thereof, including the Department of Agriculture and the two Houses of Congress, be, and they are hereby, increased, and fixed at the following annual rates each, namely: clerks of the first class, $1,500; clerks of the second class, $1,700; clerks of the third class, $1,800; clerks of the fourth class, $1,900; chief clerks receiving less than $2,000 per annum, $2,100; female clerks, $800; and all other civil employes now receiving less than $1,200 per annum, and including the clerks and employes in the office of the Coast Survey and Lake Survey, twenty-five per cent. on their compensation now allowed by law, and said increase of compensation shall commence on the 1st day of January, 1865, and cease on the 1st day of January, 1867; and that the amount necessary to pay the said increase of salaries be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I raise the point of order that this amendment proposes to change existing laws, and is therefore out of order.

Mr. STEVENS. It is in order, as relating to existing Departments of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. By order of the House debate is closed on the whole bill.

Mr. KERNAN. Is it in order to move to close debate upon the bill and pending amendments, and then bring in a new bill, in the way of amendment, and change the law, without debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is acting under the order of the House, which the Chair is obliged to administer.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of opening this bill to debate.

The motion that the committee now rise was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PIKE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. COX. I now move to reconsider the vote by which debate was closed in Committee of the Whole on House bill No. 786, for the purpose of moving that there be five minutes' debate allowed for and against each amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. COX called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 70, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Denning, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Frank, Gooch, Grinnell, Hale, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Anos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orin, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Tracy, Upton, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburn, Wilder, Wilson, Winde, Woodbridge, and Worthington—73.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Bailly, Blaine, Bliss, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Cobb, Coffroth, Cox, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Gridler, Griswold, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kallbelsch, Kernan, Law, Le Bond, Long, Marcy, McKinney, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Seofield, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Townsend, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Clifton A. White, Winfield, and Yeaman—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, William G. Brown, Clay, Cole, Cravens, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Higby, William Johnson, Julian, King, Knapp, Lazear, Loan, Mallory, McAllister, McClurg, McDowell, McIn-doe, Radford, Robinson, Smith, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweat, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Joseph W. White, Williams, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—39.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PIKE in the chair), and resumed the consideration as a special order of the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and for other purposes, the question being on Mr. STEVENS's amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of order that in the present state of our finances it is out of order to increase salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is not well taken.

Mr. PERHAM. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "coast survey" the words "and the Washington city post office."

Mr. MORRILL. I make the point of order that this proposes to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The point has been already decided.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STROUSE. I move to amend the amendment by placing the clerks and employes of the Coast Survey on a par with the clerks of the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. STROUSE. I will do so.

Mr. NELSON. In the mean time will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STROUSE. I will give way for the present.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And the salary and compensation of Senators and Representatives in the Thirty-Eighth Congress is hereby increased twenty-five per cent., such increase to be paid from the contingent fund of the respective Houses.

Mr. BROOMALL called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was adopted; there being, on a division—ayes 61, noes 46.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the words "1st of January, 1867," and insert in lieu thereof the words "31st of December, 1866," and also by inserting the following:

And hereafter the pay and mileage of members of Congress shall be as follows: for mileage, ten cents per mile each way; $300 per month for each month that Congress shall be in session.

Mr. COX. I make a point of order on that. It changes existing laws. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order has been already made and overruled.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes to strike out what has just been inserted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not only to strike out what has been inserted, but also a portion of the context.

Mr. NELSON. Then we might go on offering amendments ad infinitum.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the fault of the Chair, but of the rule. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, there being, on a division—ayes fifteen, noes not counted.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment by adding as follows:

Provided, That this shall not take effect until the 1st day of January, 1870, and not then if before that time it should be repealed.

The amendment was rejected, there being, on a division—ayes thirty-one, noes not counted.

The question recurred on Mr. STEVENS's amendment.

Mr. STROUSE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. NELSON and AMES were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in paying out appropriations for the Army heretofore, the following principles shall be observed: That the true construction of the sixth section of the act respecting the organization of the Army and for other purposes, approved August 23, 1842, and of all laws relating in any way to the allowance of double rations to officers, authorizes such allowance to the following officers and to no others whatever: to the General-in-Chief commanding the armies of the United States, to each general officer commanding in chief a separate army actually in the field, to each general officer commanding a geographical division embracing one or more military departments, and to each officer commanding a military geographical department; and that any general order or regulation or usage allowing double rations to a chief of staff or any other officer than those above mentioned, is illegal and void.

Mr. KASSON. I believe that this amendment is not in order. It is a proposition to change the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems rather to be a proposition to declare what is the existing law.

Mr. SCHENCK. It changes no law whatever. It declares the law as it is.

Mr. KASSON. If that is so I have misunderstood the proposition, and I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the amendment just read by adding thereto the following:

And be it further enacted, That hereafter no officer of the military or naval service of the United States shall be dismissed unless upon the finding of a court-martial convened according to law; and section seventeen of an act entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1862, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I make the point of order on that that it proposes to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

On the question there were, on a division—ayes 62, noes 44.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And be it further enacted, That the pay and allowances of all commissioned officers below the rank of brigadier general in the Army of the United States shall be increased twenty-five per cent. from and after the 1st day of January, 1865, till the close of the present war.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order on this amendment that it proposes to change the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SPALDING. I move the following as an amendment to the amendment:

And be it further enacted, That each surviving soldier of the war of 1812 be entitled to receive the sum of $100 per annum for and during the term of his natural life; and that the sum of $2,000,000 be appropriated for the payment of said pensioners.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I raise the point of order that this is a proposition to change the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, it was adopted.

Mr. STROUSE. I move to amend by adding the following:

And be it further enacted, That the clerks and employes of the United States Coast Survey be placed on an equal footing in regard to salaries with the other clerks and employes in the Treasury Department employed in the Treasury building.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

And the salary and compensation of Senators and Representatives in the Thirty-Eighth Congress is hereby increased twenty-five per cent.; such increase to be paid from the contingent fund of the respective Houses.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I raise the question of order that this amendment proposes to change existing laws by raising the salaries of members of Congress, and is therefore out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That point has been already overruled.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair Mr. PIKE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration House bill No. 786, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I move the following as an additional section, and then demand the previous question on the bill and amendments:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the salaries and compensation of the clerks and other employees in the several Departments of the United States in the city of Washington, and in the offices and bureaus thereof, including the Department of Agriculture, and the two Houses of Congress, be, and they are hereby, increased, and fixed at the following annual rates each, namely: clerks of the first class, $1,500; clerks of the second class, $1,700; clerks of the third class, $1,800; clerks of the fourth class, $1,900; chief clerks, receiving not more than $2,000 per annum, $2,100; female clerks, $800; and all other civil employees now receiving less than $1,200 per annum, and including the clerks and employees in the office of the Coast Survey and Lake Survey, twenty-five per cent. on their compensation now allowed by law; and said increase of compensation shall commence on the 1st day of January, 1865, and cease on the 1st day of January, 1866.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to move to amend the amendment adopted by the committee on my motion by striking out all after the word "spies." It is just the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] which was lost in committee.

Mr. STEVENS. I decline to yield for that purpose. If the House wants to vote on the amendment it can vote down the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Two amendments cannot be pending at the same time.

The SPEAKER. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois, there cannot be two amendments pending at the same time. The only way the gentleman can accomplish his purpose is to vote down the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I call the previous question on the bill and all the amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I hope that the previous question will be voted down.

The previous question was not seconded.

Mr. SCHENCK. Is it in order to move the previous question on the bill and amendments, excepting one?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It is in order to call the previous question on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 77, not voting 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Baily, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Denison, Driggs, Edgerton, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knox, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Longyear, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, McKinney, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Leonard Myers, Odell, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Smithers, William G. Steele, Stevens, Strouse, Stuart, Ward, Clifton A. White, Wilder, Winfield, and Yeaman—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Dawes, Deming, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Gooch, Grider, Grinnell, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Knapp, Littlejohn, Marvin, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Amos Myers, Norton, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Spalding, John B. Steele, Stiles, Thayer, Thomas, Townsend, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—77.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blair, William G. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cole, Cravens, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Eden, Eldridge, English, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herriek, William Johnson, Julian, Law, Lazear, Mallory, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Robinson, Smith, Starr, Sweat, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Whaley, Williams, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—44.

So the amendment was rejected.

During the roll-call, Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. Will it be in order, Mr. Speaker, to ask that all on this side of the House who voted to increase the pay of Republican employees have leave to change their votes? I do not propose to change mine.

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. Objection was made.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, announced to the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bill of the House of the following titles, severally with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants; and

An act (H. R. No. 605) to increase the pay of midshipmen and others.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles severally without amendment:

An act (H. R. No. 697) further to provide for the verification of invoices;

An act (H. R. No. 779) to regulate the taking of depositions in certain cases;

An act (H. R. No. 707) to provide for the publication of the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 749) providing for the confinement of juvenile offenders against the laws of the United States in houses of refuge; and

An act (H. R. No. 758) amendatory of the acts relative to the Attorney General's office, and to fix the compensation of his assistants and clerks.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for a continuance of the joint committee on the conduct of the war.

OFFICERS' SERVANTS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution of the House (No. 170) just returned from the Senate with amendments, in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a joint resolution declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants. I ask that it may be referred to the committee with authority to report to-morrow morning.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Cannot we get along with that more speedily by considering it in the House now?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to taking it up.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move to amend the amendment adopted on my motion by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by striking out all after the word "spies," as follows:

Or guerrillas; and all proceedings heretofore had contrary to this provision are vacated, and all persons not subject to trial under this act by courts-martial or military commissions now held under sentence thereof, shall be forthwith delivered to the civil authorities to be proceeded against before the courts of the United States according to law; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

So that the clause will read:

And be it further enacted, That no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons actually mustered, or commissioned, or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel emissaries charged with being spies.

I move the previous question upon the bill and the pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the several amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and offered in the House were agreed to in gross, except the following, upon which special action was had, as follows:

Twentieth amendment:

Insert the following as a new section: And be it further enacted, That for colonizing the friendly Indians of Arizona on a reservation on the Colorado river and supplying them with implements of husbandry and seeds, to enable them to become self-sustaining, the sum of $150,000 be and the same is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was not agreed to.

A separate vote having been called for on the amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, in the House, to the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as above recorded,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 71, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Beaman, Bliss, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Eden, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Holman, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Kernan, King, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Marcy, McKinney, Middleton, James K. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perham, Perry, Price, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Scott, Smithers, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Tracy, Upson, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Wheeler, Clifton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Winfield—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Blow, Boyd, Chanler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Edgerton, Farnsworth, Finck, Grinnell, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Littlejohn, Loan, Long, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Shannon, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stiles, Thayer, Thomas, Elihu B. Washburn, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yeaman—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Anderson, Baily, Blair, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Gray, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Frank, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, William Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Le Blond, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Smith, Starr, Sweat, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—38.

So the amendment to the amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, stated that Mr. ALLEY was detained from the House by sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. GANSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, demanded the yeas and nays on the latter motion.

Mr. GANSON. I withdraw the motion.

The question recurred on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as amended.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded the yeas and nays on the latter motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 58, not voting 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Beaman, Bliss, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, James, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, English, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, King, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Long, Marcy, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Rollins, Shannon, Sloan, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Upson, Elihu B. Washburn, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—58.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, William G. Brown, Clay, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Grider, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, William Johnson, Julian, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McIntoe, Moorehead, Robinson, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Sweet, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—44.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The question recurred upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 64, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, English, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, King, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Long, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Smithers, Stuart, D. Rice, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Upson, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Allison, Anderson, Bailly, Blaine, Blair, William G. Brown, Clay, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, William Johnson, Julian, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McDowell, McIntoe, Price, Robinson, Edward H. Rollins, Smith, Starr, Sweet, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL MATTERS.

Mr. COLE, of California, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 390) relating to the postal laws, reported that the committee had agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows: that the House recede from its amendment striking out the first section of the bill and agree to the same amended so that all domestic letters, except letters lawfully franked, and domestic letters of soldiers and mariners in the service of the United States, that are deposited for mailing in any post office of the United States, on which postage is unpaid, shall be sent by the postmaster to the dead-letter office in Washington; and that all letters deposited for mailing, paid only in part, shall be forwarded to their destination charged with the unpaid rate, to be collected on delivery; and that the House recede from its third, fourth, and fifth amendments.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from California what has become of the disputed proposition touching the rate of postage, and also what has become of the proposition touching the forwarding of letters unpaid in full, charged with double postage?

Mr. COLE, of California. The first proposition has never been before the Post Office Committee at all, and certainly not before the conference committee. The next proposition is provided for in the report of the conference committee. The letters are to be forwarded to their destination where the postage is not fully paid.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1866.

The remaining amendments were adopted.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILSON called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 41, not voting 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bliss, Broomall, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cole, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, Eliot, Finck, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Herrick, Higby, Holman, Hutchins, John H. Hubbard, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Kernan, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Marcy, McKinney, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorehead, Morrill, James R. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Perham, Perry, Price, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Scott, Sloan, Smithers, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Townsend, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilder, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashley, Boyd, Chanler, Cobb, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Frank, Grinnell, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knox, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Daniel Morris, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Pendleton, Pike, Pomeroy, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Ross, Shannon, Stevens, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, Wilson, Windom, and Worthington—41.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Arnold, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brooks, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, Ganson, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Hutchins, William Johnson, Julian, Orlando Kellogg, Lazear, Loan, Long, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McIntoe, Patterson, Robinson, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Sweet, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, William B. Washburn, Webster, Williams, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—49.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS:

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the special order in relation to Cabinet ministers having seats on the floor.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to House bill No. 620, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, reported that the committee had been unable to agree.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the report be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

VICE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the joint committee appointed to notify Andrew

Johnson of his election to the office of Vice President for four years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1865, I beg leave to report that the committee waited on the Vice President-elect, informed him of his election, and received from him an oral response to the effect that he acquiesces in the action of the American people, and will accept the trust confided to him by duly qualifying, and entering on the duties of the office to which he has been called, in the manner provided for by law.

TAXES IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back with amendments Senate bill No. 171, further to amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

The bill and amendments were read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Cobb, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Harding; and

A bill (H. R. No. 791) granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Leppien;

A bill (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the general acts relating to pensions; and

A bill (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the House take up the Senate amendment to the bill to amend an act to provide internal revenue, for the purpose of moving that the House non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference. I merely suggest to gentlemen of the House that it will be utterly impossible for us to take separate votes upon all the amendments of the Senate. If the bill is to be passed at all in an intelligible shape it must be submitted to a committee of conference.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to it now; we can hear the amendments read at any rate.

TAXES IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 171) to further amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes within the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

The question was upon the amendments reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to allow me to move an amendment to this bill. I desire to move to strike out the first section of the Senate bill. I think it contains an extraordinary provision. If I understand it correctly, the amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means have left that part of the bill without amendment to which this is an amendment. The bill provides the machinery by which the direct taxes in insurrectionary States are collected. That of course involves first the appraisal of the land, then the assessment of the tax, the giving the notice of sale, and the making of sale. After the land has been sold, it provides a certain time and certain mode in which the owner if loyal may redeem the land. Now, the first section of this bill, instead of leaving all questions as to the regularity and validity of the sale under the law to be settled by the courts when the purchaser at such sales desires possession of the lands, provides that the tax commissioners, who are merely the ministerial officers of the Government for the purpose of executing that law and making the sale, shall themselves act as a court; or rather they shall in their ministerial capacity issue a writ of possession to put the purchaser in possession, without giving the owner any right to go into the courts for the purpose of contesting the regularity of the proceedings, the validity of the sale, and the question whether he was loyal or disloyal.

It is really turning an irresponsible board of tax commissioners, who are performing simply the ministerial duty of assessing the land and selling it, into a court without any power perhaps to determine upon the legality of their own proceedings, or the power to determine the right of the original owners to the lands sold, but compelling the commissioners to issue a writ which will summarily eject those in possession of the land, and put the purchaser, whoever he may be, and whatever may be the proceedings under which he has acquired title, into possession. I submit to the learned chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. STEVENS] that all these questions should be submitted to our courts; that the proceedings should be assimilated to those for the collection of taxes in the States. Let the sale be held by our tax commissioners; let the purchaser take his certificate of sale, and if the land is not redeemed within the time and in the manner specified by law, and if possession is withheld by the occupant of the land, let him get it by the ordinary process of law.

I am informed that if this provision is to be enacted as a law, it will interfere so much with the duties of the tax commissioners that their sales will be interrupted; the commission will be turned into a court to hear applications for writs of possession; they cannot devote the necessary time to their other duties. I submit that the purchasers at these sales shall stand upon the same footing as purchasers at all other tax sales, and if possession is withheld after they have obtained a title, that they shall have the right to appeal to our courts to put them in possession in accordance with the forms of law, and in courts where the regularity of the proceedings and the legality of the whole transaction can be decided in a proper manner. I believe that that section contains nothing except the provision authorizing the tax commissioners to issue writs of possession. Its omission will not impair or affect the main features of this bill; and I trust that the section will be stricken out.

Mr. STEVENS. I was willing to hear what the gentleman had to say before I insisted on the previous question. But if this section be stricken out the whole bill will be worthless. In that portion of the country in which this bill will operate no regular courts are open, and it is necessary that the tax commissioners should do what the sheriffs do where there are regular courts. Time is allowed for the party to come back. On an appeal possession may be restored to him; and he has two years within which to take that appeal.

On seconding the previous question there were, on a division—ayes fifty-four, noes not counted.

Mr. SLOAN called for tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SLOAN and ASHLEY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to suspend the rules in order that we may non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 744) known as the tax bill, without even reading those amendments, for they are so voluminous that the reading of them would consume hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall insist on the reading of those amendments. I believe it cannot be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. It can be by suspending the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can a bill be passed without being read?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, by a two-thirds vote suspending the rules.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state that if this bill is to pass, the choice is between members of the House remaining here all night and having a committee of conference work all night. If the bill should be delayed until to-morrow it cannot be acted upon and engrossed. It is a bill of over fifty pages.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the amendments at this stage.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the amendments cannot be called for at this stage. The question is now on suspending the rules.

The question was taken; and there were, on a division—ayes, 84, noes 8.

So the rules were suspended.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the House non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate, and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman has not the right to call for the reading of the amendments, the rules having been suspended. One of the rules gives every member the right to call for the reading of any paper upon which he is to vote. That is the rule of the House. But the House reserves to itself the right, during the last ten days of the session, to suspend the rules whenever it sees fit if they stand in the way of the transaction of business. The House has, by a vote of 84 to 8, suspended all rules that prevent the House from non-concurring with the Senate amendments in gross, and asking the appointment of a committee of conference. This action has suspended the rule which, if it had not been suspended, would have given the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or any other gentleman the right to demand the reading of the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. DAWES. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 74, noes 20.

On the motion of Mr. MORRILL, that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask a committee of conference, there were, on a division—ayes 63, noes 25; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. MORRILL and BLISS.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 17.

So the motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to bring up Senate bill No. 411 to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia." It was the question under consideration at the last morning hour; and I will say that the committee have authorized me to withdraw all the pending amendments so as to remove all objection, and to put the bill on its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. How will it stand then?

Mr. PATTERSON. It will then only affect the Metropolitan Railroad Company, and not the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company. It gives the Metropolitan Railroad Company the right to extend. It will be some relief to that road.

Mr. STILES. I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I withdraw all the pending amendments to the bill, and ask by unanimous consent that the amendment adopted to the first section shall be withdrawn.

There was no objection; and it was agreed to accordingly.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to take up and pass House bill No. 703, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," which was read twice, ordered to be printed, the further consideration postponed to Monday, February 6, after the morning hour, and made a special order from day to day till disposed of. It restricts, to some extent, bank circulation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to suspend the rules. The motion was agreed to.

The bill provides that section twenty-one of said act be so amended that the section shall read as follows:

"That upon the transfer and delivery of bonds to the Treasurer as provided in the foregoing section, the association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered and countersigned as hereinafter provided, equal in amount to ninety per cent. of the current market value of the United States bonds so transferred and delivered, but not exceeding ninety per cent. of the amount of said bonds at the par value thereof, if bearing interest at a rate not less than five per cent. per annum; and the amount of such circulating notes to be furnished to each association shall be in proportion to its paid-up capital as follows, and no more: to each association whose capital shall not exceed $500,000, ninety per cent. of such capital; to each association whose capital exceeds $500,000, but does not exceed $1,000,000, eighty per cent. of such capital; to each association whose capital exceeds $1,000,000, but does not exceed $3,000,000, seventy-five per cent. of such capital; to each association whose capital exceeds $3,000,000, sixty per cent. of such capital.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to amend the bill as follows:

Add to the first section that $150,000,000 of the entire amount of circulating notes authorized to be issued shall be apportioned to associations in the States, in the District of Columbia, and in the Territories, according to representative population, and the remainder shall be apportioned by the Secretary of the Treasury among associations formed in the several States, in the District of Columbia, and in the Territories, having due regard to existing bank capital, resources, and business of such States, District, and Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to add the following:

And be it further enacted, That section one of said act be so amended as to authorize, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the employment of one chief of the division of currency, one chief of the division of organization of banks, one chief of the division of general correspondence and statistics, and one chief of the division of redemption, with the annual salary of $3,200 each; and that the annual salary of the Deputy Comptroller shall be $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved that the bill and amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 39, nays 73, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanter, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Philip Johnson, Kernan, Le Blond, Long, McKimney, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, and Townsend—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ashley, Bailey, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Frank, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Arnold, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blair, Blow, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. White, Williams, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Worthington, and Yeaman—70.

So the bill and amendment were not laid on the table.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the second amendment offered by Mr. HOOPER, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 38, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baily, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, English, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Hale, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Moorehead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Thayer, Thomas, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Holman, Philip Johnson, Kerian, Knapp, Le Blond, Long, Marcy, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, Scott, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Elihu B. Washburne, and Chilton A. White—38.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blair, Blow, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Grider, Griswold, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. White, Williams, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I offer the following additional amendment:

And one half the interest paid in specie upon United States bonds shall be kept in the vaults of the national banks until they resume specie payments, and they are hereby forbidden to sell any gold thus received.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he modify his amendment so as to provide that one half only of the gold shall be so reserved.

Mr. BROOKS. I will agree to that if the gentleman will give me the support of his party.

Mr. WILSON. No, I cannot pledge that; but I will vote for it myself.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York accept the modification suggested?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, I will accept anything for a bargain at this time of night.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I offer the following amendment:

And the interest on Government stocks held by national banks may be paid in specie or in circulating notes of said banks at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOOPER moved the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ANCONA called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GARRETT R. BARRY.

Mr. BLISS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, joint resolution of the Senate No. 41, for the relief of Garrett R. Barry, a paymaster of the United States Navy.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLISS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ENGLISH, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Henry Barriclow, asking relief on account of twenty-three land warrants.

OFFICERS' SERVANTS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in reference to officers' servants be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with authority to report at any time.

The motion was agreed to.

CHIEF OF STAFF TO LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that Senate bill No. 476, to provide for a chief of staff to the Lieutenant General commanding the armies of the United States be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time. It enacts that the President of the United States may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a chief of staff to the Lieutenant General commanding the armies of the United States, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general in the United States Army.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that Senate joint resolution No. 111, to encourage the employment of disabled and discharged soldiers, be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a good measure.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The question being on its third reading, the joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORED LABORERS.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be, and they are hereby, instructed to place the names of Sandy Bruce, Henry Hall, and James Saunders, colored assistant laborers, on the roll of laborers of this House, and pay them accordingly, for the present session.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment to that resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire the gentleman from Pennsylvania to explain that resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania. What do you want to know? [Laughter.]

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CABINET MINISTERS IN CONGRESS.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to make a report from the special committee on invalid pensions appointed in December, 1864.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to it. I desire to know who has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] has the floor on the bill relative to the attendance of heads of Departments in Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor to make a speech on a subject in which he has taken a good deal of interest. I think it but fair and just to the gentleman from Ohio, to his position, and to his long service in this House, that he should have an opportunity, even at this late day, to make his speech on the question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania. If he wants to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. He has yielded to every member who requested him to do so, and I think that we are crowding the gentleman from Ohio a little too far. If, by the consent of the House, which I hope will be given, that gentleman may have a short time to-morrow to make his speech, that will be but fair.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to that proposition?

Mr. PENDLETON. If the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois be agreeable to the House, that at a fixed hour to-morrow, say one o'clock, I may have the floor to say what I have to say on this subject, I will, with great pleasure, yield the floor now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Ohio having one hour, to commence at one o'clock to-morrow, on the special order?

Mr. MORRILL. It is well understood all over the House that the gentleman from Ohio has yielded his position in order not to clog the business of the House. I hope that some time to-morrow, when it can be done without interference with the business of the House, he will have an opportunity to address the House.

Mr. HULBURD. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Ohio that privilege.

The rules were suspended, (more than two thirds voting in favor thereof,) and it was so ordered.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

Mr. HIGBY, by unanimous consent, from the special committee in regard to certain charges against the Commissioner of Patents, made a report, accompanied by testimony.

The report was read. The committee unanimously report that in their opinion none of the charges have been sustained.

The committee was discharged, and the report and testimony were ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the House now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, for the purpose of taking up and finally disposing of such bills and joint resolutions as may not be objected to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX moved that the House adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The first business on the Speaker's table was a concurrent resolution of the Senate, requesting the President of the United States to transmit to the Executives of the several States the amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States respecting the extinction of slavery therein.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

REBEL DEBT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a concurrent resolution of the Senate against any recognition of the rebel debt or loan under any circumstances.

Mr. COX. I object.

DUTY ON PRINTING PAPER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to a joint resolution (H. R. No. 141) reducing the duty on printing paper, unsized, and used for books and newspapers exclusively.

Mr. JENCKES. I object.

STOCKBRIDGE, WISCONSIN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 558) to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANCONA. I object.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 389) relating to clerkships in the Post Office Department.

The Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to strike out sections three and four of Senate bill, and insert "that said clerks shall be paid out of any money heretofore appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for the service of the Post Office Department."

Mr. DONNELLY moved that the House recede from its amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the Senate amendment to a bill (H. R. No. 794) to incorporate the Continental Hotel Company of the city of Washington.

Add to the bill the following section:
Sec. — And be it further enacted, That Congress may, at any time, alter, amend, or repeal this charter.

Mr. ASHLEY. I move the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS BOOTLE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the Senate amendment to a bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Thomas Booth; changing "Booth" to "Bootle" in bill and title.

The amendment was concurred in.

MINNESOTA LAND GRANTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to a bill (H. R. No. 761) extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any further grant of land in this bill? Is it anything more than an extension of time?

Mr. WINDOM. None at all, beyond what it was when the bill passed the House.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

PAY OF MIDSHIPMEN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to a bill (H. R. No. 605) to increase the pay of midshipmen, and others.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

ELIZABETH B. LEPPEN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendment to a bill (H. R. No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Leppien.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

PENSION LAWS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to a bill (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the several acts granting pensions.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

MAIL SERVICE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to a bill of the House removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mails.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a privileged question. The House just now concurred in the Senate amendments to bill H. R. No. 756, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts granting pensions." I have since ascertained that the Senate struck out the fifth and sixth sections—two important sections of the bill. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I hope that the motion to reconsider will not be agreed to. I move that that motion be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 71, noes 21.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Cobb, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1866, with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the House now concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

MINNESOTA LAND GRANTS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the amendments of the Senate to House bill extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes. Those amendments were concurred in without a dissenting voice. But so far as I was concerned I acted under a misapprehension founded upon a statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] I understood him to say that the bill, as amended, provided simply for an extension of time. He has since informed me that he did not intend to be so understood; that he meant to say that the bill, as amended, provided for no extension beyond that contemplated by the bill as it passed the House. I trust he will see the fairness of allowing the vote to be reconsidered, because I acted under that assurance.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to say a word with reference to the misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

I was beginning to explain the amendments when the gentleman from New York [Mr. GANSON] suggested to me that I would kill my bill if I made a speech. So I concluded to proceed no further. When the gentleman from Indiana asked whether the amendments provided for anything beyond an extension of time, I did not understand him in the hubbub prevailing at the moment. I could not hear what occurred until the Speaker announced that the amendment had been concurred in. I desire to say that the Senate amendments make no grant additional to that made by the House bill which passed here by a two-thirds vote. The House bill authorized the company to take other lands than those contiguous to the road to be constructed; the amendments of the Senate limit the company in this respect. So far as that point is concerned, the bill as amended is preferable to the House bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota were misapprehended by myself and by others around me. We acted on the question under this misapprehension. I trust that good faith will suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota the propriety of allowing a reconsideration of our action.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to a reconsideration, if the question can be acted on at once.

The SPEAKER. If a reconsideration should take place, a single objection will prevent concurrence in the amendments, because the understanding was that these matters should go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON. I do not understand the gentleman from Indiana to object to the matter coming up so that the House may act on it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want the action taken reconsidered, so that the bill may stand as it stood when it was taken up from the Speaker's table.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now object to taking the bill from the Speaker's table.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 88, suspending the sale by sealed bids of the lands of the Kansas and Sac and Fox Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not understand the object of the postponement of these sales. They have been postponed since 1861.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I was going to call for the previous question. I think the longer these sales are postponed the better.

Mr. HOLMAN. They have been suspended since 1861, and the creditors of these Indians have been kept out of their money. I object.

MASSACRE OF CHEYENNE INDIANS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 93, in relation to the massacre of Cheyenne Indians.

Mr. McBRIDE. I object.

INVENTORY OF QUARTERMASTERS' DEPOTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 90, to authorize and direct an inventory of articles in the quartermasters' depots in the United States, and in possession of naval storekeepers of the United States.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is a good resolution, and I hope that it will be passed.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN VREELAND.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 412, for the relief of Benjamin Vreeland, surgeon in the Navy of the United States.

RETALIATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 97, advising retaliation for cruel treatment of prisoners by the insurgents.

Mr. KERNAN. I object.

PAUL S. FORBES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 94, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to advance to Paul S. Forbes $250,000 additional out of the sum to be paid to him under the contract for building a steam screw sloop-of-war.

The SPEAKER. That having already passed, the resolution will be laid on the table.

STATE OF KANSAS CLAIM.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 70, to enable the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Kansas.

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN CALIFORNIA.

Senate bill No. 370, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of Indian Affairs in California."

INDIAN BONDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 85, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Secretary of the Interior $250,000 in lieu of certain bonds for feeding certain refugee Indians.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

JAMES MADISON'S PAPERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 105, respecting the publication of the papers of James Madison.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL L. GEROULD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 450, for the relief of Samuel L. Gerould.

WILLIAM PIERCE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill S. No. 422, for the relief of William Pierce.

Mr. HOOPER. I object.

G. J. STUBBLEFIELD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution S. No. 109, authorizing the adjustment of the claim of George J. Stubblefield for chewing tobacco furnished to the United States.

Mr. THAYER. I object.

Mr. COX moved that the House adjourn. The motion was disagreed to.

W. H. AND C. S. DUNCAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill S. No. 311, for the relief of W. H. & C. S. Duncan.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up and read a first and second time. The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. F. CLARKE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

*COPYRIGHT LAW.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill (S. No. 468) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to amend the several acts respecting copyrights," approved February 3, 1851, and to the acts in addition thereto and in amendment thereof.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, and read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRANK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill (S. No. 413) making a grant of land to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

CAPITOL HOTEL COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill (S. No. 452) to incorporate the Capitol Hotel Company in Washington city, District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, and read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINNESOTA LAND GRANTS.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to make another appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his objection to concurring in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 761) extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in Minnesota, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the gentleman from Minnesota has acted very fairly and courteously on this subject toward me personally, and has relieved me from the difficulty of falling into a mistake in regard to its purpose, I say, without hesitation, that while I am opposed to the bill, and cannot withdraw my objection, I will very freely waive, so far as I am concerned, the understanding that the rules shall not be suspended during the evening. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object. We were parties here to-night to a contract when we entered upon this character of legislation. I conceive it always unconstitutional to interfere with contracts. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the objection comes too late, and that a motion to suspend the rules is in order.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir; I rose in time.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair entertains the objection.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, subsequently withdrew the objection, and Mr. ANCONA renewed it.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANTS.

The next bill taken from the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 463) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act making a grant of alternate sections of public lands to the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, and for other purposes.'"

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this bill increase the grant of lands?

Mr. UPSON. It simply gives an extension of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to it.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BURLINGTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. No. 123) to extend the time for constructing the Burlington and Missouri River railroad in Iowa, and filing a map of relocation.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is there anything in that bill except as to extending the time?

Mr. WILSON. There is no additional grant of land.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

PATENT RIGHTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 387) amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," approved March 3, 1863.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The question being on its third reading,

Mr. COX. I object to the third reading, and move that the House do now [twenty minutes past one, a. m.] adjourn.

The House refused to adjourn; there being, on a division—ayes 46, noes 52.

Mr. COX subsequently withdrew his objection to the third reading of the bill, S. No. 387; and there being no further objection the bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINNESOTA LAND GRANTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 295) making additional grants of lands to the State of Minnesota in alternate sections to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State.

Mr. ANCONA objected.

DOCUMENTS FOR STATE DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution (S. No. 114) authorizing additional copies of public documents to be printed for the Department of State.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, objected.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution charging the President of the United States with the duty of making known to the people of the United States, by proclamation or otherwise, the facts in his possession relating to the international exhibitions proposed to be held at Bergen, Norway, and Oporto, Portugal, during the summer of 1865.

The joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

MAIL POUCHES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. No. 121) to purchase mail pouches or boxes of Marshall Smith's patent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, objected.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. No. 118) to authorize surveys to be made with a view to the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara, to deepen and enlarge the Illinois and Michigan canal, to improve the navigation of the Illinois river, to improve the Upper rapids and also the

Des Moines rapids of the Mississippi river, to improve the navigation of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If that is objected to, I move that the House adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

NAVAL JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 465) to create the office of Solicitor and Naval Judge Advocate General.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. A bill upon this subject has already passed the House. I move to lay this bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

WAGON ROADS IN THE TERRITORIES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 472) to provide for the construction of certain wagon roads in the Territories of Idaho, Montana, Dakota, and Nebraska.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

COLORED UNION BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. R. No. 451) to incorporate the Colored Union Benevolent Association.

PACIFIC RAILROAD MAPS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. No. 125) transferring maps and other documents relating to the surveys of the Pacific railroad to the Department of the Interior.

NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 478) in relation to the Naval Observatory.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be read a third time. It was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN HENRY S. STELLWAGEN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. No. 128) authorizing the acceptance of a sword of honor from the Government of Great Britain by Captain Henry S. Stellwagen, United States Navy.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, and ordered to be read a third time. It was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BATH, MAINE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to lease or sell certain property of the United States situate at Bath, in the State of Maine.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be read a third time. It was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 483) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which shall provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object.

NATIONAL MILITARY AND NAVAL ASYLUM.

The last business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 479) to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be read a third time. It was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

And then, on motion of Mr. COX, (at one o'clock and thirty-five minutes, a. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1865.

Prayer by Rev. THOMAS BOWMAN, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOWARD. If it be in order, I move to take up the bill which was under consideration when we adjourned last night.

Mr. GRIMES. This is the last opportunity we shall have to present petitions and reports.

Mr. CLARK. I desire that the rules may be observed, and petitions and reports be allowed to be presented, as this is the last morning we shall have to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. I withdraw the motion.

SENATE CONTINGENT FUND.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a detailed statement of the payments from the contingent fund of the Senate for the year ending December 5, 1864; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRIMES presented a petition of William Reynolds, commander United States Navy, on the reserved list, praying to be restored to his former position on the active list, having been retired, as is alleged, solely on account of physical disability which is now removed; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUCKALEW presented a petition of Daniel McHenry, of Pennsylvania, praying that the circumstances of his arrest and imprisonment in the month of August, 1864, may be investigated, and that those causing it may be exposed and punished, and he be paid the expenses incurred by him in his defense before a military commission; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DIXON presented a petition of Edward St. Clair Clarke, acting assistant paymaster United States Navy, praying to be relieved from all liability for certain public money alleged to have been stolen from him in May, 1863, on board the United States steamer Sumter, then lying at the Brooklyn navy-yard; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 535) further to regulate the appointment of admirals and for the appointment of certain volunteer officers to the regular Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 801) to amend certain acts relating to the naval service, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 803) to revive in part the act approved March 3, 1857, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th of June, 1858.

Mr. GRIMES. These bills ought to pass, but in the pressure of business that is now upon us I do not feel it incumbent upon me to call them up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will go upon the Calendar.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bill and joint resolutions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 466) to amend an act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy," approved January 16, 1857, and an act amendatory thereof, approved March 3, 1859;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 80) in relation to the distribution of prize money; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 128) providing for the appointment of a commission to locate one or more navy-yards and depots on the north-western lakes.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of the establishment of a general naval recruiting office at Detroit in that State; the memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the establishment of a naval depot at Milwaukee, in that State; the memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Racine, Wisconsin, praying for the location of a naval depot at that place; the memorial of citizens of the city of Sandusky, Ohio, praying for the location of a naval depot at Johnson's Island, in Sandusky bay; the petition of citizens of Detroit, Michigan, praying for the establishment of a navy-yard at that place; the petition of professors of mathematics in the Navy, praying for an increase of pay; the memorial of officers of the United States war steamer Sumter, praying for payment for clothing lost by the sinking of that vessel; the petition of officers and survivors of United States monitor Tecumseh and of the United States steamer Philippi, praying for payment for loss of clothing occasioned by the sinking of those vessels; the memorial of Edward McDonald Reynolds; the petition of acting assistant paymasters attached to the Mississippi squadron, praying for an increase of pay; the papers relating to the claim of Philip Landsdale; and the report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy for the year 1864, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred a petition of masters in the Navy, not in the line of promotion, and attached to navy-yards, praying to be placed on the same footing with masters at sea, and a petition of Charles Murray, paymaster United States Navy, praying for additional compensation while serving at Mare Island, California, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of a canal from Sturgeon bay to Lake Michigan, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of Eaton & Gage, contractors with the Navy Department, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) to refer the claim of Selmar Seibert back to the Court of Claims, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, asked to be discharged from their consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 372) allowing mileage to the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 397) in relation to the rights of married women in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 401) to amend the judicial system of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 137) to exclude disloyal persons from the public lands of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 440) to define the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada;

A bill (S. No. 461) to amend the judicial system of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 474) to establish a commission of claims at Knoxville, in the State of Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 284) to prevent the selling and circulation of counterfeit coin, and of counterfeit and altered Treasury notes, and postal currency;

A bill (H. R. No. 631) to provide for holding courts in the western district of Missouri, and to prescribe the terms thereof;

A bill (H. R. No. 638) to facilitate judicial proceedings on writs of error and appeal;

A bill (H. R. No. 641) to provide for another term of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) for the return of Arkansas to the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 46) relating to the account of B. C. Whiting, reported it without amendment.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. BUCKALEW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to the Senate the amount of money paid by the War Department from the 1st day of March, 1861, to the 1st day of March, 1865, to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for the transportation of troops, munitions of war, or any other purpose, between the city of Baltimore and the city of Washington, stating particularly the amount per passenger, and freight per ton, and stating especially whether he has in any case paid to the said road higher rates than the rates agreed in 1861 to be paid by the Department to all the railroads of the country.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 70) to enable the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of W. H. & C. S. Duncan;

A bill (S. No. 318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to lease or sell certain property of the United States situated at Bath, in the State of Maine;

A bill (S. No. 370) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of Indian affairs in California;"

A bill (S. No. 387) amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," approved March 3, 1863;

A bill (S. No. 411) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad, in the District of Columbia;"

A bill (S. No. 451) to incorporate the Colored Union Benevolent Association;

A bill (S. No. 452) to incorporate the Capitol Hotel Company, in Washington city, District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 463) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act making a grant of alternate sections of public lands to the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, and for other purposes;'"

A bill (S. No. 468) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to amend the several acts respecting copyright," approved February 3, 1831, and to the acts in addition thereto and amendment thereof;

A bill (S. No. 476) to provide for a chief of staff to the Lieutenant General commanding the armies of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 478) in relation to the Naval Observatory;

A bill (S. No. 479) to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of the totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer force of the United States;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) for the relief of Garrett R. Barry, a paymaster in the United States Navy;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to authorize and direct an inventory of articles in the quartermasters' depots of the United States, and in the possession of the naval storekeepers of the United States;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 105) respecting the publication of the papers of James Madison;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 111) to encourage the employment of disabled and discharged soldiers;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 122) relating to international exhibitions at Bergen, in Norway, and Oporto, in Portugal, during the summer of 1865;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 123) to extend the time for constructing the Burlington and Missouri River railroad, in Iowa, and filing a map of relocation;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 125) transferring maps and other documents relating to the surveys of the Pacific railroad to the Department of the Interior; and the acceptance of a sword of honor from the Government of Great Britain by Captain Henry S. Stewagen, of the United States Navy.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Thomas Bootle;

A bill (H. R. No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Leppien;

A bill (H. R. No. 605) to increase the pay of midshipmen and others;

A bill (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions; and

A bill (H. R. No. 764) to incorporate the Continental Hotel Company of the city of Washington.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 171) for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes, approved June 7, 1862, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its first amendment to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 389) relating to clerkships in the Post Office Department, disagreed to by the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1866, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KASSON, Mr. McBRIDE, and Mr. ELDRIDGE, managers at the same on its part.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1866; and

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. DOOLITTLE, Mr. HARLAN, and Mr. CONNESS.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DIXON. I notice that in the Chronicle and Intelligencer this morning I am recorded as not voting on the question to tax the State banks ten per cent. after a certain date. I wish to inquire of the Secretary whether that is according to the Journal. If so, I desire the Journal to be corrected. I voted on that question. I voted in the affirmative, that is, against the proposition to tax the banks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will take a little time to ascertain how the matter stands on the Journal, but if the Senator's name is not found recorded in the affirmative it will be so placed.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if the committee of conference on the part of the Senate have been appointed on the tax bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have been.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to be released from service on that committee, and that some one else be appointed. I will state that I left the Chamber at a late hour last night, and the conference committee was afterward appointed, and they are now acting. I had no notice of the conference, and therefore I do not wish my name to appear among the conferees. I hope the Senate will relieve me from the duty. I did not get notice until nearly an hour after the conference committee had met.

Mr. GRIMES. Have the committee acted?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know nothing about it. I received no notice until nearly an hour after the conferees met, and, as a matter of course, I can take no part in their deliberations.

Mr. CONNESS. What does the Senator desire to do?

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wish to be discharged from service on the conference committee on the tax bill, because I had no notice at the time. It was probably on account of the fact that I left the Chamber last night at eleven o'clock, and the committee of conference was appointed after I left.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to inquire whether the committee have met and acted?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are holding a meeting now.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I hope the Senator will remain on the committee.

Mr. COLLAMER. I think there is no necessity for any action on the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on excusing the Senator from Ohio from service on the committee of conference.

Mr. COLLAMER. That will only create difficulty in appointing somebody else.

Mr. CONNESS. There is nobody else who can fill the Senator's place on that committee.

The question being put, the Senate refused to excuse Mr. SHERMAN from service on the committee.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the post road bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 774) to establish certain post roads.

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire to take the shortest course possible in considering the bill, and as it is a mere matter of description of routes, it is usual to dispense with the reading of the bill and also the amendments to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be dispensed with, if there be no objection.

Mr. COLLAMER. The committee have reported several amendments to the bill. It is not usual to take up time by reading them. As they are mere descriptions of places they are generally adopted without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the amendments will be dispensed with if there be no objection.

Mr. COLLAMER. Before they are adopted I wish to make some slight verbal alterations in them. On page 1, line fourteen, "Jacob R." should be "Jacob K.;" so as to read:

From Carthage, in Hancock county, via Jacob K. Jacob's store, Durham, and McQueen's mill, to Burlington, Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That change will be made.

Mr. COLLAMER. The clause on page 5, lines ninety-two and ninety-three should be stricken out. It is the clause:

From Newbern, Brown county, to Redwood Falls, Redwood county.

That provision is contained in another part of the bill, and I desire that that should be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stricken out, if there be no objection.

Mr. COLLAMER. On page 8, line one hundred and sixty-five, the word "Pittsford" should be changed to "Pittsfield."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That change will be made.

Mr. COLLAMER. I now move that the committee's amendments be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following amendment to come in under the head of Ohio:

From Hamilton, in the State of Ohio, by way of Millville, Bunker Hill, and Riley, Ohio, to Springfield, in the State of Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are there any post routes in the bill for Maryland?

Mr. COLLAMER. I believe not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I propose to amend the bill by inserting between "Maine" and "Michigan," on the 4th page, the following:

Maryland:

From Butler Post Office to Mantua Mills, Baltimore county, Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer an amendment for several routes in Pennsylvania, to come in under the head of Pennsylvania:

From Emington, Venango county, to Shippensville, Clarion county.

From Rock Island, Venango county, via Greenboro to Latona, in said county.

From Collinsburg, Clarion county, via Greenboro, Venango county.

From Greenville, Clarion county, to Herr's store, in said county.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 4, after line seventy-two, I move to insert:

From Belford, through Waldo, Brooks, Knox, Thorndike, Unity, and Benton, to Fairfield.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. On page 1, line seven, I move to strike out the words "Watsonville to," and to insert after "Monterey" the words, "via Watsonville to San Francisco," so that it will read:

From Monterey, via Watsonville, to San Francisco.

At the suggestion of the chairman of the committee I will withdraw that amendment and offer the following:

From Virginia City, in Nevada, by Crystal Peak, via Dinner Lake, Summit Valley, and Dutch Flat, to Sacramento.

Mr. COLLAMER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I also offer the following amendment:

From Murphy's, via Big Trees, Silver Valley, to the mountains; thence via Mount Barren, Markville, Carrier's Mills, to Genoa, in the State of Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I now move to strike out line seven, on page 1:

From Watsonville to Monterey.

That is included in one of the amendments that I have sent up.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That every railroad company in the United States whose road is operated by steam, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to carry upon and over its road, connections, boats, bridges, and ferries, all freight, property, mails, passengers, troops, and Government supplies, or either, from any State to another State, and to receive compensation therefor.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is the case of the New Jersey railroads. I do not propose to enter into the discussion of the merits of the proposition. I will merely say if it is found so weak that it cannot carry itself, I do not see why it should be put as a rider and an incubus upon this post route bill, which is usually passed as a matter of course. All railroads are already post roads by a general law. The amendment has no connection with this bill; has nothing to do with it; and I therefore object to its being put on the bill as a rider in this way. I take it that it will give rise to a great deal of discussion. I know that it will do so if it is received at all, and I hardly know how to avoid that discussion upon its merits when it is presented here in this way.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the honorable Senator will allow me, this is the same amendment that was offered last night to the appropriation bill, and we took a vote without discussion. If the vote is now taken upon it and it is adopted, it then can be considered and debated in the Senate, or the bill defeated.

Mr. SUMNER. It was offered last night on a bill to which perhaps it was not germane. It is absolutely germane to the present bill. The Senator says it is the Camden and Amboy railroad bill. Sir, it is a bill to carry freedom of commerce on all the railroads among the States; and its first and special effect is to overthrow an odious monopoly which now undertakes to interfere with the railroad travel on the great highway between New York and Washington. That railroad company is Apollyon; every traveler is Christian; and the simple question is whether Senators will vote for Apollyon or vote for Christian.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not care to sit here and let that be repeated many times by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. It is not exactly a question of Christian and Apollyon, as I know of, particularly. I have given this question some little consideration, and am ready to discuss it. I have considered attentively the argument of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and, with all respect to him, I do not think it unanswerable; and if I thought now was the proper time I should be quite willing to enter upon the discussion of this question. The honorable Senator cannot suppose for a moment that this measure is to pass on a bill of this description without discussion. Nobody knows better than that honorable Senator that now is not the hour to enter on such a discussion as that. To enter upon it necessarily postpones to the end of this session the bills which are necessary to be passed.

Now, sir, I am opposed to this proposition, and as strongly opposed to it as it is possible for me to be opposed to any measure that by any possibility could be brought before the Senate for its action; and that upon principles as infinitely superior to those which can be involved in the mere question or epithets of "monopoly," "usurpation," "State pretension," and all that, as it is possible to conceive.

Mr. COLLAMER. I suggest to the gentleman to allow the vote to be taken and see whether the Senate will put this proposition on this bill, and if they do then it can be discussed on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I know that; and I am not going to occupy the attention of the Senate more than to say that after I have once or twice taken the floor with a disposition to argue this question, I do not feel it is quite the thing for my honorable friend from Massachusetts to put me in the attitude of supporting a monopoly, favoring a State pretension and usurpation. Sir, confessedly no higher question than this has ever occupied the attention of the American Senate. I undertake to say that this question lies at the distinction which has obtained from the foundations of this Government, and which is fundamental, between the powers which are delegated to the Government of the United States and those which are expressly retained to the American people as their reserved rights. Whenever the question comes before this Senate in the way to be discussed, I will undertake to demonstrate that the assumption of authority here annihilates the distinctions between the delegated powers of your Government and those which are, under the Constitution, expressly reserved to the people; and when I enter on that discussion I am not to be told that I advocate a monopoly, or that I am in favor of a State pretension. Sir, I am in favor of the pretensions of the people under that provision of the Constitution which reserves to them all the rights which are not expressly delegated in the Constitution for the purposes of a General Government. That is the question here; and I would not have taken this occasion to say a word if my honorable friend had not thought proper now at this late day, unanswered as his speech on a former occasion has been, to repeat here the epithets of "monopoly," "State pretension," "usurpation," "Apollyon and Christian," and the like. When I propose to discuss a question of this sort

I do not care to be subjected to the imputation of supporting a monopoly.

Now, in regard to that monopoly, I think there are some things about it which are not justifiable at this day. But when the Senator from Massachusetts undertakes to talk about a monopoly in New Jersey he should remember that the legislation which characterizes that monopoly characterizes the legislation of his own State as well; and it is not peculiar to New Jersey. Standing on the statute-books of Massachusetts is a chapter almost identical in language, certainly identical in principle, with that which characterizes the legislation of New Jersey.

Mr. SUMNER. Not undertaking to regulate commerce among the States.

Mr. MORRILL. Undertaking to do precisely what New Jersey did. What was that? To say that if the citizens of that State would build a railroad from one point to the other, they should have the exclusive privilege—

Mr. SUMNER. In the State.

Mr. MORRILL. In the State. Does the honorable Senator, as a lawyer, undertake to draw a distinction between those two charters, between the legislation of those two States? It is identical in principle and effect; and the supreme court of that State has sustained it. But I will not enter upon that discussion. It is a monopoly undoubtedly, in the sense that every exclusive privilege is a monopoly; but it is exclusively within the province of the States; and it has been so held time and again by the courts in Massachusetts, and been so held by the Supreme Court of the United States, and never has been overruled in any case, in any State, or in the courts of the United States.

I am not disposed to be put in the attitude of defending a monopoly. This monopoly to which the honorable Senator refers expires by its own limitation in 1869. If this measure only affected the monopoly in New Jersey I would not raise my finger against it. If the honorable Senator desires to reach the monopoly in New Jersey, which is the incentive to action here, let him bring in his bill, and let him strike New Jersey, and then let New Jersey have her remedy; but when he brings in a bill here so far-reaching and comprehensive in its scope that it strikes down the fundamental distinction between the rights of the people reserved to them under the Constitution of the United States and those powers which are delegated to the General Government, I stand here to protest against it. I am not the advocate of exclusive privilege, not the advocate of monopoly, not the advocate, in any obnoxious sense, of State rights, certainly not the advocate of State sovereignty in any especial sense, for I repudiate the whole; but I tell that Senator that when that good question comes up I shall be found standing on the line which marks the distinction, broad and deep, between the reserved rights of the American people in their sovereign capacity, not as States, but those indestructible rights which are reserved to them expressly in the Constitution of the United States and those granted to the General Government, to say "Thus far, but no farther." That is my ground.

I have deemed it necessary to say thus much for fear that the repeated assumptions of the honorable Senator might put me in the attitude of standing here to justify in any sense whatever what he has been pleased to denominate as a monopoly.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall now take a vote if the Senator is through.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; I am through for the present. If the case ends here, I end. If it comes up in the Senate, I shall discuss it.

Mr. WILSON. I hope, pressed as we are to-day, that we shall not spend any more time on this subject.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order, and I object to the amendment on the ground that it is not relevant to the bill; and I wish that the sense of the Senate might be taken on that question.

Mr. WILSON. That will take time. I hope we shall have a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair deems the amendment in order.

Mr. HALE. Very well; then I withdraw that objection.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Nye, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, and Wade—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Fairwell, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Powell, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Willey, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Doollittle, Foot, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Richardson, Kiddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read a third time, and passed.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. CLARK. I move now to proceed to the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. HOWE. I appeal to the Senator to allow me to pass a little bill first.

Mr. CLARK. I cannot give way to any appeals. It was understood last evening that this bill was to come up this morning, and the public business requires that it should be disposed of.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am opposed to taking up the tariff bill at this stage of the session, for what I think are very obvious reasons. The bill comes to this body from the other branch of Congress in the very last hours of the session, and it is proposed that we shall now take it up and act upon it. I do not think it ought to pass. The modification of the tariff law used to be considered a very important piece of legislation. But few Senators know what will be the effect of this bill. The Senator from New Hampshire will understand precisely how it will strike the interests which he represents in this body; but I say it is impossible, as a western representative in this body, for me to know thoroughly the effect of this measure upon the interests which I represent. Under the circumstances, I think the bill ought not to be urged.

Again, I think there ought to be something like stability of legislation. Everybody knows that the immediate effect of a tariff law is to change prices, to affect the commerce of the country; and I think we ought to stand by the laws that are enacted at least for a time, and not amend them altogether. Therefore I oppose the taking up of the bill, and think that we ought to proceed to other measures that have been to some extent considered by the body.

Mr. CLARK. The passage of the tax bill made it necessary to amend the tariff law in a very few particulars. The bill is a very simple one, and I think is not liable to the objection stated by the Senator from Indiana. I desire that it may come before the Senate, and that the Senate may judge on the provisions of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties on foreign importations.

Mr. CLARK. I will ask that the amendments be considered as the reading of the bill proceeds, in order to save time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That course will be taken if there be no objection.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out all of section one, after the word "amended," in line five, in the following words:

In paragraph marked "second," by striking out after the words "on finer and lighter goods of like description," the words "exceeding one hundred threads and;" and that section eighteen of the said act be amended by inserting therein after the words "raw cotton," in parenthesis, the words "and raw silk as reeled from the cocoon or not further advanced than tram, thrown, or organzine."

And to insert in lieu thereof:

So that paragraphs second, third, and fourth, of section six of said act shall read as follows:

2. On all manufactures of cotton, (except jeans, denims, drillings, bed-tickings, gingham, plaids, cottonades, pantation stuff, and goods of like description,) not bleached, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and exceeding in weight five ounces per square yard, five cents per square yard; if bleached, five cents and a half per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, five cents and a half per square yard, and in addition thereto ten per cent. ad valorem. On finer and lighter goods of like description, not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, unbleached, five cents per square yard; if bleached, five and a half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, five and a half cents per square yard, and in addition thereto twenty per cent. ad valorem. On goods of like description exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, unbleached, five cents per square yard; if bleached, five and a half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, five and a half cents per square yard, and in addition thereto twenty per cent. ad valorem.

3. On all cotton jeans, denims, drillings, bed-tickings, gingham, plaids, cottonades, pantation stuffs, and goods of like description, or for similar use, if unbleached, and not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and exceeding five ounces to the square yard, six cents per square yard; if bleached, six cents and a half per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, six cents and a half per square yard, and in addition thereto ten per cent. ad valorem. On finer or lighter goods of like description, not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, if unbleached, six and a half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, six and a half cents per square yard, and in addition thereto fifteen per cent. ad valorem. On goods of like description exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, if unbleached, seven cents per square yard; if bleached, seven and a half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, seven and a half cents per square yard, and in addition thereto fifteen per cent. ad valorem. Provided, That upon all plain woven cotton goods not included in the foregoing schedules, unbleached valued at over sixteen cents per square yard, bleached valued at over twenty cents per square yard, colored valued at over twenty-five cents per square yard, and cotton jeans, denims, and drillings, unbleached, valued at over twenty cents per square yard, and all other cotton goods of every description, the value of which shall exceed twenty-five cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. And provided further, That no cotton goods having more than two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, shall be admitted to a less rate of duty than is provided for goods which are of that number of threads.

4. On spool thread of cotton, six cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding one hundred yards of thread, and in addition thereto thirty per cent. ad valorem; exceeding one hundred yards, for every additional hundred yards of thread on each spool, or fractional part thereof in excess of one hundred yards, six cents per dozen, and thirty per cent. ad valorem. And on cotton thread or yarn, when advanced beyond single yarn by twisting two or more strands together, if not wound upon spools, four cents per skein or hank of eight hundred and forty yards, and thirty per cent. ad valorem.

So that the section will read:

That section six of an act entitled "An act to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, be amended so that paragraphs second, third, and fourth of section six of said act shall read as follows, &c.

Mr. CLARK. I only desire to say that this amendment, though appearing to be a long one, only draws out into form the House provision, so that you can see upon its face what is the alteration. The great complaint in regard to the tax bill was the form in which the amendments to the old law were drawn. This amendment simply puts the proposition in the bill in form with a little addition, I will say, at the close, of a tax upon cotton thread, which was omitted in the old law. The old law levied a tax upon spool cotton when wound, but the importers, instead of winding their cotton upon the spool import it in the thread and wind it in this country; and it therefore becomes necessary to tax the thread. That is all there is in it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, as he stated that this bill was rendered necessary by the passage of the internal revenue bill, what particular feature of the internal revenue bill requires the adoption of this section?

Mr. CLARK. I did not say the whole of this bill was rendered necessary by the passage of that bill. I said the main features of it were rendered necessary by it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are the amendments printed?

Mr. CLARK. They are not.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is impossible for us to understand them.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will turn to page 220 of the Laws of last session he will find that this provision strikes out of paragraph second of the old law these words, "exceeding one hundred threads" in two places; for the reason that cottons with less threads to the square inch than one hundred were coming in under the old law, by a decision of the Department, at one and a quarter cent per yard. The English made a very slazy (as we call it) kind of cotton, fine in thread, but open, weighing less and having a less number of threads to the inch, and it came in at a duty of one and a quarter cent per yard, and it took away the manufacture of our own goods. That is all the amendment accomplishes.

Mr. COLLAMER. This makes it much better.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir, very much better. It was an omission in the former law, and it has been construed against the manufacturers of this country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line eleven, to strike out the word "skins" and insert "skeins."

Mr. CLARK. That is merely verbal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line thirteen, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten;" so that the clause will read:

On iron bars for railroads or inclined planes, ten cents per one hundred pounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the words, "nor by any act amendatory thereof," at the end of section four; so that it will read:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That section fifteen of an act entitled "An act increasing, temporarily, the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1862, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to impose a tax or tonnage duty of thirty cents per ton in lieu of "ten cents" as therein mentioned: Provided, That the receipts of vessels paying tonnage duty shall not be subject to the tax provided in section one hundred and three of "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, nor by any act amendatory thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section seven, as follows:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That so much of an act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856, as prohibits the export thereof, is hereby repealed.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And be it further enacted, That so much of an act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856, as prohibits the export thereof, is hereby suspended in relation to all persons who have complied with the provisions of section second of said act for two years from and after July 14, 1865.

Mr. CLARK. The House proposed to repeal the section entirely, but we suspend it for two years, as it has been done before.

Mr. HALE. Will my colleague explain to me the necessity of continuing that prohibition?

Mr. CLARK. When the act was suspended two years ago, it was done because the southern States, where the guano was sold, were in a state of rebellion, and it was not sold, and they are now in the same condition. The market for guano was in the southern States; and the importers were not allowed to export it after they brought it here.

Mr. HALE. Why not repeal the law?

Mr. CLARK. Because after two years it may be desirable to have the law. We thought we would let it be suspended for two years further.

The amendment was agreed to.

PORTAGE LAKE SHIP-CANAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. CLARK. What is the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the bill (H. R. No. 745) granting land to the State of Michigan to aid in building a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] is entitled to the floor upon that bill, and was speaking upon it when the Senate adjourned last night.

Mr. CLARK. We shall probably get through with the tariff bill in a very short time.

Mr. HOWARD. It will only take the time consumed in reading this bill to pass it, I imagine. I made an effort to get this bill before the Senate when we adjourned last night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read twice, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. I will say that that bill was held over on an objection of mine, which I withdrew.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me more important to finish the tariff bill than to make a grant to a railroad at this time. If the Senator will let me finish that bill, I will interpose no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. It will take but a moment of time, and I cannot yield the floor to allow anything else to be done.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe the bill of the Senator from Michigan to be more important than the tariff bill. It relieves the commerce of the northern lakes to a very large extent. I appeal to the merits of the two bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and if no amendments be proposed it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I will ask the Senator from Michigan to explain it. Is it a large conveyance of land? How much land?

Mr. HOWARD. Two hundred thousand acres to make a ship-canal a mile and a half long, the use of which will obviate the voyage of the navigation from Sault Ste. Marie to the head of the lake, two hundred miles. It will be a saving of two hundred miles on a single voyage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FARWELL. I do not propose to interpose any objection to this bill, but I should like to know whether it is a national interest, or whether it is like the fishing bounties. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. The bill speaks for itself. It is a very important work, almost indispensable to the navigation of the lakes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TARIFF BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now read the next amendment reported to the bill by the Committee on Finance.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out the tenth section of the bill, in the following words:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase to any sum, not exceeding $1,500, the salary or compensation of any deputy collector of customs whose compensation is now limited by law to a lower sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the eighth section of the act of March 23, 1864, "to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury in case of the actual injury or destruction of goods, wares, or merchandise by accidental fire or casualty while in warehouse under bond, &c., to abate or refund the duties paid or accruing thereon, be extended so as to include goods, wares, or merchandise injured or destroyed in like manner while in the custody of the officers of customs and not in bond, and also to goods, wares, and merchandise so injured or destroyed after their arrival within the limits of any port of entry of the United States and before the same have been landed under the supervision of the officers of the customs: Provided, That this act shall apply only to cases arising from and after its passage, and to cases where the duties have not already been paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I believe that is the last amendment reported from the committee: I offer the following section, to come in between sections five and six, to perfect the amendment in the first part of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That there shall be hereafter collected and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise of the growth or produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, except raw cotton and raw silk as reeled from the cocoon or not further advanced than tram, thrown, or organzine, when imported from places west of the Cape of Good Hope, a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duties imposed on any such articles when imported directly from the place or places of their growth or produce.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to hear an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I will explain it to the Senator. If he will turn his attention to the first section of the House bill, lines eleven and twelve, he will see that the House proposed after the words "raw cotton" to insert "and raw silk as reeled from the cocoon or not further advanced than tram, thrown, or organzine." I have drawn the section out and inserted the words, that is all; and the reason of it is, that at the last session the Senate and House both agreed to the insertion of these words, but the engrossing clerk left them out by mistake. This amendment is only to correct that mistake, and to draw out the amendment of the House so that these words will be in the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to present an amendment to which I suppose there will be no objection. It will be understood if the Senate will let me read an extract from a letter from a United States district attorney.

Mr. GRIMES. Read the amendment first.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The amendment is to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in all proceedings brought by the United States in any court for the recovery, as well of judgments upon imports alone, as of penalties for the non-payment thereof, the judgment shall recite that the same is rendered for duties, and such judgment, interest, and costs shall be payable in the coin by law receivable for duties, and the execution issued on such judgment shall set forth that the recovery is for duties, and shall require the marshal to satisfy the same in the coin by law receivable for duties; and in case of levy upon and sale of the property of the judgment debtor, the marshal shall refuse payment from any purchaser at such sale in any other money than that specified in the execution.

I have a letter here from the district attorney of the United States at Detroit, who says that it is questionable whether a judgment of that character may not be discharged in lawful money. I presume there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. State what is in the letter instead of reading it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have stated it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have another amendment that I desire to offer as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That all goods, wares, and merchandise, for, or articles donated to, the Northwestern Sanitary Fair to be held at Chicago, May 30, 1865, or purchased with the funds of the Northwestern Sanitary Commission for the benefit of said fair, may be imported into the United States free of duty: Provided, The Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that said goods or articles are imported in good faith for the benefit of the said fair.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That where the United States is the purchaser under any contract made prior to the passage of any act increasing the duties on imports of any article the duty upon which has been so increased, the party delivering such article, under such prior contract, shall be allowed therefor, in addition to the contract price thereof, the increased duty which may have been imposed upon such article under such subsequent act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the second section of the bill by adding these words:

On wrought iron tubes two and a half cents per pound.

I will simply say, in regard to this amendment, that there are $9,000,000 worth of iron tubes made in the country, that pay on the iron about three quarters of a million duty, and that by the law as it now stands the foreign importer has about twenty per cent. advantage. This amendment will equalize it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to offer an amendment to come in as a new item of the third section: "On buffalo robes, ten per cent. ad valorem." I will simply send up a letter to be read in explanation of this amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I have some doubt about that amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. The letter I have sent up to the desk will explain it.

The Secretary read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1865.

SIR: By the tariff act of June 30, 1864, "furs on the skin dressed" are made subject to a duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem, "furs on the skin undressed" to a duty of ten per cent.

It is doubtful whether "buffalo robes" are properly included under either class. Mr. Chute (long connected with the fur trade) says that they are not considered as "furs" by dealers. They are more like hides or "baled skins" which are charged with a duty of ten per cent.

I am satisfied that ten per cent. ad valorem will be more productive of revenue than twenty per cent. Under the latter rate I am assured by G. M. Bailey, of St. Paul, that "buffalo robes" will pass to England or Canada without importation into the United States and without sale in our markets.

Thus will the revenue be diminished and our trade—mostly at St. Cloud and St. Paul—will be reduced.

Allow me to suggest that the amendatory tariff act which passed the House yesterday be amended in the Senate by inserting "in lieu of former taxation" the following item: "On buffalo robes ten per cent. ad valorem."

Yours truly, JAMES W. TAYLOR.

HON A. RAMSEY.

Mr. CLARK. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. It is striking the duty down from twenty per cent. to ten per cent. in the interest of some traders along the line. I do not think this is the time, without more consideration that this, to take off the duty.

Mr. RAMSEY. Mr. President, this amendment is essential to the trade in robes in the Northwest. A large number of robes are "made" annually on the plains of Dakota and the country north and west of the Red river. These robes are "made" by the free men living within the region of the Hudson's Bay Company, on their annual hunts into our territories. They are carried back into their own regions, and unless we allow them, by a reduction of duty from twenty to ten per cent., to ship them to St. Paul, will be sold to the Hudson's Bay Company, and either sent in bond to Canada or England over the routes through our country, or shipped directly by the way of York Factory to England. Good sense, Mr. President, dictates the amendment I suggest, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, and I hope Senators will vote upon it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope it will be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes twelve, noes not counted.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to strike out lines eleven and twelve, section two, in the following words:

On spun silk for filling in skeins or cops, ten per cent. ad valorem.

This subject was considerably discussed when we had the tariff bill before Congress last year, and it was finally settled that a duty of twenty-five per cent. should be imposed upon this article. It was too much, quite too much; and it has operated severely upon some infant manufactories of this article. There are in the State I represent some manufactories engaged in importing this article and manufacturing it into handkerchiefs, silk linings, and articles of that kind; and it is as much as they can do to sustain themselves paying a duty on the raw article of twenty-five per cent. This section proposes to add ten per cent. to that, which will ruin them.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest to the Senator from New York, in order to save time, I am willing that shall be struck out, as it is not a matter of great importance, and let it go to the committee of conference.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to add that it is of very little consequence to the Government, but of a great deal of consequence to these little manufactories in my State.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARWELL. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a proviso at the end of the fourth section:

Provided further, That no ship, vessel, or steamer having a license to trade between different districts of the United States, or to carry on the bank, whale, or other fisheries, or any ship, vessel, or steamer, to or from any port or place in Mexico to the British provinces of North America, or any of the West India islands, or in all these trades, shall be required to pay the tonnage duty contemplated by this act more than once a year.

If the Senator from New Hampshire has any objection to this amendment I will state—

Mr. CLARK. Oh, yes, I have objection to it.

Mr. FARWELL. Then I will state the reason for it. It was evidently contemplated by the act to which this proviso applies that these vessels should not pay but once a year. I consulted the collector of Portland on the subject—

Mr. CLARK. Perhaps I do not understand the amendment in full. I thought it was an absolute exception. If it is not I will not object to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to understand it myself. I suppose it is necessary that somebody else should understand it as well as the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FARWELL. The provision in the old law is that vessels in the coasting trade shall pay once a year where they run to the West Indies and British provinces. Foreign vessels pay when they arrive in port; but it was provided that these vessels running back and forth should pay but once a year; and it is so with English vessels now. The old law was so construed as to make a discrimination whereby our vessels have been obliged to pay twice a year if they went to British provinces, and the provincial vessels paid but once. This proviso simply puts them on an equal footing; we pay the same as they do, once a year. The law was so construed by nearly all the collectors; but the collector of New York construed it so as to entitle him to collect twice from our vessels, and that construction was finally adopted all over the country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARWELL. I wish to offer one other amendment, to come in at the end of the second section:

On ships' chains, of not less than five-eighth inch wire, one cent per pound.

I will state very briefly the reason why I offer this amendment. I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate upon it, although I think measures of this very great importance ought not to be passed without consideration. In my judgment, it would be a blessing to the country if the tax bill and the appropriation bills could go over and an extra session of Congress could be had to consider them. I regard this practice of bringing in these bills at the very end of the session, the most important, and in fact the only important business of Congress coming in within the last two days of the session, when no member has a chance to examine them, and if he does examine them and understands the matters contained in them fully, he does not feel at liberty to explain them—

Mr. CLARK. I will not object to the amendment if the Senator will let it go on without debate.

Mr. FARWELL. I believe it is right. There are none of these chains made in this country.

Mr. CLARK. Is it to exempt them?

Mr. FARWELL. No, sir; but to put the duty at one cent per pound.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is it now?

Mr. FARWELL. Two cents and a half, and one cent on the iron. There is not a single chain made in this country. I am not aware that there has been even any attempt at making them for the last ten or fifteen years. There never was but one establishment that attempted to make ship chains.

Mr. CLARK. The objection to it is, that if they are not made in this country and we strike down the tax, we thereby lose revenue.

Mr. FARWELL. I was just about to say that that idea is not correct. It is a great saving to a man who has built a ship anywhere in New England to hire a steamboat and tow her down to St. John, New Brunswick, and there put on her chains and anchor and duck; and it is now being done. The merchants of Maine and Massachusetts to-day are building ships down upon the other side of the line to get rid of these enormous taxes. This tax is not necessary to protect any of the manufacturers of this country, because, as I have said, ship chains are not manufactured in this country. There never has been for thirty years but one manufactory in this country, to my knowledge, that ever attempted to make a chain; and I think they gave it up ten or fourteen years ago. I have no doubt the Government will get as much duty at this rate as they will at the other.

Mr. CLARK. I do not think this amendment is right, and I desire a vote of the Senate upon it. As I understand it now, the present duty upon that class of chains is two and a half cents a pound. The Senator proposes to strike it down to one cent per pound. The ships that are now built, when going on foreign voyages, generally go to Liverpool, England, and get their chains, and they go to other places where they can be had. They are not made in this country; but still some are imported; and when they are imported they pay a duty of two and a half cents a pound. The Senator proposes that that duty shall be stricken down to one cent. If that is done these ships will still go abroad as much as formerly to get their chains; but on those imported we shall only get one cent a pound.

Then, again, if we take off the duty we prevent anybody here from ever manufacturing these chains. They are not manufactured in this country now; but under the duty imposed somebody may be induced to manufacture them, and thus give employment to our own labor.

Mr. FARWELL. If that were likely to be done I think it would have been done before now, when labor was cheap; but it has not been done; and when the experiment was tried it was abandoned. The Senator is entirely wrong about this matter. Our ships are unable to go abroad and buy their chains and anchors.

Mr. CLARK. They go abroad and buy many of their chains.

Mr. FARWELL. They must have a chain and anchor before they go, unless they go in tow of a steamer. An anchor is of no use without a chain.

Mr. CLARK. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. FARWELL. Go to sea without an anchor and without a chain!

Mr. CLARK. Oftentimes with a cable. I have known it done repeatedly.

Mr. FARWELL. The fact is, the only place to get these chains is at the provinces. Now, take the case of a vessel going down to St. John. If she can buy her chains in Boston or New York by paying only one cent a pound more, which would amount to eight or nine hundred dollars, she will buy them there; but if you are going to make her pay twenty-five hundred dollars more for her chains in Boston or New York than she can buy them for in St. John, she will hire a tug-boat, and go without chains and anchors and be towed to St. John, run alongside the wharf, and buy her chains and anchors there, and then the Government will get no duty; whereas we might, and probably would, get the duty of one cent a pound if it was imposed. We have just raised the tonnage duty on vessels from ten to twenty cents a ton, which will give at least three or four hundred thousand dollars revenue to the Government. I believe that to be right; and if the committee will put it at fifty cents a ton and strike out all these little annoying, petty charges that are being collected by these internal revenue folks, and let the fifty cents per ton be paid upon the arrival of the ship from the foreign port right into the custom-house, where it would cost the Government nothing to collect, where it would come in a gross sum, with no assessors, no collectors, no charge anywhere, then they would be acting like men who know something about this kind of business. The custom-houses have the charge of ships. A ship cannot move without its being known at the custom-house. She cannot go from one port to another without going to the custom-house and getting a permit to go. She can escape no portion of the charges that are provided to be collected there. But if it is left to these assessors, it will depend upon whether they attend to their duties or not whether we get the sum assessed.

Mr. CLARK. That question is not before the Senate now.

Mr. FARWELL. I know it is not; but it is proper perhaps for me to say that the committee have increased the tax on vessels by raising it from twenty to thirty cents a ton, and to allude to that as a reason why you can afford to take off this tax from the chains when it does not interfere with any manufacture in this country, and is a direct tax upon this class of property.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FARWELL. I should like to have a division upon it. I believe it is right. It is the only amendment that I propose to offer.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLARK. A division will accomplish the object of securing a quorum, if Senators will vote.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 12.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to strike out lines thirteen and fourteen, on page 2 of the bill, in the following words:

On iron bars for railroads or inclined planes, ten cents per one hundred pounds.

I only wish to say that the bill as it came from the House put an additional duty of fifteen cents per hundred pounds on railroad iron and iron of that character. The Senate committee have reduced it to ten cents. That is an addition to the duty already imposed. I think the duty should be stricken out entirely. I say so for three reasons. Perhaps one good reason is sufficient; but there are two or three reasons why I think it should be stricken out.

In the first place, the present duty is sixty cents per hundred pounds in gold. That is equal to some thirteen dollars per ton in gold. If the amendment as it came from the House prevails, those who import iron will have to pay sixteen dollars a ton in gold. This large tariff is not necessary for the protection of the American mills. It is sufficient, perhaps, on that point to say that the American mills during the last summer were running to their utmost capacity, and manufactured three hundred and fifty thousand tons of American iron, which was not more than was necessary to repair the old roads; but they have been able to make a dividend among themselves of one hundred per cent. It is the most profitable manufacturing in this country. They do not need a further protection of fifteen cents or ten cents per hundred pounds. If the American manufacturers needed it for their support I would give it to them. I prefer my own country and my own people to any other country or people. But, sir, the present tax of sixty cents per hundred pounds, which is equal in our currency to $1 20 per hundred pounds, is such a protection to iron manufacturing in this country that it almost entirely excludes the importation of foreign iron. There has been within the last year but very little imported. If this rebellion is to be suppressed, as I hope in God it soon will be, all the railroads in the country must be repaired, and especially in the southern country. Five hundred thousand tons will not more than repair the railroads of the country that have been wasted and destroyed by the exigencies of this war, and the American manufacturers cannot produce that amount in a year; they have not the capacity to do it. It would take them three years to put up the mills and get the machinery running to enable them to make that amount of iron in a year.

If we leave the duty as it now is, at sixty cents per hundred pounds, it almost amounts to prohibition, as one dollar of gold is worth two of currency; but if we increase it to seventy cents it will be quite that. I know the Senator from New Hampshire and the Finance Committee are after revenue, with what protection they can give incidentally; but if you look at the returns you will see what the duty of sixty cents per hundred pounds in gold has done this year. There has been almost nothing imported, except what was under old contracts made before our currency became inflated. There were some contracts that had to be fulfilled; and that iron has come over this year; but no new contracts have been made. If you put ten cents more in gold upon iron you will get none imported, unless the companies are obliged from some overruling necessity to have iron, and consequently have to go abroad and pay a price such as never was paid before, higher than has ever been paid in this country for railroad iron. You cannot buy iron in New York to-day short of $110 a ton, and that is the lowest. We used to pay forty dollars per ton for it. If you lay this additional duty upon it now, reduced to currency, it will be equal to what we used to pay for the iron itself.

For these reasons, in view of the great demand there must be for this article during the next two or three years, in view of the fact that we cannot import it, as the tariff now stands, at sixty cents per hundred pounds, I ask to have this clause stricken out and let the law stand as it is. I know very well that we have imposed a tax of ten cents per hundred pounds on the American manufacturer by the tax bill, but that is no excuse why we should add ten cents on the hundred pounds upon the foreign importation; because the American manufacturer can make the iron and pay that tax, and still have a profit of seventy-five per cent. on his capital, the largest percentage that any manufacturer can make in this country.

Mr. CLARK. I will ask the attention of Senators to this point for a few moments. This was one of the points to which I alluded where an increase of duty was made necessary by the additional internal revenue duty. At the last session the House of Representatives fixed the tax upon railroad iron at eighty cents per hundred pounds. The bill came to the Senate, and the Committee on Finance struck it down to seventy cents. It had previously been sixty cents per hundred pounds; and while we were increasing the duty upon almost every other foreign article, by the action of the House and the Senate the duty upon railroad iron was retained at sixty cents per hundred pounds, and was not increased. At this session we have increased the internal duty to be paid upon this class of manufacture one fifth. Formerly it paid five per cent., but now, by the action of the tax bill, should it become a law, they will be compelled to pay six. The Senate committee only desire that you should put a corresponding duty upon the foreign article with that that you put upon your domestic article. The mills have been running for the past year in the country upon that basis; and I submit to Senators whether it would be fair and right to the producers and just to the country to increase the duty on your own product, and still let it be the same upon the foreign product.

Mr. President, from the best information that the committee had there have been imported into the country during the past year of foreign iron about one hundred and eighty-five thousand tons; and that information comes to the committee from people who are opposed to this increase, from railroad men who desire to have this importation as the law now stands, for the purposes of their own roads. The committee thought it to be right that we should impose this additional duty. We thought the House had got it a little too high, and therefore struck it down one third, and propose to leave it at ten cents per hundred pounds additional. It is a duty, let me say, which many of the roads can well afford to pay; and I do not think, while we are so generous to many roads in the West, and they are the main roads now being built, in giving them the land for the building of their roads, they should ask us to deprive the country of the revenue necessary to support the Government.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator will allow me to remind him of the fact that the roads to which he alludes are obliged to use the iron of American manufacture. I am not speaking for any roads in the West.

Mr. CLARK. They have all had subsidies from Congress.

Mr. POMEROY. Some of them have had.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator understands very well that if you allow the foreign article to come in and compete with American iron it strikes down the American iron necessarily. They must go up or down together. If there is an importation going on, and if the roads take foreign iron and use it at a less price, the American production will go down to an equality with the foreign article. Such are the laws of trade.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether it is the sense of the committee that this additional duty is necessary as a measure of protection to the home manufacturers of iron?

Mr. CLARK. The committee were of the opinion that it would not be safe to impose a lower duty. While some portion of the committee wanted the higher duty which the House had laid upon the article, the majority of the committee, if I may be permitted to speak of the doings of the committee, were for putting it at ten cents.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator will allow me to ask him a question: were the committee informed that a great many of these iron manufacturers had already been stricken down in this country?

Mr. CLARK. No; we had no such information. We understood the business had been a prosperous business; and we were rejoiced that it had been a prosperous business.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator spoke of the liability of these manufacturers of railroad iron being stricken down.

Mr. CLARK. If the tax is removed on the foreign article, and you tax them on the domestic product, they would be stricken down; but as it is now they are not stricken down.

Mr. GRIMES. Is there any liability of their being stricken down if there is no increase in the tariff?

Mr. CLARK. The committee thought there might be an injury.

Mr. GRIMES. So as to stop their establishments?

Mr. CLARK. We cannot say whether their establishments will be compelled to stop or not. Some might stop and some might not stop. It would depend somewhat on the skill with which they were managed. But the committee rejoiced, and I think the country will rejoice, to know that this kind of manufacture is profitable with other classes of manufacture; and I think the more prosperous it is, within a certain range, the more the prosperity of the country will be increased. It is desirable for us that this manufacture should increase by the profit of the business until we can manufacture all our iron in this country. It is plain now that we cannot manufacture as much as we want. Why not let us go on increasing the manufacture in our own country by keeping this duty on the foreign article until we can take the ore from our own soil and employ our own labor to make it into iron and to roll it for the purposes of the railroad, and use all our own product.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator certainly must be aware of the fact that we have not during the last year imported fifty thousand tons.

Mr. CLARK. One hundred and eighty thousand tons.

Mr. POMEROY. A little less than fifty thousand. I quote from the Railroad Journal, published in New York.

Mr. CLARK. My information is quite as good as the Railroad Journal.

Mr. JOHNSON. Where does the honorable member get his information?

Mr. CLARK. I get it from railroad men, who are engaged in importing this iron.

Mr. JOHNSON. Manufacturers?

Mr. CLARK. No, sir; importers, and men who want to import it.

Mr. POMEROY. Has anybody published such a statement?

Mr. CLARK. I do not know that it has been published. I do not know that it would be any more true if it were.

Mr. POMEROY. They would not be likely to publish what was not true.

Mr. CLARK. They publish a great many things that are not true, for the very purpose of gaining their own ends.

Mr. POMEROY. The fact is, that according to the statistics of New York, we have imported less than fifty thousand tons; and that was on old contracts. The reason why we cannot import under the law as it now is, is because we have to pay not only in gold for the iron, but the exchange is eight or ten per cent. above gold; and then the tariff.

Mr. CLARK. The committee took into consideration the fact that this duty was paid in gold when they struck it down from fifteen to ten cents; and I think the information we have before the committee on the subject of importation, if the Senator will allow me to say it, is quite as reliable as the information he has got. Can the Senator tell me whether that journal is in the interest of the importer or the manufacturer? Does he know anything about the character of the men who publish it, or who make it up?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir; I know them very well. This information is taken from the statistics of the Board of Trade of New York city, from the custom-house returns in New York.

Mr. CLARK. But even if I were to admit that to be true, are all the importations made at the custom-house in New York?

Mr. POMEROY. I ask the Senator where else has iron been received from Europe except at New York?

Mr. CLARK. I have no information on that point; I have not traced it out; but I have the information of the men that I know, men of intelligence, men operating in this very business, whose interest it is to have the railroad iron come in with a low duty, and to import as largely as possible, and they said that amount of tons had been imported.

Mr. POMEROY. One hundred and eighty thousand?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir, one hundred and seventy-five or one hundred and eighty thousand.

Now, Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate any longer, because time is precious at this period of the session; but I hope that this duty will not be reduced. Let me say one word in addition. We have been manufacturing now very successfully in all departments of our manufactures for two or three years; but, in my judgment, as this rebellion goes down and prices fall, the manufacturers are to have a harder time than they have seen for years, and it is necessary for you to stand by the protection you give them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This subject, I recollect, was very fully discussed at the last session of Congress in the Senate, and the decision of the Senate was that sixty cents was quite a sufficient tax to be imposed upon railroad iron, in view of the great importance of the construction of railroads in the country, and especially in view of the policy of the United States, which is to encourage the construction of railroads in the Northwest and in the West. With one hand we grant lands to aid the States in the construction of important lines of railway, and with the other hand we undertake to make the railroad iron cost these very States and companies a largely increased price; and in the very law in which you make the grant of the lands to these States you require the completion of the road within a limited time. I concede that Congress has been liberal in extending the time. But, sir, it seems to me the decision of the Senate at the last session was a wise one, that we would not in one direction encourage an enterprise and in another direction embarrass it.

I am very glad the Senator from New Hampshire has made the speech which he has just concluded. When this bill was called up I felt it to be my duty to ask him, as the representative of the committee urging the passage of the bill, why it was proper at this late hour of the session, when it was impossible for us outsiders to understand the bill, to urge the passage of so important a measure. His reply was, and the only answer that he gave so far as I now recollect was, that the passage of the internal revenue bill had made a modification of the tariff law necessary. I intended to ask him during the course of the debate to illustrate that proposition of his by reference to particular provisions in this bill. He has now done it. He says this tax on railroad iron is one of the taxes made necessary by the internal revenue law. How does that stand? By the internal revenue law, I understand, we have increased the tax upon the manufacturer of railroad iron one per cent. We have carried it up from five to six per cent. upon his production; and that is an increased tax of one per cent. in the currency of the country. To meet that, to compensate the manufacturer for his one per cent., we provide in this bill to add ten cents in gold, twenty cents in paper, upon every hundred pounds of railroad iron that is imported. I understand this bill now, sir; and I ask western Senators to understand it too. The manufacturer intends, through this bill, to compensate himself for the increased tax of one half per cent. in gold by an increase upon the imported article of twenty cents in paper upon every hundred pounds of railroad iron.

I do not know whether it is profitable to discuss this bill at all. I presume the power that brings it before the body can carry it through; but I wish Senators to understand what compensation to the manufacturer the Senator from New Hampshire says this bill intends to provide; and then, if eastern Senators who represent large manufacturing interests, think this is fair to western interests, and if western Senators are willing to agree to it, all well.

The Senator says that this particular item is an illustration of the policy of the bill. One half of one per cent. in gold is the increase upon the home manufacturer, and the compensation is ten cents in gold for every hundred pounds of railroad iron that is brought into the country. What the Senator from Kansas has stated upon the authority of a high journal of the country shows that the tax already imposed upon railroad iron brought in is a prohibitory law substantially. During the last year less than fifty thousand tons have been imported; so that our railroad companies are at the mercy of the manufacturers in this country.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, since making that statement I have conversed with the gentleman who compiled the information from the statistics of New York—as reliable a man as there is in the country—and he says the importation last year was less than forty thousand tons.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Forty thousand tons brought in from abroad. As the Senator from Kansas informs me, that will construct about forty miles of railroad. The policy of the Senator from New Hampshire is to allow a foreign competition to the extent of furnishing railroad iron to build forty miles of railroad, and all the other railroad interests of the country are to be placed at the mercy of the manufacturers of this country. I do not question that these manufacturers are very fair dealers, high-minded gentlemen; but it is human nature to make whatever can be made out of legitimate trade. Does the Senator from New Hampshire say that this is a revenue measure? No Senator is more earnest in his appeals to the body to secure revenue; and yet, with a tariff that is prohibitory, or substantially so, upon this important article, he asks that it shall be made entirely so; that ten cents to the hundred pounds shall be added, in gold, upon every hundred pounds that are imported into the country. If sixty cents in gold, $1 20 in paper money, is substantially a prohibition, what will seventy cents in gold, $1 40 in paper, be under this prohibition? It will be entirely prohibitory, and no revenue will be the result. This legislation is not intended for revenue, I have a right to say—and I have a right to say it because the present law cuts off revenue—but is intended to enable the manufacturers in this country to tax the enterprise of the Northwest at their pleasure. No money comes into the Treasury from this duty, but it goes into the coffers of the manufacturers. In a time like this, when we need revenue, when we need to build up the channels of commerce, to reconstruct them, when we ought to open up as far as possible all the northwestern and western country to a market, is it policy to tax that which is indispensable for these high purposes?

Mr. President, I am not in a condition to-day to discuss this bill, and regret very much that it is forced upon the Senate. I do not believe that the bill ought to pass; and especially do I not think this provision ought to pass. After a full discussion at the last session it was negatived; and now, upon the showing, it intends to make that which is substantially prohibitory entirely so.

Mr. CLARK. I have but a word or two in reply. I beg the Senator from Indiana, in the first place, to remember that we have both revenue from importations and revenue from manufactures. If you admit your foreign importation at a low rate of duty, possibly you may get more importation, but you strike down your domestic manufacture, from which you get your five per cent. You have got to adjust the one to the other, so as to get the largest amount of revenue, if you can, from both. When the manufacturers paid five per cent. duty on their manufactures, the tariff on railroad iron was sixty cents a pound. If you carry up the five per cent. to six per cent., you should make the tariff of sixty cents seventy-two cents to correspond; but in consideration of the fact that the duty on importation is paid in gold, we strike it down to seventy cents; and we simply desire to protect as well as tax. I assure the Senator we do not desire to take anything from the pockets of the Northwest. We in the East pay the taxation upon manufactures in the first instance, derived in a great extent from all the people; but I beg the Senator to remember that we are but one people. If we do not flourish at the East, they will not at the West. If they do not at the West we shall not at the East. Let us look at the whole thing, for the whole country, without any thought in our mind in favor of one against the other.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But one word in reply. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests that if we lose the duty upon the imported article we get it from the manufacturer in the production; but what is that? Six per cent., which would be perhaps forty-eight cents in paper upon one hundred pounds of railroad iron; while, under the existing tariff law, we would receive sixty cents in gold, one hundred and twenty cents in paper, upon the imported article. There is the difference as a financial measure.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator stop there? Does he think of all the people that are working upon the railroad iron made in this country, digging the ore, working it into iron, and rolling it, who wear and consume a dozen articles that are taxed? It is a very narrow view to confine it as he does. There are a thousand rills that run into this Treasury of ours. Otherwise it will not be filled.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand the force of the Senator's argument when he says that the field must be cleared of competition, that the manufacturer in this country may make larger gains; but he is representing this as a financial measure.

Mr. CLARK. I have not said that the field must be cleared. I said that one must be adjusted

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY F. & J. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865.

NEW SERIES.....No. 85.

to the other, so as to give the greatest amount of revenue with a proper protection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. He does not say it must not be cleared. Under the existing law but enough railroad iron comes into the country to construct forty miles of road, and that duty is not enough for him, but he must increase it ten cents in gold, twenty cents in paper, upon every hundred pounds of iron. Does he not intend to clear the field of competition by this legislation? He does not intend to secure revenue. He cannot say so upon the figures that are before the country. It is not for revenue.

And now the Senator asks me to bear in mind the condition of the laborers in the production of iron. I hope not to forget them; but I think when they have a protection of $1 20 on every hundred pounds of iron, that is protection enough. The Senator does not ask that there shall be a prohibition, but that the tax shall be so adjusted as that there shall be prosperity in both branches of the trade, in the importation and in the manufacture. I concede that; let that be so; and if the Senator had brought such a bill here I would not seriously object to it. But when the Senator asks me to bear in mind the laborer of the eastern States, I ask him to bear in mind the interests of the farmers of the Northwest, the great region that is now being developed, the section of country that has added so much to the Army and so much to the material power of the country in this great controversy. We have a mighty country to open, and it cannot be done by wagon roads. We must have railroads. They are indispensable. We wish to see these railroads extend far out into Minnesota through Kansas, and thence on to the mountains, and connect the eastern and western portions of our Republic. We wish to do this. It is a great and overshadowing interest, not to be compared, in my judgment, in its importance, with the interests of the local manufacturing concerns.

I do not want to detain the Senate longer on this question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am really very much astonished at my friend from Indiana that he should be making any opposition to this proposition; and I am astonished that my friend from Kansas is making any opposition whatever to it. Suppose we put the additional ten cents upon railroad iron, is it anything to compare with the tax that you have put on other manufactures of iron? Why, Mr. President, in 1861 you had a low tariff, comparatively, on all articles. Since that time you levied an ad valorem duty of three per cent. upon your own manufactures of iron; and in order to protect the home manufacturer against competition you increased the tariff about twenty-five or thirty per cent. You then raised the internal tax to five per cent. ad valorem, and you increased the tariff from twenty to thirty per cent. more. Now you put up the internal duty one cent. and you propose to go on "equalizing" it as far as you can; and so the work goes on. It is a system that will continue to go on as long as we continue the present financial system of the Government; and gentlemen ought not to complain. Just so long as they sustain that system, just so long will this thing continue. They are complaining about a tax of seventy cents on the hundred pounds of railroad iron. Why complain about it? It is the cheapest tax there is on iron.

Mr. POMEROY. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HENDERSON. I say it is the cheapest tax on railroad iron. Gentlemen feel this tax because they want to complete railroads. They feel it more sensibly; and why? Because they feel interested in it. They can see the tax when imposed on railroad iron, because they feel interested in the extension and completion of lines of railroads; and when they have to pay the exorbitant price for iron manufactured in this country they then cry out against it. What are they paying on bar iron, rolled or hammered? One hundred cents per hundred pounds, one cent a pound. What are they paying on boiler or other plate iron? One and a quarter cent per pound. What are they paying on iron wire, bright, coppered, or tinned? Two cents per pound. On iron wire, bright, coppered, or tinned, over No. 16 and not over No. 25, wire gauge, they pay three and a half cents per pound. On wire covered with silk or cotton they pay seven cents per pound; on the second grade of the same article eight and a half cents, and on the third grade nine cents per pound; and yet the Senator complains of the duty on railroad iron. Why should he complain? He does not see or feel what he is paying upon all other articles of iron. Upon sheet iron he pays $1 25 per hundred pounds. Upon band, hoop, and scroll iron he pays three cents per pound; that is three dollars on every hundred pounds. The gentleman does not feel that. He has not looked into that.

The same thing is true in regard to every article manufactured in this country. You increase the currency of the country in order to enable the people to pay their expenses. You levy an impost and excise tax, and then you increase the currency in order to enable the people to pay it. If you increase the necessity, it becomes absolutely essential—and I am bound to vote for it; everybody is bound to vote for it—to increase the tariff. The increase of the tariff makes it necessary to increase the currency; and so we go on. I hope we shall get to the end after awhile.

The Senator is complaining and making a fuss about this thing. Last year, according to the returns of the Department, the manufacturers of iron in this country paid only $3,202,000, and the little unimportant article of manufactured tobacco in this country paid upward of eight millions. But a little over three millions was received from every article of iron manufactured in this country; that is, the excise duty. So it is in regard to various manufactures of other articles to which I might refer. All the woolen manufactures in this country paid only $3,655,000; and all the cotton manufactures in this country, including all articles not specifically named in the excise act, only paid $6,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foot in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CLARK. Since I addressed the Senate on this subject there has been put into my hands a letter which I will read, by the indulgence of the Senate. It is from the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, March 1, 1865.

SIR: In my report of December 1, 1864, I have said, "The American manufacturer is now suffering from the reduction of the customs duty, and although he is not yet virtually injured, he owes his protection less to the sufficiency of that duty than to the difference between currency and the high rate of exchange."

In my opinion the iron interest is in imminent danger at this moment of being vitally injured. The price of gold is falling and the rate of exchange is constantly fluctuating. Some further protection to the manufacturer appears to me to be absolutely necessary. If it is not rendered, our internal revenue from that source, and also from collateral sources, will be severely affected. I trust that you will be able to satisfy the friends of the Administration in Congress of the importance of an increase of duties as a measure of protection. Our manufacturers can supply the market, and the competition among them will bring down the prices to the proper level.

Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH J. LEWIS.
Mr. ROBERT H. LAMBORN,
Secretary of American Iron and Steel Association.

Mr. JOHNSON. It gives no facts. It is a mere opinion.

Mr. CLARK. I have read the whole letter.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have watched this subject somewhat carefully, and I have very nearly learned, and think I almost know, that the persons employed in the iron works of Pennsylvania are the best paid laborers in the United States.

Mr. GRIMES. Better than the gold diggers of California.

Mr. McDUGALL. A comparison cannot be made between them and the gold diggers. The gold diggers get well paid once in awhile, but they get good pay all the time. It is said the iron interest in Pennsylvania is the most prosperous interest in the country, and it has been demonstrated substantially, in my judgment. Indeed they have had favors beyond where favors should be asked or sought for. They have had more than is necessary to develop all their interests, and they are trying to outdo all other interests and make themselves the interest of the country. I do not object to it much, because I am a sort of a Swedenborgian sometimes and believe in the iron age. I like to have iron produced as plentiful as possible; but it is not required that this interest should be made to go in advance of all interests; for I am well assured that the laborers in the iron mines of Pennsylvania are better paid than the laborers in any other part of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to amend this clause before the vote is taken on striking out. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "five." I think that will make it just about right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest as a question of order to the Senator from Massachusetts that an amendment having already been agreed to to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten," the proposition cannot be reached in order except in the Senate after the bill shall have been reported. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas striking out the clause.

Mr. JOHNSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Stewart, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Howard, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Conness, Cowan, Harding, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Willey—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am instructed by the Committee on Manufactures to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That flax and hemp machinery and steam agricultural machinery, as designated in section twenty-one of the "Act to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, may be imported free of duty for one year from the passage of this act.

The twenty-first section of the act alluded to in the amendment will be found on page 227 of the Laws of the last session, and is in these words:

That during the period of one year from the passage of this act there may be imported into the United States, free of duty, any machinery designed for and adapted to the manufacture of woven fabric from the fiber of flax or hemp, including all the preliminary processes requisite therefor; and that steam agricultural machinery and implements may be imported free from duty for one year from the passage of this act.

That act was approved on the 30th of last June, and by its own limitation this section will expire on the 30th of the coming June. The amendment that I have offered extends the operation of that section about seven months longer. The reason for the extension is this: in consequence of the large orders that have been sent to England for the manufacture of this kind of machinery those who ordered the machinery have been unable to obtain the assent of the manufacturers to deliver it within the time prescribed in the twenty-first section of the act of last year. As I understand, they paid down, on giving the order, one third the contract price, and they are unable to withdraw those contracts. The loss to them will be the amount of duty imposed on this machinery under the provisions of this act. The amendment only applies to orders that have been given under this twenty-first section. Those who ordered the machinery were induced to do so in consequence of the passage of that section. The position in which they are now placed demands this legislation, and the Committee on Manufactures have, therefore, directed me to report the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the amendment will not prevail. I do not see any reason for extending the provisions of the act. The bill now under consideration does not touch the provision of the old law in that particular.

Mr. ANTHONY. It expires in six months.

Mr. CLARK. I know; and the bill does not shorten it at all. One year was the time given in the original act. I do not desire to discuss it, but—

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is a small matter; let it go.

Mr. CLARK. It may not be a small matter. It may open the door to a great many frauds. We do not know when the orders may be given, or anything about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June next, the rate of duty on all and each kind of tea, coffee, sugar, and molasses thereafter imported into the United States shall be reduced one half on the rate of duty then imposed by law on each and every kind of tea, coffee, sugar, and molasses, respectively; this reduction to be computed in the same medium in which such duties are collectable.

The articles enumerated in this amendment, upon which it is proposed by it to reduce the duty, with the exception of a small amount of sugar, are not produced in the United States. They, therefore, do not enter into competition with American labor, except as to the extent of the small amount of sugar that is produced in our country; and if this reduction should be made, it would still leave an amount of duty amply sufficient to protect the sugar planter.

All the articles named in the amendment have become articles of prime necessity with the American people. There is scarcely a man or a woman in the United States but what is interested in this proposition. The duties are now collectable upon these several articles, as on all others imported, in gold and silver. The proposition is that the reduction shall be one half in gold and silver of the rates respectively upon every description of the four classes of articles there named. That would be a relief to the whole of the American people. It would enable every consumer of those important and prime articles of necessity to purchase them at one half or less of the present cost.

It may be said, and said truly, that this amendment would interfere essentially with our financial system, and would reduce the produce of our revenue. True, sir; but it would add vastly to the comfort and convenience of the mass of the American people. That reduction will place within the reach of many men and women of the country the purchase and use of those articles of necessity, who will be excluded from their use by the increased duty. I think, in view not of the comfort only, but of the subsistence and of the necessities of the people, that this amendment should prevail, and that the vast masses of our countrymen should have the full benefit of the reduction of the duties upon the articles specified in the amendment according to its terms.

The siren cry that American labor must be protected, which I concede, and of which I have always been an advocate, is not affected by this proposition. I am for protecting the labor of my countrymen. Labor is at the foundation of all national prosperity. All the wealth, all the progress, and all the civilization of the world are based upon labor. If there is anything that I honor, revere, and wish to protect, it is labor and the laborer; and it is because of my devotion to labor and to the laborer that I want this proposition to prevail. Instead of coming into competition with our labor and our laborers, if it shall prevail it will greatly alleviate the condition and add to the means of our laborers, by giving them at greatly reduced rates the essential necessities of life that are proposed by this amendment to be reduced in duty, and therefore the price of them will be brought down to a point where the humble, hard-fisted laborer, who toils from dawn until twilight will have an opportunity of using these prime and essential necessities of life.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THANKS TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. POWELL. I now offer a resolution which I am confident will meet with the ready and warm assent of every member of the Senate:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due, and they are hereby tendered, to Hon. HANNIBAL HAMLIN for the able, dignified, and impartial manner in which he has discharged the laborious duties of the Chair during the term in which he has presided over the deliberations of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) The Chair assumes it to be the pleasure of the Senate to consider this resolution at this time, and will put the question at once on its passage.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

PRIVILEGES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 710.

Mr. HALE. I must throw myself on the indulgence of the Senate to ask their attention at this time to what I believe to be a question of privilege. I will state my question, and the Chair can say whether it is a question of privilege or not. On the 3d of February the Senate, on my motion, unanimously passed a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information. The Secretary in answering it has transmitted a document of sixty-five manuscript pages from the Assistant Secretary, not responsive to the resolution, and not pretending to be responsive to the resolution. I will read the first page, that the Senate may see what it is:

"Hon. GIDEON WELLES:

"Sir: As part of your reply to the resolution of the Senate of February 3, 1864, in response to the allegations of Hon. JOHN P. HALE against me in advocating said resolution, I beg leave to submit the following statement."

And then he goes on to answer a speech which he says I made. My point is, that for the head of a Department to send us an answer to a speech made by a member of this body, to be printed at the public expense, neglecting the inquiry that is presented to him and not responsive to it, is a breach of the privileges of the Senate.

I do not wish to pursue the subject; but I submit this motion, that that part of the reply of the Secretary of the Navy which consists of Mr. Fox's statement in answer to a speech made by me is not responsive to the resolution of inquiry of the Senate, and that it be returned to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of the resolution of inquiry.

Mr. HOWE. The first question to be determined, I suppose, is whether this is a question of privilege. If it is not, I hope the Senator will allow the bill to which I have called attention to be passed, and then we can consider this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin was entitled to the floor, but the Chair understood from his silence that he yielded it for the time being to the Senator from New Hampshire on the latter stating that he rose to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOWE. I had submitted my motion. The Senator from New Hampshire then took the floor, and, as I understood, claimed to be heard on a question of privilege. It remains for the Chair to decide whether that is a question of privilege which takes precedence of the motion. The Senator will not press it, I presume, if it is not.

Mr. HALE. Certainly not, if it is not a question of privilege, but I think it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Even if it were in the judgment of the Chair a question of privilege, it is not of that character that it would displace a Senator on the floor upon a proposition already before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. This is the last day that I occupy a seat in the Senate. I have been here sixteen years; I have endeavored to treat all my associates in this body and all the officers of the Government with whom I have had anything to do, with courtesy, with kindness, and with respect. I do not want, on the last day of my official life in the Senate, to be insulted and have the whole Senate insulted in my person by such an irrelevant and impertinent communication as this. I think it ought to be sent back. I leave the matter with the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield the floor for the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly; if the Senator from New Hampshire puts it on the ground he has just stated I cannot stand in his way, although I am very anxious to have this bill considered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of the resolution of inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read, if it is in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I have it here, and I will read it.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to inform the Senate whether the argument of the judges advocate on the trial of Franklin W. Smith has been printed by order of the Navy Department, or any officer of that branch of the service, and whether the same has been done at the expense of the Treasury of the United States, how large an edition of the same has been published, and what use has been made of the copies thus published. Also, whether any commissioners, agents, or detectives have been employed by the said Navy Department, or any officer thereof, since January 1, 1864; if so, how many; what sum or sums have been paid them; what instructions were given to them verbally or in writing, either by the Secretary of the Navy or the Assistant Secretary, and especially whether any instructions were given to said detectives or agents, or either of them, by said Secretary or Assistant Secretary, or by any one else for them, or with the knowledge, advice, or consent of either of them, to inquire into the conduct or business transactions of any member of either House of Congress; and also how much expense has been incurred by such examinations, the particulars thereof, the fund from which they have been paid, and the law authorizing the same."

At this late hour of the session I do not want to take up the time of the Senate; I have stated to the Senate what this communication is. It does not purport to be an answer to the resolution, but purports to be a response by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy to a speech which I made when advocating the resolution. Being such, I think it is a breach of the privileges of the Senate and of the courtesy which should characterize official intercourse between the heads of Departments and the Senate, and I move that it be returned to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. JOHNSON. As far as the letter of the Assistant Secretary refers to what may have been said by the honorable member from New Hampshire in the Senate, it is clearly out of place; but I have not read the letter and do not know that it contains anything except a reference and an answer to what was said by the honorable member in debate. It seems to me, however, that the inquiry contained in the resolution authorized the Secretary to say what instructions were sent from the Department concerning the case to which the resolution of inquiry referred, and having no knowledge of it himself he put himself in a situation to answer it by calling on the Assistant Secretary of the Navy to inform him of the facts, and he has transmitted that information. So far, it seems to me, the information was called for by the inquiry. But whatever he may have stated in that letter—I repeat I have not seen the letter and do not know what is in it; but whatever he may have stated in it referring to the Senator's speech, as an attack on the Senator individually, is in my opinion entirely out of place and in violation of the courtesy due by the Department to the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. It is rather a painful task for a Senator here to interfere in a question of this kind, but for myself upon all occasions I follow instincts that guide me, and prefer that, as I understand it, justice and my duty shall be done. Now, sir, we are asked by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, upon a statement made by him that this is his last day in the Senate of the United States, an appeal that it is very difficult to resist, to send back a communication which has been presented to the Senate from the head of one of the Departments of this Government, because, as the Senator alleges, it contains a letter addressed by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Fox, to the Secretary of the Navy, in part responsive or at least intended by him to be responsive to attacks made upon him, and also to the matter contained in the resolution adopted by the Senate and addressed to the Secretary of the Navy. We have heard that resolution read. It directed the special attention of the Secretary of the Navy to the conduct of the Assistant Secretary. It named the Assistant Secretary. It involved his official acts. In addition to that, it is known to us all—and we should be just to the Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary, and to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire—that day after day the honorable Senator has availed himself of his prerogative in this body to assail that officer.

There has been no measure of personal assault as well as official attack that has not been made by him upon the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He has been denounced here on this floor as a "miserable midshipman." I ask if that was right. I ask if it was the courtesy due to a high public officer standing nearly at the head of a Department of this Government. I have no relations with that officer different from those which I have with the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, but when I have heard statements of that kind made here, with my knowledge of that gentleman, it was very difficult indeed for me to keep my seat and be silent.

When the line was subsidized by law for carrying the United States mails between the eastern Atlantic ports and the western Pacific ports of this country it was provided that the steamers should be commanded by officers of the Navy. Among those commissioned for that service were the late gallant and heroic Herndon, who was then a lieutenant, and G. V. Fox, of the Navy. Some of the ablest men that our public service in that branch of it contained were deputed by the Government to command those ships. Eleven years ago I traveled upon the steamer George Law, commanded then by Captain Fox, and I undertake to say here, from personal observation, without any intimacy with the gentleman, that so far as I could observe it, an abler, a more gentlemanly, and a better officer never trod the deck of a ship.

Sir, it is a pretty serious matter when a Senator of the United States avails himself, as I said before, of his high prerogative to denounce such a gentleman here daily in the manner that we have heard. In addition to that a resolution is adopted at the instance of the honorable Senator addressed to the Navy Department, not calling upon the Navy Department for information touching certain things, but instructing the Secretary of the Navy to tell the Senate what Mr. Fox did, and specifying several things. I have not the resolution now before me. In all human probability, with the greatest propriety the Secretary of the Navy addressed officially a letter to the Assistant Secretary—I do not know this, but I apprehend that upon inquiry we shall find it to be the case—asking the Assistant Secretary for information that the Secretary himself could not give, and that could only be given by the Assistant Secretary, thus indirectly addressed, and thus again and again, as I have described, assailed by the honorable Senator.

Now, Mr. President, what are we asked to do in the last hours of this session, as a matter of personal favor to the honorable Senator? I will go as far in a case of personal favor and regard to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire as to any Senator on this floor, but it pains me to sit here and hear an able man, a man who I undertake to say with deference to the judgment of the honorable Senator is distinguished in his capacity as a public officer, denounced day after day without a word being spoken in his defense. He has been compared to a fox. The honorable Senator has gratified and exercised his talent of invective and ridicule in that regard. And now we are asked to do, what? To relieve the Senator, as he asks and says, by insulting the head of one of the Departments of this Government! I am not satisfied that the honorable Senator and the Senate have been insulted in this communication, and for my part I cannot vote affirmatively upon his proposition until I am so satisfied; and above all, before I am so satisfied I cannot agree to send back by a vote of this body that communication to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and thus insult him.

Mr. WILSON. I move that this communication from the Secretary of the Navy be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of examining it to see whether it is liable to the objection which has been made.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to voting for this motion if any committee shall report that it is proper.

Mr. HALE. I am satisfied with the proposed reference.

Mr. CONNESS. In assenting to the proposition of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, I will simply say that if the Judiciary Committee or any other committee of this body shall recommend this or any other course to be taken, I will vote affirmatively.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object to the reference to the Judiciary Committee. It is manifest that a reference of this communication to the committee at this stage of the session will prevent any investigation of it. The committee is dissolved by the end of the session. I think that in the shape in which the resolution has been submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire it may be readily understood by all. The Senator from California thinks it proper to go into a defense of Mr. Fox—

Mr. CONNESS. I have not done that, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know, then, what the Senator would call a defense of another. He has pronounced a eulogy upon Captain Fox and spoken of him in high terms, and, so far as I know, in deserving terms. I have no attacks to make on Captain Fox or upon the head of the Navy Department. I have a high respect for both those gentlemen. But the proposition here is this: the Senator from New Hampshire says to the Senate that in answer to a resolution which has passed this body, and which has been read in the hearing of the Senate, there comes from the Department a reply to a speech made by him, and he reads to us a portion of the reply of the Secretary which purports to be in answer to a speech of the Senator from New Hampshire; I understand the Senator from New Hampshire, then, to move that so much of this communication as relates to a reply to his speech shall be returned. Is that the motion?

Mr. HALE. The letter of the Secretary of the Navy there is no objection to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. To the letter of the Secretary there is no objection; but it is only that part which is in reply to a speech of the Senator that is proposed to be returned. So far as that is concerned, it is a matter not between the Senator from New Hampshire and Captain Fox, with which the Senate of course would have nothing to do, but the question is, will the Senate of the United States allow an answer to one of its resolutions to be a reply to a speech of a Senator? That affects the privileges of the body. If when we pass a resolution of inquiry, an answer from anybody, instead of being a reply to our resolution, purports upon its face to be a reply to the speech of a Senator, will the Senate allow such answers to be made? I think clearly, upon that statement, such a reply is improper. I do not know what is in the reply, but so far as it undertakes to argue against or reply to a speech delivered in this body I think that it is an improper communication, and that the privileges of the body are improperly interfered with by such a reply, and so far as that is concerned I, for one, would be prepared to vote at once that no Department of the Government called upon for information could properly, in answering a resolution of inquiry, proceed to an argument or reply (as it is called in the communication) to the speech of a member of the body. There is no object in this question going to the Committee on the Judiciary. Of course they cannot consider it now.

Mr. COLLAMER. I think the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is perfectly proper, though I do not know whether the committee can report to-day or not. We can frequently draw from the analogies of legal proceedings. This is precisely the same case as frequently occurs in our courts of chancery. It is suggested that an answer has impertinent matter. By the word "impertinent" I mean in the legal sense, irrelevant matter, improper matter, which in law we call not pertinent to the question. It is suggested that this communication contains impertinent matter. Always on such occasions, when that is suggested to the court, they refer it to a master to ascertain and make report how much there is impertinent, and to strike out that part, if not the whole, and charge on the offending party the expense of getting it done. I think if we had a committee on privileges, we should at once refer it to them, but as we usually refer all cases which relate to privileges of the body to the Judiciary Committee I think this should go to the Judiciary Committee, and let us see how much of it they find to be impertinent to the resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The objection is on account of the stage of the session.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to submit whether there is not in this matter a constitutional question. The Constitution positively declares, with regard to Senators and Representatives, that "for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place." If the President himself should send a message to Congress criticising the speech of a Senator or Representative, or undertaking to answer any such speech, would that be recognized as a constitutional proceeding? I clearly think not; there can be no question with regard to it. And if the President cannot do it, if the head of a Department cannot do it, can an Assistant Secretary do it? There is the question.

Mr. WILSON. That is just what we want to find out.

Mr. COLLAMER. No gentleman denies but that it may contain impertinent matter, quite too much so. That is the very objection made, and that is the reason we want to refer it to a committee to ascertain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to refer.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of expenditures from the appropriations for contingencies of that Department, its offices and bureaus, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 27th of February, abstracts of the proposals for transporting military supplies from Fort Leavenworth westward, opened December 31, 1864, by Captain Henry C. Hodges, and all communications upon the subject; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of Charles A. Pitcher; and also that it had passed a bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of R. L. B. Clarke, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Darling;

A bill (H. R. No. 565) granting a pension to Rachel Mills, widow of Peter Mills, deceased, late a major in the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 697) further to provide for the verification of invoices;

A bill (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 758) amendatory of the acts relating to the Attorney General's office, and to fix the compensation of his assistant and clerks;

A bill (H. R. No. 764) to incorporate the Continental Hotel Company of the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. No. 775) for the relief of the occupants of the lands of the ex-mission of San José in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 779) regulating the taking of depositions in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. No. 791) granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor.

RAILROADS IN MICHIGAN AND WISCONSIN.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 710.

Mr. WILSON. I do not wish to oppose the Senator's motion; but there was a common understanding last night that after the tariff bill was passed to-day we should take up the report of the committee of conference on the Freedmen's Bureau bill. At the earnest pressure of the Senator from Wisconsin I will yield to this bill, hoping it will not take up much time.

Mr. HOWE. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 710) to extend the time for the completion of certain railroads to which land grants have been made, in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOWE. I beg leave to say that this bill is like others that have been passed, and perhaps if the amendments be read it will be sufficient, and the reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor.) The amendments only will be read, unless the reading of the bill be demanded by a Senator.

The Secretary read the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The first amendment was at the end of section two to insert as a proviso:

Provided, That none of the additional lands granted by this act for that portion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad, now completed, shall be certified to the State of Michigan by the terms hereof until the said railroad shall be completed from a point twenty miles west of Marquette to Ontonagon; and that none of the additional lands granted by this act for that portion of the railroad from Marquette to the Wisconsin State line at or near the mouth of the Menomonee river, now completed, shall be so certified until the said railroad shall be completed from Bay de Nequet to the said Wisconsin State line at or near the mouth of the Menomonee river aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four page 5, after line thirty-four, to strike out:

But not east of the range line dividing ranges twenty-six and twenty-seven, nor south of that portion of the township line dividing townships forty-seven and forty-eight that lies east of the dividing range line above described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fifth section, which is as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the term mineral lands, as used in a joint resolution "reserving mineral lands from the operation of all acts passed at the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, granting lands or extending the time of former grants," approved January 30, 1865, so far as the said resolution relates to the several grants of lands heretofore and herein made to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of certain railroads in the upper peninsula of said State, are hereby declared and defined to refer to and to mean such lands only as before the passage of said resolution have been reserved from sale in said State as mineral lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The report was concurred in.

CUSTOM-HOUSE FEES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow me to report and have passed two or three bills from the Committee on Commerce. The first is House bill No. 739, which I am directed to report back from the committee. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 739) to regulate the fees of custom-house officers on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States. In lieu of the fees now authorized by law to be collected by customs officers on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, it proposes to allow the collection of the following fees: for admeasurements of vessels, the fees prescribed by the act to regulate the admeasurement of tonnage of ships and vessels of the United States, approved May 6, 1864; certificates of registry, including bond, $2 25; indorsement on register, $1; certificate of enrollment, including bond on vessel of not exceeding fifty tons, $1; on vessel of above fifty and not exceeding one hundred and fifty tons, $1 50; on vessel of over one hundred and fifty tons, $2; license, including bond on vessel of not over one hundred and fifty tons, $1; on vessel of over one hundred and fifty tons, $1 50; indorsement on license of change of master, including master's oath, 50 cents; certifying manifest and granting clearance for a licensed vessel to go from district to district, on vessel of fifty tons or under, 25 cents; on vessel of over fifty tons, 50 cents; receiving certified manifest and granting permit to unlade on entry of a vessel from any other district, on vessel of fifty tons or under, 25 cents; on vessel of over fifty tons, $1; entry of a vessel from a foreign port, otherwise than by sea, if vessel of fifty tons or under, 50 cents; if of over fifty tons, $1; and the same fees for clearance of like vessels to foreign ports; receiving manifest of goods brought into the United States from foreign countries adjoining said frontiers by land vehicles, and permit to unlade the same, 25 cents; receiving manifest of baggage of passengers arriving from foreign countries adjoining the frontiers, including permit to unlade the same, 25 cents; granting permit to a vessel not belonging to a citizen of the United States to go from district to district, $2; and the same fee for receiving manifest and granting permit to unlade such vessel on arrival in a district from another district; entry of goods imported from any foreign port or place for consumption, warehousing, rewarehousing, transportation, or exportation entry, including official certificate or oath on entry or to invoice, 50 cents; and for every port entry, 40 cents; permit to land or deliver goods not above provided for, 25 cents; official bonds not herein provided for, each $1; debenture or other official certificate not herein provided for, 25 cents; bill of health, 25 cents; crew list, including bond, $1; protection, 50 cents; recording bills of sale, mortgage, hypothecations, or conveyances, 50 cents each, and certified copies thereof, 50 cents each; recording certificates for discharging and canceling such conveyances, 50 cents; copies thereof, 25 cents; certificate setting forth the names of the owners of a vessel, with their respective interest, and also the material facts of any existing bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation, or other incumbrance, the date and amount of such incumbrance, and the parties thereto, $1; but no bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation, conveyance, or discharge of mortgage or other incumbrance of any vessel shall be recorded unless it is duly acknowledged before a notary public or other officer authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MACKEREL FISHERIES.

Mr. CHANDLER. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 789) to extend the provisions of the first section of "An act for the government of persons in certain fisheries," approved June 19, 1813, have directed me to report it back and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. Its purpose is to extend the provisions of the first section of an act for the government of persons in certain fisheries, approved June 19, 1813, to the master or skipper and seamen of vessels of the burden of twenty tons or upward, qualified according to law for carrying on the mackerel fisheries, bound from a port in the United States to be employed in such fisheries, in the same way as if such fisheries had been embraced in that act; but the agreement named in that section is to be duly made, indorsed, and countersigned.

Mr. GRIMES. I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what are the provisions of the act of 1813, which this bill proposes to extend and apply.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certain provisions relative to the enlistment of men for the vessels. They enter into certain bonds. This extends the application of that law relative to cod fisheries to the mackerel fisheries.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know how far it extends the regulations with regard to the cod fisheries to the mackerel fisheries.

Mr. CHANDLER. Merely so far as relates to giving bonds. The committee investigated it very thoroughly. It is a House bill.

Mr. TEN EYCK. It merely permits certain young persons to be apprenticed who are in the mackerel fisheries, as well as those who are in the cod fisheries. It is a very small matter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of R. L. B. Clarke was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

WAR DEPARTMENT REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1865.

I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of War, which, with my permission, has been delayed until the present time, to enable the Lieutenant General to furnish his report.

A. LINCOLN.
Hon. HANNIBAL HAMLIN, President of the Senate.

The message was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Colonel William Gates;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution in relation to the public printing," approved June 23, 1860; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 180) for the relief of Lucretia M. Perry, widow of Nathaniel H. Perry, late purser in the United States Navy.

PAPER FOR PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives relative to the public printing. It will create no discussion.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution in relation to the public printing," approved June 23, 1860, was read three times, and passed. It proposes to allow the Superintendent of Public Printing to accept proposals for paper for three months, six months, or a year.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce have instructed me to report back the bill (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes." I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that there shall be designated and appointed, in the mode prescribed by law, two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and two local inspectors at the city of Galena, Illinois, with an annual compensation of $1,200 for the inspectors in New York, and $800 for the inspectors at Galena; and these inspectors are to perform the duties and be subject to the provisions of the steamboat act of August 30, 1852. The local board of inspectors at Wheeling is to be reestablished. In lieu of the fees for inspection prescribed by the sixth section of the act to create an additional supervising inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for the collection district of Memphis, Tennessee, and two local inspectors for the collection district of Oregon, and for other purposes, approved June 8, 1864, there is to be levied and paid for each steam vessel of one hundred tons or under, twenty-five dollars, and in addition thereto for each and every ton in excess of one hundred tons, five cents.

Mr. COLLAMER. From what committee is that reported?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COLLAMER. What is the occasion for it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer by sending to the Chair, to be read, a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary read the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 2, 1865.

Sir: The superintending inspector of steamboats informs me that there are now at his port (New York) more than three hundred steam vessels ready for inspection, which the present inspectors, though diligent and capable men, are unable to reach in the regular discharge of their duties.

A bill providing for two additional local inspectors at New York has passed the House, (as I am informed), and I think that the business of inspection as well as the interests of commerce at New York would be greatly facilitated if that bill could pass the Senate at its present session.

With great respect,

W. P. FESSENDEN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER, Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. COLLAMER. But how is it about Galena?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am informed by the Representative from Galena that it is very important that these men should be appointed for Galena.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move to strike out all of the bill except in regard to New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foot.) The Chair presumes the Senator means to strike out that portion relative to Galena.

Mr. COLLAMER. Yes, sir.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in line five, section one, after "New York" to strike out "and two local inspectors at the city of Galena in Illinois," and in lines eight and nine, to strike out "and $800 for the two local inspectors at the city of Galena, Illinois."

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not advised in regard to the necessity for these inspectors; but they are recommended by the board of steamboat inspectors, and likewise by the Secretary of the Treasury, and earnestly recommended by the Representative of that district, who is chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the other House. The committee of the Senate were satisfied the provision was necessary, and therefore recommended it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended by striking out the words, "and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois."

JOINT COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce have directed me to report back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to authorize the continuation of the Joint Committee on Commerce of the Senate and House of Representatives after the 4th day of March 1865, to complete their investigations and make their report on the subject of trade with the rebellious States. I ask for its consideration now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes that the Committee on Commerce on the part of the Senate and the Committee on Commerce on the part of the House, acting as a joint committee in the Thirty-Eighth Congress for the investigation of trade with the rebellious States, by virtue of the resolutions of the House of Representatives and the concurrent resolution of the Senate and House, shall be continued after the 4th of March, 1865, for the purpose of closing their investigations and making their report; and that the report when completed, together with the evidence taken, shall be filed with the Clerk of the House, and be printed. The chairman of either of the committees is to have power to issue subpoenas and compel the attendance of witnesses in the same manner as the Speaker of the House or President of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what is the necessity for the continuance of this committee of investigation. So far as I am concerned I am satisfied already that this trade with the rebellious States should cease. I understand that the House of Representatives have so expressed themselves by nearly a unanimous vote, and have sent a bill of that description to the Senate. I understand further that our Committee on Commerce have reached the same conclusion and reported favorably to that bill. I should like to inquire of the chairman where that bill is, and if he proposes to take it up this morning?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not, for the reason that it will lead to discussion, as I am informed by members of the Senate. I pledged myself that I would not take up a bill that would lead to discussion. If there is time I shall certainly bring that up.

Mr. GRIMES. So it seems that although the House of Representatives have expressed their wishes by almost a unanimous vote, and the Senate I am satisfied is strongly in favor of the bill, we are not to have an opportunity to vote upon it because the chairman of the committee will not bring it up for fear that somebody will oppose it!

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall try to bring it up before the close of the session.

Mr. GRIMES. Yet he proposes to continue the investigation of the committee to elicit the facts in regard to this bill which we are all in favor of!

Mr. CHANDLER. I will merely state this joint resolution is to continue a sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce of the two Houses.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to postpone the joint resolution under consideration and all other subjects, to take up the bill in regard to the cotton trade.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Colonel William Gates was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 180) for the relief of Lucretia M. Perry, widow of Nathaniel H. Perry, late purser United States Navy, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

INTERCOURSE WITH INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that the bill called up by the Senator from Iowa, or one to the same effect substantially, was recommended by the Committee on Commerce some time ago and is now on our table. The Secretary of the Treasury is of opinion that the bill should not pass. He informed me yesterday that he thought it would be very injurious to the interests of the Treasury and of the Government, and he is very much opposed to its passage. He said that there was a controversy between the Army and Navy and the Treasury Department. As I understand it, the Navy first commenced stealing cotton, and stole very largely—many million dollars' worth. Then the Army came in and seized cotton, and there came a controversy between the Army and the Navy; and finally we passed a law prohibiting both the Army and Navy from touching cotton, and placing this matter in the hands of the Treasury agents.

Mr. GRIMES. And the Treasury agents want a monopoly of stealing. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. One moment. I will come to that by and by.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foot.) The Chair will state that the bill is not on the Clerk's table.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the further consideration of the bill. I learn that it has not been reported back.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864. The bill contains a proviso that the repeal shall not affect any contract of sale provided for by the section repealed where actual delivery of the products has been made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was about to remark, when interrupted, that two years ago the Committee on Commerce introduced a bill prohibiting captures on our inland waters by the Navy of the United States. That bill failed to become a law. It was violently opposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs and by the representatives of the Navy upon this floor. Owing to the failure of that bill, many million dollars' worth of cotton were seized by the Navy and sold as prize, and as I am informed by the Secretary of the Treasury not one single dollar ever reached the Treasury of the United States in all this class of cases.

The eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864, which is now proposed to be repealed, is a section prohibiting, under pains and penalties of the severest kind, officers of the Army or Navy from touching cotton or the products of the southern States, under any circumstances whatever; and it placed the whole business of seizing and taking care of southern products, cotton, rice, tobacco, &c., in the hands of the Treasury agents. Under the old system the Navy was usually accompanied with wagons in order that it might seize all the cotton within a radius of from ten to fifteen miles as naval prize; and I am told that on the Red river expedition, naval wagon trains were the chief source of making naval captures. The boats which were detained above the Red river raft were so overloaded with cotton which had been seized as naval prize in the barns and storehouses within ten miles of that river that they could not pass the Red river bar. I am told that the commandant of the naval forces refused to lighten his vessels by throwing the cotton overboard; and after the flood carried away the raft, an engineer, a lieutenant colonel in one of our volunteer regiments, who had been engaged in the lumber business up in Wisconsin, finally devised another raft, and they got the vessels and most of the cotton off.

The very moment the law of July 2, 1864, came in force, there was a hue and cry raised, first by the Navy. I believe the Senator from Iowa introduced a bill this very winter authorizing the Navy to make prize anywhere within tide-water. It is tide-water right down here at our dock; it is tide-water one hundred miles up any of our great rivers and in some cases perhaps five hundred miles up our great rivers, and the Senator proposed to authorize the Navy to make naval prizes wherever the tide backed out; but under the law as it now exists the Navy can only make prize three miles off the coast. In other words they have got to chase a ship and seize her and her cargo before they can have it confiscated for the benefit of the officers of the Navy; but according to the old rule they could take teams anywhere within nine miles of where a ship could run.

This controversy has been going on between officers of the Army and Navy and the Treasury Department from that day to this. The very moment the Treasury agents began to seize the cotton and use it for the benefit of the Treasury the Navy raised a cry of stealing. They had done all the stealing before, and they objected to any sort of a division of the spoils; they wanted a monopoly. Now the Secretary of the Treasury informs me that all this hue and cry between the Army and Navy and the Treasury has been a sort of contest to see who shall steal, and he says there is no possible chance, there is no contingency under which, under the existing law, one single dollar can be plundered or stolen by a Treasury agent; and he tells me that if you repeal this law the stealing of cotton will go on as it did before, that the traffic is so profitable that there is no such thing as preventing it. You find rascals in the Navy and in the Army and everywhere; and the Treasury will be defrauded, and more injury will accrue than benefit.

This is the statement made to me yesterday by the Secretary of the Treasury, who will be a member of this body to-morrow at noon, and although the Committee on Commerce recommended the passage of the bill, upon consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and with others who are conversant with this whole subject, I am satisfied the bill ought not to be passed.

Mr. COLLAMER. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question or two. Does he understand how it is, by what authority, these licenses have been granted, some of which have been published, to persons to go and buy cotton who are not agents of the Government at all? By what law is that?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am informed that no such licenses have been issued.

Mr. COLLAMER. But we have a report lying on our tables, printed, showing the fact to be so.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I will give him the Secretary's explanation. He told me that applications were made for licenses under the law for the purchase of cotton; that the officer in the Treasury having charge of the business, Mr. Risley, a very upright and honorable man, had been persuaded by certain parties that large amounts of cotton could be gotten out from certain localities; and that he had issued permits to different individuals to bring out this cotton, which they represented was within the reach of the Government.

Mr. CONNESS. Who signed those permits?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Risley. The President afterward gave an order to the military and naval forces to aid those parties in getting out the cotton which they were permitted by the Treasury previously to get out. That is the whole history of the transaction.

Mr. COLLAMER. The law provided for agents to buy for the Government, and the places were fixed by the order of the Treasury where they should go. Now, at what place was this Mr. Risley an agent?

Mr. CHANDLER. He is located in the Treasury Department here.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is not making him an agent of the Government down there to buy.

Mr. CHANDLER. He is in the Treasury Department, and has the management of that particular branch of the Treasury Department here.

Mr. COLLAMER. But by what law can he authorize any persons to make a purchase, and get out cotton, unless they are agents of the Government under the act?

Mr. CHANDLER. It was done under the Treasury regulations, under this very eighth section.

Mr. GRIMES. Risley professes to be agent for the district of Norfolk, but he does not live in Norfolk, and has no office there.

Mr. CONNESS. I only wish to say, that this matter may be clearly understood, that there were placed in my possession long since orders directly emanating both from the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and signed by them, calling upon the officers of the Government in the department of Louisiana to permit certain parties named therein to go within our lines and purchase cotton, calling upon all the authorities to permit and facilitate them, and I have been asked to interfere in behalf, I will say, of some of the best friends I have ever had in the world; but in accordance with a determination to avoid doing what in my opinion I should not do I have never made any application in behalf of anybody in this connection. These copies are in my possession yet, though I have them not at my desk now. If the law permitted this to be done, or if they were issued under a misapprehension, it is for us now to correct the matter and have the law properly carried out as originally intended.

I have no condemnation to speak here of the issuance of these orders. The opinion of the Senate has been once expressed very definitely in this regard. I have no question about the bad policy of this trade. I have no question but that when General Canby said that permitting this trade to go on was equal to the loss of fifty thousand men to us in his department he spoke the truth, and what he knew; I have no doubt of that. The parties who applied to me were aggrieved and angered by the action of General Canby in interfering, as they said, with the orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, but to his credit, be it said, he did interfere and stop it, depending upon both the justice and enlightenment of the Chief Magistrate, who, when the whole matter was properly represented to him has affirmed, through the War Department, the correctness of General Canby's action, and there the matter now stands.

If contracts have been made and now exist in pursuance of these orders, under if you please a misapprehension of the law, I have no objection that it shall be approved as in the House bill that the contracts now in existence may be carried out; but amend it so that they shall be contracts made in pursuance of law; stop the abuses now going on. This trade does not depend upon orders issued by a mistake by Mr. Risley in the Treasury Department. That statement is not correct; and if the Senate acted on that statement, they would act under a misapprehension of the facts. I think it is time to act; the public good requires it.

Mr. CHANDLER. That General Canby stated his honest conviction I have no doubt, but that he was laboring under a very serious misapprehension I believe. If the repeal of this eighth section would absolutely stop all traffic, perhaps it might be desirable to repeal the section; but the history of the past four years has shown that that cannot be done. You cannot stop this traffic.

Mr. CONNESS. And hence we must increase it!

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; hence we must control it. Under the eighth section and under the present regulations one fourth of the value of all the cotton purchased goes into the Treasury of the United States, and all that is seized is condemned, and that goes into the Treasury of the United States.

With regard to the abuses that have sprung up under this eighth section, the Secretary explained the subject to me yesterday. He said that permits had been granted for large amounts of cotton by the mistake of Mr. Risley, if you please, for I believe it to have been a mistake on his part. These parties having permits to bring out ten, twenty, or one hundred bales, instead of themselves getting that amount, went and sold or made over the privilege of getting out a portion of what they were authorized to get out to other parties. The very moment that was discovered by the Secretary of the Treasury and by Mr. Risley they immediately stopped issuing such permits; they annulled all such permits as they could annul, and to-day none are being issued.

Now the Secretary informs me that it is very important for the Treasury that this cotton should be gotten out and thrown on the market. It has a tendency to lessen the price of gold; it has a tendency to improve our finances. He is going out of the Treasury into the Senate where he can explain it here to-morrow; but he deems it a matter of vital importance to the interests of the Treasury that this eighth section should be allowed to stand, and so do I; and I hope it will stand, although I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move its repeal.

Mr. GRIMES. We have a very anomalous case presented to us here, a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce in favor of the passage of the bill, and the chairman of that committee attempting to defeat its passage. It seems that a very great revolution has taken place within the last few hours, or within a day or two, in the sentiments of the Senator from Michigan—almost as miraculous as that attributed to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] the other day by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] in reference to the conversion of St. Paul. I have just as high a respect for and just as much confidence in the wisdom, integrity, and capacity of the Secretary of the Treasury as the Senator from Michigan has, or as anybody else has; but I never yet have surrendered and I never intend to surrender my independent power of judgment to the Secretary of the Treasury or to any other man. I never entertained any doubt as to the propriety of stopping this trade and stopping it effectually, sealing it up hermetically, so that neither Army, nor Treasury, nor Navy, nor anybody else, could carry on commerce with the rebels. I never could conceive of the propriety of professing to carry on war with one hand and trading with the enemy with the other, furnishing them the very supplies that are calculated to strengthen and support them and to invigorate their armies with which they propose to take our lives.

The argument is made that we are going to pay them in greenbacks, with our national currency. How long do you think that currency remains in their hands? I admit that it would be comparatively worthless so long as it is kept within the confederate lines; but how long is it kept within those lines? They have means every day, almost hourly, to carry it across the lines, and by the same process they carry back supplies for the support and sustenance of their army and those who support their army at home.

The Senator from Michigan has had something to say about the stealing of the Navy. Admit all that he says, that the officers of the Navy did desire to secure some of this cotton in the early stages of the war; is not that stopped? Has not Congress placed upon the statute-book a law that there shall be no prize whatever on any of the inland waters of the United States? Does the repeal of the law of July 2, 1864, therefore, grant any privilege to officers or men of the Navy? Not at all. Does it confer any boon or grant any privilege to any officer or any man in the Army? Not at all. The only effect of repealing this section, letting all the rest of the law stand from which this eighth section is extracted, will be to declare that there shall from this time forth be no trade with the rebels, and that I think is what we ought to do.

Mr. President, the Senator from California was quite right when he said that in order to secure one of these contracts, to get any advantage from one of these contracts, it is not alone necessary to secure a written license, or a permit, or a contract, if you wish to call it such, from Mr. Risley. We have the very pleasant fiction of regarding a clerk in the Treasury Department by the name of Risley as local agent at Norfolk. So any gentleman, lobbyist or otherwise, who wants to engage in this business of buying cotton or selling cotton, goes to Mr. Risley and enters into a contract representing that he will furnish twenty, fifty, or two hundred and fifty thousand bales of cotton within three or four States, say the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama. The cotton is in those States. That contract is of no value unless the contractor can get a mandate from the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and from the Secretary of War, directing that the energies of the Army and Navy shall be applied and used in the assistance of the man who has entered into this contract in carrying it out; and it is that to which General Canby and all the other officers of the Army so strenuously object.

Mr. CONNESS. And successfully.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir. Now, I am told that within the last three weeks, since this subject was under consideration here, a gentleman in a State adjoining the one in which I live, a man not particularly noted by his character for loyalty to the Government, has secured a contract with the Department, and has entered upon its execution, by which he is to deliver to the Government several thousand bales of cotton, to be brought out of the Red river country. That contract carries with it the same mandate from the military commander-in-chief that the efforts of the officers in that section of country shall be used in order to enable this man to carry out his contract and to realize the large amount of profits which he expects to realize upon it. All you want to know in regard to this subject is contained in a record that is on your desks, published by the authority of the Senate. Some of these gentlemen divide up their contracts. I see that a gentleman from Illinois has several contracts—I forget how many; three at any rate—obtained at one time, worth $20,000 each; my friend from Missouri [Mr. Brown] suggests $50,000 each. I understand this gentleman took one of those contracts to New York and sold it. In New York they sell them to parties who wish to embark in this kind of trade for fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, or thirty thousand dollars, and put the money in their pockets, and the parties to whom it is transferred attempt to execute the contract made by their assignors.

Is it for the interest of this Government that this thing should proceed further? Is it not calculated, and is not that the testimony, to demoralize our service? I call upon the chairman of the committee on the conduct of the war to bear evidence as to the fact; is it not the testimony of every military officer that nothing is more calculated to demoralize the public military service than this system of trading with the enemy?

Mr. WADE. It is.

Mr. GRIMES. He bears testimony to the fact. Is it not so in the nature of things? Is there a man of reflection and common sense who is not satisfied that that must be the result? If we are going to put down the rebellion and close this war it must be done by fighting, and not by trading. Either withdraw your armies and go to trading, or else cease trading and continue to fight.

Mr. CHANDLER. My conversion is not quite as sudden as the Senator from Iowa seems to think. St. Paul was converted very suddenly indeed; he saw a brilliant light; but there are some men who never see any light; they are born blind, and they stay blind; and there are other men so pig-headed that they will not see when it is brought to their notice. [Laughter.] I always advocated this eighth section, advocated it in the Committee on Commerce when it was first proposed there, and have advocated it all the way through. I was overruled at one time by the Committee on Commerce last year; I was overruled again this year; but still I have been of the impression that this trafficking should be taken out of the hands of the Army and of the Navy, and placed in the hands of the Treasury. That abuses have grown up I have no doubt, very grave and serious abuses; but is it not better that these abuses, if they must continue, should be kept out of the fighting element of the country? Is it not better, if demoralization must take place, that it should be kept out of the Navy, which the Senator so ably represents? In the early stages of this war I labored the whole of one session to get a law through prohibiting the Navy from making prize of cotton on our inland waters. The Senator from Iowa defeated me, and by defeating me he kept out of the Treasury more than one hundred million dollars that ought to be there to-day in gold.

I have already said that great demoralization took place in the Army and Navy in consequence of the prevalence of their dealing in cotton with the enemy; the disaster of the Red river expedition was attributed directly to the desire, on the part of officers of the Government not connected with the Treasury, to speculate in cotton. With the permission of the Senate I will read the eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864, which it is now proposed to repeal:

"That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to authorize agents to purchase for the United States any products of States declared in insurrection, at such places therein as shall be designated by him, at such prices as shall be agreed on with the seller, not exceeding the market value thereof at the place of delivery, nor exceeding three fourths of the market value thereof in the city of New York at the latest quotations known to the agent purchasing: Provided, That no part of the purchase money for any products so purchased shall be paid, or agreed to be paid, out of any other fund than that arising from property sold as captured or abandoned, or purchased and sold under the provisions of this act. All property so purchased shall be forwarded for sale at such place or places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the moneys arising therefrom, after payment of the purchase money and the other expenses connected therewith, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; and the accounts of all moneys so received and paid shall be rendered to, and audited by, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury."

After consultation with those who are conversant with this traffic, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, I find my own judgment confirmed. My opinion from the first has been that if this traffic must exist it should be taken out of the hands of the Army and Navy and placed under the management of Treasury agents, and that there should be an absolute prohibition as to any other avenue for traffic. I believe it will be injurious to the Government to repeal the eighth section of the law of last year; and although I was instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report the bill I am of opinion that it ought not to be passed.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a question of a good deal of importance, and I confess that it is not without its difficulties. The question simply is as to authorizing trade in the products of insurrectionary States on the part of the Government; in other words, authorizing the Government to purchase.

I desire, Mr. President, that the Senate should understand the general position of the question, both as matter of law and as matter of fact; and in the simplest way I can I will state it.

The principal product, of course, is that of cotton; and that is a very big question of itself. The whole product of cotton supposed to be in the insurrectionary States at the present time is about four million bales; and to some extent it is a question whether it shall be left under the law, independent of this eighth section, to be declared confiscable property, seized by the Army and Navy, and turned over to the agents of the Government, and sold as forfeited and confiscable property on behalf of the Government, or whether, on the other hand, it shall be purchased by Government agents for the Government. As the law stands I think that is about the question that is presented to us.

The arguments, on the one side and the other, are these: it is said if you treat these products as forfeited to the United States, and undertake to confiscate them and appropriate them to the Government without compensation to the owners, the result will be that you will lose the crop; it will be burned. To avoid that difficulty it is said that the Government had better hold out some inducement to the owners of this cotton to bring it within our lines and sell it. That policy is founded on two suggestions: first, that the crop is indispensable to the industry of the country; and secondly, that it is nearly indispensable to the finances of the country. This policy, as I understand it, is founded on those two assumptions: first, that we need this cotton crop; it is indispensable to the domestic industry of the country, and to the manufactures; and in the second place—

Mr. COLLAMER. "Cotton is king."

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, cotton is king, as my friend from Vermont very truly says. Undoubtedly, to the extent of the demand of our domestic manufactures, he is king; he is master of the situation. We absolutely need cotton. It is absolutely indispensable to the prosperity of the nation in this regard. His kingship remains to be seen.

Now, as to the question of finance, the necessity of having cotton for exportation, to sustain the finances of the country; on that I have no information that is not common to the Senate. Suffice it to say that the present Secretary of the Treasury and his predecessor both believed that it was of the utmost importance that that crop, somehow or other, should be reached by the Government, and should be brought out, so that the Government could make it available. Now, how does the law stand? By the law of 1861 we declared that all trade with the insurrectionary States was unlawful, and all trade was absolutely prohibited. By subsequent acts we declared that all the products in the insurrectionary States belonging to rebels were forfeited, were liable to be confiscated and turned over to the agents authorized to be appointed by the Treasury Department, to be appropriated for the benefit of the Army, and also for the benefit of the Treasury. Under the operation of that law the Treasury really received very little benefit; so that, down to the passage of this act last year, embracing the section now under consideration, the policy of the Government had been not to trade; the Government would have no trade. The Government went upon the idea that the property and products in these insurrectionary States belonged to the Government, and it might appropriate them for the benefit of the Army, and what was not needed for the benefit of the Army as it marched through this country should be turned over to the Treasury and disposed of for the benefit of the Treasury. It also adopted the additional policy that all trade by citizens should be inhibited in these insurrectionary States, and we continued that policy. The honorable chairman has very properly stated that an abuse sprang up both in the Army and Navy, the struggle being for the possession of this cotton.

In view of these facts, Congress last year undertook to regulate this trade somewhat further; and, perceiving the evil growing out of the practice of the Army and Navy, Congress imposed further restrictions upon the trade, and they imposed severe penalties upon the officers or soldiers of the Army or Navy who should undertake to interfere in the staple products of the insurrectionary States. But it was concluded by the Senate, under circumstances to which I need not now particularly refer, that while the Army and the Navy should not interfere with these products, and while it was improper for citizens to carry on this trade with the insurrectionary States, yet it would be wise and proper, for the reasons I have stated, to supply our domestic manufactures, and also as affecting the finances of the country, that the Government should address itself directly to parties owning cotton in the insurrectionary States and induce them to bring it out and bring it within our lines. In order to do that this eighth section provided that the Government might appoint agents, and they might purchase cotton, paying in no case more than seventy-five per cent. of the actual value of the product in New York.

Mr. COLLAMER. Purchasing it for the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. They were to purchase for the Government, on account of the Government, and for the benefit of the Government, for the reasons I have stated. I believe this is the law, and the policy of the law, up to this time. Now for the practice as it stands at the present moment. Under the eighth section of this law of last year the present Secretary of the Treasury made rules and regulations for carrying into effect what he conceived to be the provisions of that law; and several agents have been appointed, one at Memphis, one at New Orleans, one at Norfolk—I believe six or eight in all—who were authorized to purchase these products. Rules and regulations for their government were promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President of the United States, and thereupon the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy issued their orders giving to these agents, and the parties whom they should authorize to make these purchases, facilities to pass within our lines and put themselves in communication with the products in the insurrectionary States and the owners thereof, and thus give them that facility and the additional advantage of transportation to bring out these products, both by the Army and the Navy, to the place designated by the agent for their delivery.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish the gentleman to understand that that law did not authorize them to go into the country and buy and bring in these products, but to authorize the people who had the products to come in with them.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator is speaking of the law; I am speaking of the regulations.

Mr. COLLAMER. The regulations are so.

Mr. MORRILL. The regulations of the Treasury go to the extent which I have stated. Under the regulations of the Treasury, parties are authorized to penetrate our lines and pass within the rebel lines. Our military and naval authorities are instructed by those Departments to give them egress, and to furnish them facilities and transportation to bring out the cotton. These I understand to be the regulations.

Now, sir, there are two classes of transactions that sprang up under this section: first, these agents located at these different points have made contracts for cotton directly with the owners, and cotton to some extent has been delivered to them. They have purchased it and paid for it. Those contracts would be within the purview of the law, within the letter of the law, within the spirit of the law. But there is another class of contracts, which have been referred to by the Senator from Vermont, which are in the nature of permits. These agents, instead of purchasing cotton of the owners or sellers, on its production and delivery, have authorized numerous persons who go by permit into the rebel lines and secure the cotton. For instance, a person will come to one of these agents and represent that he has within his control—not that he is the owner, but that he has within his control—say one hundred and fifty thousand bales of cotton, situated in the States of South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, and Georgia, and he says he wishes a permit to get it out, and thereupon a permit is granted; and under that permit he has the authority both of the Army and Navy to go through our lines into the States in insurrection, and he is to have the facilities for bringing that cotton out. When it is brought to the point designated in his permit, either to New Orleans or to Memphis, then it is to be transported to New York on Government account, at the Government expense, and is to be sold in the market; the expenses to be deducted; one fourth of it to be reserved to the Treasury, and three fourths paid to the party who has the permit.

Mr. COLLAMER. Those permits enable the man who gets the cotton to bring it to the place of shipment, and ship it to New York at Government expense, and he is then to sell it, and then, after paying the expenses of shipment, one fourth of it is to go to the Government; but the agent of the Government has nothing in the world to do with it.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, Mr. President, it will be seen there are two classes of transactions. The first, to which I have referred, is clearly within the spirit, and I think within the letter, of the law. As to the permits, every Senator must judge for himself how far they are within the spirit and how far they are within the intent and object of that law. The committee who examined this matter really did not feel that the last class of transactions was within the object or spirit of that law; and accordingly this bill is framed to protect the first class of transactions, while it ignores the last. It is not a matter that I design to argue. I believe I have stated in a general way, imperfectly I know, the law and the fact on this subject. I want to add another word. It is a matter of a good deal of consideration. The Treasury Department think it is a question between getting out the cotton for the benefit of the Government and burning it. How far that is true, every Senator must judge for himself.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That all cotton seized by the military or naval authorities, or surrendered to said authorities, shall be delivered to the officers of the Treasury, and vouchers shall be given to the owner or claimant of such cotton, entitling such owner or claimant, personally, to payment for such cotton at the end of the war, less taxes and expenses, in bonds of the United States, bearing six per cent. interest, redeemable in twenty years.

We all agree that there have been corrupt practices—corrupt practices in the Army, in the Navy, in the civil Departments, growing out of these cotton permits. We all desire to see these corrupt practices abandoned altogether. It is, however, of vital importance to the finances of the country, to the industry of the people, to obtain cotton if we can do so without giving aid to the rebel authorities. If we purchase the cotton, and pay in goods, in gold, in greenbacks, or in the bonds of the Government, the rebel authorities may gain by the traffic. Such a traffic is open to the objections so forcibly presented by the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER.]

But there are from three to five million bales of cotton in the rebel States. It is for the interest of the country for us to get out some of this cotton. If we do not get it out a great quantity will be destroyed, and a great deal of it will be got out in some way. About twenty millions in value of cotton went out through Mexico and Matamoras.

Mr. GRIMES. Twenty millions?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; $20,000,000 worth went through Matamoras and Mexico last year. For thirteen weeks during the last autumn we stopped the trade, and we imported during that time forty thousand bales of cotton, and paid the gold for it, and gold went up in face of our successes. Since the trade has been reopened, we have exported about two thousand bales per week, and gold has worked down under it, and the price of cotton cloths has fallen, I am told, about thirty-three per cent.

This bill provides for the repeal of the law authorizing this cotton trade. I am willing to vote for it; but I think we ought to adopt some plan to get the cotton out of the rebel country. The proposition that I have offered is that all cotton seized by the Army or Navy, or obtained in any other way, shall be delivered to the agents of the Treasury Department, and that the person owning this cotton shall receive a voucher from the Government to be paid, less the taxes and expenses, at the end of the war; and the payment is then to be made to the person owning or claiming this cotton in the bonds of the Government; so that the cotton cannot be used against us during the war.

Mr. COLLAMER. At what price?

Mr. WILSON. At the market price at the time the cotton is sold. Cotton is to us the same as so much gold. Sir, suppose we could obtain two million bales of cotton during the next three months upon the conditions proposed in my amendment; what would be the condition of our finances? What would be the rate of gold in the market? What would be the effect upon the business interests of the nation? It would give the Treasury the command of $300,000,000 in gold; it would be to our advantage in all respects. The rebel authorities would gain nothing whatever by it. It would restore our finances, invigorate our industry, strengthen our Government, make us masters of the situation, and demoralize the rebels. The people would not, if we would give them vouchers for their cotton, hide it or burn it. They would seek in every way to get it into the possession of our Government and to obtain our vouchers for it. And with the vouchers of the Government, agreeing to pay to loyal and disloyal owners the market price of cotton, less the taxes and expenses, at the end of the war, in the bonds of the Government, they would want the war ended and the credit of our Government to be good. Sir, this proposition is in every respect for the interest of our people and Government, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Massachusetts says the cotton must be got out of the rebel lines. I will tell him how it can be got out, and the only way in which it can be safely got out of that country; and that is, by fighting it out, never by trading it out.

Mr. WILSON. Suppose your Army passes over a line of country where they have a hundred thousand bales of cotton; if the owners of the cotton can deliver it up to your officers and receive a voucher that they will get pay for it at the end of the war, less what we choose to tax it and less expenses, will they not be likely to save their cotton, and will we not have the advantage of it? On the other hand, if we take their cotton and they get nothing for it will they not regard it as a robbery, and will they not, in all cases where they can do so, destroy their cotton? We may capture some cotton, but as our armies advance the cotton will be destroyed unless the owners can receive something for it. If we can obtain the cotton without giving now anything in return we ought to do it. Had this policy of getting out cotton been adopted two years ago I believe it would have brought untold benefits upon our country.

Mr. GRIMES. That cotton is ours now. No man was more strenuous in favor of the passage of the confiscation law than the Senator from Massachusetts. Why is he willing to abandon his right and the right of his constituents and the soldiers of my State to that cotton within the laws of the States of South Carolina and Georgia? Why is he willing to take that cotton and pay for it to the men who have been attempting to take the lives of our soldiers and break up our Army?

Mr. President, the whole thing proceeds upon a fallacy that is as apparent to me as the beam of the sun. Either let us carry on this war as war, or else let us disband the Army and let the Treasury undertake to trade us through the war. It is the height of ridiculousness to me for a great nation to be professing to carry on war, taxing its people and using a conscription law in order to reinforce its armies, undertaking to carry on war, using all its energies, all its surplus means, and all its men, and at the same time trading with the men that you are carrying on the war with, and allowing directly and indirectly supplies and support to go through the lines of your Army in order to enable the enemy to continue to carry on that war, for that is the conclusion to which it all comes at last.

I have no idea that this bill is going to pass. I know how potential are the influences that are wielded in opposition to it. I remember perfectly well what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. COLLAMER] told us when he first introduced a bill on this subject. But I stand where I have ever stood, where I stood last year when this law was passed. Either let there be unconditional, untrammelled free trade, or else let us have no trade at all, and let this be a war and not transactions in merchandise.

Mr. MORRILL. With regard to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts I wish to say to him that practically the law is what he proposes to make it by his amendment. The law independent of the eighth section, which we are considering, provides for the seizure of abandoned or confiscable property, and agents have been appointed to receive that property. It is then to be carried forward to a market and sold for the benefit of the owner, provided he is a loyal man; and the only difference between that and the proposition which the Senator from Massachusetts now offers is that he makes no discrimination as I understand it. As the law stands, the property abandoned or confiscable is to be seized, carried forward to market, and sold on account of the Government, and at the end of the war, or at any time, if a loyal owner comes forward and can show that he is loyal and that the property belonged to him, he is entitled then to have the pay for the property which by former statutes we have declared to be forfeited in the hands of the traitor and rebel. If he designs to pay rebels for their cotton then his amendment has force in it; otherwise, it is unnecessary.

Mr. WILSON. In answer to that question I say frankly to the Senator that that is my purpose. I base my action on what I regard to be the interest of my country. I am not among those who regard cotton as king; but I do regard cotton to be to us in our present condition the same as gold. If these bales of cotton were gold, and we could get it out of the rebel States by promises to pay after the war, I would agree to pay for it in the bonds of the Government after the war. I am willing to do the same in regard to cotton; to put it on the same footing. If it was gold instead of cotton I should say the gold was to be got out, because the interests of the country require it. Suppose you pass this measure, and no cotton is got out of that country by us, what will be the effect? What will be the practical operation of it? In the first place, wherever our armies go the rebels will destroy their cotton.

Mr. MORRILL. If my friend will allow me, I will suggest to him that the bill to which this is an amendment itself provides for the purchase of all the cotton within the confederate States.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that. I am in favor of that repeal; and I am in favor of it because of the practices that have grown out of it. I am free to say that I would prefer to stop the whole trade rather than have a continuance of the scenes that have been witnessed of grants and permits to take out cotton. It is time those things were put an end to. But I wish to have a plan adopted by which we can get that cotton out, and get all the advantages of it. By the amendment that I propose we should get all the advantages of it, and the confederacy could get nothing. Suppose you stop this trade entirely it will stimulate the getting out of cotton, and what will be the result?

Mr. GRIMES. They can only get a small portion in Texas. They cannot cross the Mississippi river.

Mr. WILSON. There is a large quantity of cotton in Texas; and there will be some carried across the Mississippi river, if it will pay. I wish simply to say that if we stop this traffic entirely, and get no cotton out of the rebel lines, we shall have to purchase two or three thousand bales of cotton a week and pay for it in gold. When the traffic was stopped last autumn, it carried out of the country five or six millions of gold, and carried gold up in the markets of the country; and that will be the result now if we stop it entirely. We shall have to import some cotton; we shall pay the gold for it; and gold will go up in the face of your victories. If you could get a million bales of cotton out of the confederacy you would bring gold down in the market just as much as you would if you brought in its value in gold. Cotton and gold are the same thing now. My proposition is to stop all this trade, to get the cotton, to agree to pay anybody who owns it, after the war is over, but nobody else. We shall thus have the advantage of it. I do not call this trade. I would not send goods to them; I would not pay them in gold for their cotton; I would not pay them in greenbacks or bonds; but I would pay them in promises to pay after the war is over. That is my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor in the chair.) The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that this bill, as it comes from the House, has originated in a very good idea. It has evidently grown out of an unwillingness to submit longer to unquestionable abuses. But it seems to me that the bill goes further than it need go; the remedy that it applies is more than is required. Why not strike at the abuse? That is all that you need do. But the bill strikes at the whole trade in cotton. That is more than we need.

My colleague has already called the attention of the Senate to the bearing of this measure on the national finances. He has presented it so clearly that I do not know that anything remains for me to say. He has told you that cotton now is practically gold; so much cotton, so much gold. If we can get cotton, therefore, we get the great agent in our financial system. If we do not get cotton we lose the benefit of that agent. But without the benefit of that agent, in other words, without cotton, what shall we have to send to Europe in payment of the goods and products that we receive from there? Nothing but gold. This result must necessarily ensue: the national finances will be deranged; gold will go up in the market; even victory cannot keep it down. Sir, the risk is too great. The bill, as it comes from the House, goes too far; and in undertaking to remove an abuse, it lays the foundation for confusion, distress, almost bankruptcy; individual bankruptcy on a large scale, because the commercial affairs of the country cannot go on prosperously, if, when we have victory, gold continues to rise in the market. I say, therefore, Mr. President, for the sake of our national finances you must hesitate before you adopt the bill as it comes from the House.

Some Senators say cotton is king, and some say it is not king; but I will tell you who do recognize cotton as king; I will tell you those who bend before the sovereignty of cotton.

Mr. GRIMES. The people of Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; it is those who now seek to cut off this trade.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no.

Mr. SUMNER. You prepare the way for bending before its sovereignty because you will give to cotton the control of the money market of the world; that control to be used adverse to your national interests. I am not disposed to accord to this sovereignty any such power. I wish, if possible, to bend it to our own national interests; to yoke it, if I may, as a patriotic power to be used for the welfare of my country. I have said, sir, that all that you need to get rid of is the abuse.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell us what he understands by the abuse?

Mr. SUMNER. I understand the abuse to be the illicit purchase of cotton in places where it should not be purchased and in ways that it should not be purchased. I am much obliged to the Senator for asking me the question. I think that all we need removed now is what I have called the abuse; and that the careful Treasury regulations—

Mr. GRIMES. How would the Senator have it purchased?

Mr. SUMNER. I would have it purchased within our own military lines.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator if there is any law or regulation that now prevents any one from buying cotton or anything else within our own military lines? The very purpose of the bill which is sought to be repealed is to enable parties to go within the rebel lines in order to get out cotton; and it is to that that General Canby, in command of the department of the Mississippi, particularly objects, and says that information will be carried by these Treasury agents and Treasury contractors to the rebels, so that an army of fifty thousand additional men will be required in order to support ourselves in his department alone.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; there is no such power accorded under this section; there is no power given to trade within the rebel lines; and I submit that this whole matter may be regulated by the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Leave it to him, especially after the recent criticisms, after the attention that has been drawn to the subject by this debate; and I doubt not that he will impose upon the trade restrictions which will satisfy even the jealous Senator from Iowa. At any rate, I insist that the Senate should not take a step which will (to use a familiar illustration) kill the goose that lays our golden egg. We must not give up the idea of having cotton. We must have it. It is needed not merely to the business of the country, but to its foreign exchanges, its finances, its national credit.

Mr. WADE. At this period of the session I do not propose to enter into an elaborate argument on this question; but I have paid some considerable attention to it in the progress of the session, and have conversed a good deal with military men who were engaged upon our borders in regard to it, and ascertained from them the demoralizing influence this trade in cotton has had among all classes of people along our lines. It is an endeavor to do that which was never attempted in any other country, or at any other time; and that is to carry out the idea that you may fight an enemy and trade with him at the same time. It is a paradox, a solecism, a thing that never entered the brains of any other people in the world.

The Senator from Massachusetts says you must have cotton; at all hazards you must have cotton. As the old miser said to his son, "Get it honestly if you can," but at all hazards get cotton. [Laughter.] Sir, I do not admit that cotton is the supreme motive for which men live or die. I know that cotton at the present time is a very valuable commodity; I know that it commands a great price in gold in the markets of the world; but, sir, there is one thing worth infinitely more than gold or silver, and that is the honor of a nation and the honesty of mankind. "Beware of temptation," is a mandate of more than human wisdom. Do not be lured to place these temptations before mankind and before the officers of your Government, by the idea that if cotton is not obtained in this way it will require gold to purchase it. I would rather the nation would sink into poverty, retaining its honor, retaining the manliness and honor of its people, than to see it grow rich amid such temptations as you are holding out.

The Senator from Massachusetts tells us that the bill of the House goes too far; that the trade is all well enough provided you can divest it of all matter of abuse; and he wants to strike at the abuse. Anything is right if you can so arrange it that it shall be destitute of any abuse. I do not care what it is, if you can divest it of the element of evil that is mixed up with it, I shall have no objection to it. But, sir, the idea is erroneous in this case. You cannot so arrange this matter that it will not be a standing abuse all the time. It has been the most corrupting influence that ever entered as an element into this corrupt Government.

What do you propose to do? To authorize somebody to give permission ad libitum to agents to go forth and buy cotton and speculate in that valuable commodity without any restriction or restraint to deprive them of the ability of abusing that power to any extent. What has been the result of it? Why, sir, no investigation has yet fathomed that sink of iniquity, that sewer of corruption, that has been laid open here by the Government. I dare not trust myself to speak upon this subject as I feel. It would have influences in some quarters which for the present restrain me from speaking out. It is corrupting everybody that has come within the circle of its influence. What more corrupting can there be than to authorize any man to give permits and licenses to go forth into the southern country and trade in this most valuable commodity? Sir, since Warren Hastings took the governorship of India there has been no such gigantic corruption as has been practiced under this Government; no opportunities for that meed of corruption that has been developed by the latitudinous manner with which men unauthorized by law have perverted law for the purpose of building up their own wealth.

What accountability is there in any of your officers down in that country? Is there any? Why, sir, give me authority to sell these licenses to purchase cotton in the southern States, and I will warrant you that I can put in my own pocket millions upon millions, and any investigation that may be made will not make men the wiser for it. Will you tempt men in this way? Will you intrust men with a power like this? Will you deliberately, in the Senate of the United States, pass a law that is open to this gigantic abuse? Sir, I am opposed to it. If you will have trade you must make peace.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that this law does not authorize these agents to go within the rebel lines to purchase. If it does not, then your law is perfectly nugatory; because, as the Senator from Iowa suggested, there is no law to prevent any man within our own lines going forth and trading in any lawful employment whatever, among which is the purchase of cotton as well as of wheat or corn. This law was not framed with any such idea as that; but it is to permit men to go within the rebel lines and there purchase cotton from rebels, and the consideration paid for it will be the means of murdering your own men. Those who propose to authorize this trade propose to authorize a trade in the souls and bodies of men. When I went down the Mississippi river a year ago I was told by officers high in the Government, and who had every opportunity to know how this trade operated, that they had no doubt but what the enemy had received infinitely more advantage in warlike implements and the facilities to carry on the war against us by reason of this unlicensed trade than they had received from Nassau or from the illegitimate smuggling trade of all Europe, and yet you propose to open the gates and to let in all this corruption to which I have alluded.

I agree with the Senator from Iowa on this subject. I say open this trade to everybody; let every man go in and trade with the rebels as much as he pleases, or else restrain everybody from going. The whole thing is invidious; it is wrong; it opens a flood-gate of corruption and of favoritism that I, as a Senator of the United States, will never countenance anywhere. Senators talk about having cotton, and say we must have it, and that it will sink the price of gold in the market. It may have that effect; but it sinks your honor faster than it sinks the premium on gold.

Early in this discussion the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER,] with that wisdom that characterizes almost everything he says, made a speech here that ought to have convinced all men of the impropriety of attempting to trade with the people with whom you are at war. I wish every Senator had heard and deliberated upon that able speech. If it is necessary, I wish he would repeat it. I say, sir, that every vote given to open this flood-gate of corruption will carry the implements of death and destruction into the hands of those who intend to wield them against our friends. I will never yield to it; and yet I fear even now, after the great conspirators have left this Hall, that cotton will still prove to be king; and the Senator from Massachusetts, who has fought against it up to this time, is lending his influence, unwittingly, to the idea that cotton is still to be king. I know he intends no such thing. I know that of all men on earth he is the first man that would discountenance corruption in any form; but if he votes for this law that authorizes anybody to give out these licenses to trade he votes for a law which he cannot prevent operating in corruption and in the means of arming the enemy against us.

Mr. SUMNER. The speech of my excellent friend was directed, as it seems to me, against what does not exist. He assumes that under this eighth section, which it is now proposed to repeal, there may be a trade within the lines of the enemy; and it was against that trade that he made his eloquent protest. Now, let me read the words of the first part of that section:

"That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to authorize agents to purchase for the United States any products of States declared in insurrection, at such places as shall be designated by him."

The language, I admit, is broad; but of course it is to be interpreted with reference to that state of war in which we unhappily find ourselves. I have reason to believe that, at least for a time, at the Treasury it was interpreted, as I think it must be, to limit purchases to places within our own military possession. I did not understand that my friend made objection to such purchases. His eloquent speech inveighed against purchases within the lines of the enemy; and he said that I was lending myself to a corrupt practice, unwittingly he admitted. I thank him for that admission; but, sir, I lend myself to no corrupt practice. I join with that Senator in striking at corruption wherever it shows its head. I join with him in striking at abuse wherever it appears. He cannot go further than I will. Let him show, therefore, any abuse or any corruption in the purchase of cotton, and I will join him in all practical legislation to prevent its recurrence.

But the Senator goes too far. In seeking to remove an abuse, he unwittingly supports a measure, which, if adopted, will seriously injure the national credit and interfere with the national finances. Instead of trimming the tree and cutting off obnoxious branches, he would fell the tree to the ground. If the tree be one that we should cherish, then I am ready to cherish it. Meanwhile, I would unite with my excellent friend in removing from it all those branches which are not for the good of the country.

Mr. WADE. I want to ask the Senator this question: whether he is willing to restrict this trade to trade with loyal men within our own lines? If he is, I have no objection to it.

Mr. SUMNER. I thank the Senator for putting the question. I have an amendment which I propose to move, to strike out all after the word "hereby" in the ninth line, and to insert as follows:

Amended by inserting the following proviso, to wit:

"Provided, That no purchase or other operation by any of the agents aforesaid shall be made except within the lines of our military forces."

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator what advantage that will be? Let me state a case that is on record here in the Senate, and about which there can be no controversy. It is not more than four weeks ago that a vessel came out of one of the North Carolina rivers in the sound, loaded with articles that were contraband of war, cotton, turpentine, and rosin. She went back loaded with provisions and clothing; and the moment she reached the line that divided the two armies, rebel soldiers in rebel uniform were put on board of her, and protected and carried her back up into North Carolina whence she had come. There is not anything to prevent anybody coming within our lines, bringing in their cotton, taking back supplies, and taking back what is of more advantage to the rebels and more injury to us—information as to the movements of our troops. It is to that that the military officers object.

Then what is the advantage of the Senator's proposition? How is that going to accomplish anything? Nobody denies the propriety or the legality of trade within our lines; but how are you to get the produce of the rebels within our lines unless you allow them to come in? If they come in, are they not going to take something in exchange for what they bring with them? Will they not carry out information from our lines into their own? How can our military commanders support and protect their forces and achieve their successes if you are going to allow men to go through from our lines and from their commands into the rebel lines and communicate all the information that they can obtain within our lines? It is to that that General Canby objects; and it was for that reason that he said he required fifty thousand more men—some of them sons of Massachusetts—to help to protect our own forces and our own positions. The very result of such a proposition as is contained in this eighth section is to require military forces to be drawn from all the free States in order to protect the positions we now occupy. It is for that, among other reasons, that I object to it.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, this war is conducted at great cost and at great sacrifice of life. At every stage there are hardships and difficulties. The Senator from Iowa discloses some of the difficulties. I am not insensible to them; but the practical question is, whether on account of those difficulties we shall take a step which will seriously embarrass the business, the finances, and the credit of this country. I put the question in that form.

Mr. GRIMES. The only difference between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself then is, that he is in favor of saving the dollars and I am in favor of saving human blood.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not yield to the Senator on that score; and when the Senator states his argument in that form, permit me to say it is merely a form of speech and not an argument. The Senator knows perfectly well that I am not less sensible than himself on that point. I do not think that either side will gain by undertaking to state the case in that form. The Senator is anxious for human life; but he is not more anxious than his associates and peers on this floor; not more anxious than I am. In the discharge of his public duties he feels that it is politic to cut off and to exterminate this trade. I feel that it is not politic to cut it off and to exterminate it. I think that a true policy, with a thoughtful regard to all the interests of our country and to the establishment of its finances and its credit, requires that the trade should not be absolutely cut off and exterminated. Follow out that idea then, and apply the remedy to the grievance or the abuse so far as you can; but do not, in your ardor to strike at the grievance and the abuse, go still further and damage seriously the important interests of your country.

Mr. COLLAMER. I took occasion at a period of the session when we were not hurried about business to bring forward this subject. I at that time spoke at length upon it. I have not heard any addition to the argument which I then made in any part of it; but, sir, I do not suppose that very many attended to what I said, and much less recollect it. Some gentlemen seem to consider that there was some force in it. I do not propose to repeat it; but there are one or two aspects that I desire again to mention, which I expect will share the same fate with the rest of it, and be overlooked and forgotten.

There are two aspects in which we must look upon this subject, and in which we cannot avoid looking at it. Whenever men look at it in a financial or pecuniary point of view, as a matter of trade and money, they see it in one light, and it is not extraordinary that they should come to like conclusions. When you look at the subject in a military point of view, and see the effects and consequences of it in its bearing upon the great war we have in hand, then we come to very different conclusions. I have seen gentlemen who have occasionally talked with me about it, and who would present forcibly its mercantile aspects, and had been carried away with that view, who at the same time had the candor to acknowledge to me that when they looked at it in a military point of view it was utterly indefensible and could not be sustained.

It all resolves itself into the simple question, can you trade with a people and carry on war with that people? I repeat again—I said that before, and I have been honorably indorsed in it—it is a paradox and a solecism. I am fully aware of the importance of cotton, and of its being king, as it is said. It is said cotton is gold; and we all know that it was said of old that an ass laden with gold would pass through the gates of the strongest city. If you look at it simply in a money point of view, it is gold anywhere.

I know it was long claimed by our southern friends that even in this struggle it would turn out that cotton was king. They believed they could command the Powers of Europe on that ground. Well, sir, has it succeeded? What people on earth needed cotton more than England? What people on earth could be more tempted with the influence of a pecuniary point of view, and prosperity, through cotton, than the people of Great Britain? Have they not had the integrity as a nation to say, "We will not acknowledge the independence of that cotton-growing people; we will not identify ourselves with them; though cotton is so valuable to us, though our manufactories have suffered and gone down and suffered, we will contribute to their support; we will sustain our national integrity?" They have not been able to bribe Europe with cotton, even though it is gold. But here on this floor I hear it this day acknowledged that it is a thing we must have; and if it is that which we must have, and it cannot be had by making prize, it must be obtained by purchasing it; that is to say, though in disguised terms, cotton is king; we will bow down to it and adore it. I said before, in the very commencement of this war, that I expected it would turn out that cotton would be king, and that that would be acknowledged here. Though it has been spoken of heretofore with derision, it is not to-day.

Mr. President, I know you can make money by trading with the enemy. I am sensible of that. But the trouble is not with me what you get from the enemy; the trouble is what you carry to the enemy. It is that you are to obtain this very valuable product from them by paying them for it. That is to furnish them with the sinews of war. It was said of old that they sowed dragons' teeth and they sprung up men; and I say to you, if you sow gold it will spring up men against you in time of war better than dragons' teeth. You furnish to these people an equivalent, a quid pro quo, and pay for it. I do not say that the honorable Senator [Mr. WILSON] proposes to do that. He proposes to take the cotton and give them a certificate to pay for it in time of peace hereafter. That is entirely another affair. That is not the section proposed to be repealed. The section proposed to be repealed would pay them, and pay them for it now. That is what I object to. That is what I want repealed. It is utterly impossible to carry that section into effect and carry on war. General Canby tells you so. The true account of it, as stated by the honorable Senator from Iowa, is the very one that General Canby gives.

Senators talk about buying it within our lines. There is none there. We do not have any of it within our lines. We do not permit any of it to be within our lines, unless we make a direct capture of a city before they have time to burn it.

Then how are you to get it within your lines? By allowing the people who have it round about within the enemy's lines to bring it in; and all the regulations under that section are made to give passes to them to bring it in. What do they carry out? Money. I believe they are allowed to carry out one fourth in provisions for their families. What else do they carry out along with them? Information of all the movements of your armies, and all the plans you project for carrying on movements against them, is carried out into the enemy's country; and General Canby tells you he cannot carry on military operations under the operation of this section; the thing is impracticable. That is nothing but the proper solution of the true idea on this subject, that you cannot fight an enemy and trade with him.

As you cannot carry on both, what will you do? I do not know but the best way is to withdraw all your Army, and enlist a large force of Yankee peddlers, pretty largely from Connecticut, if you please, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, and even from Vermont, to go down there and trade them all out; clean them out in trade. [Laughter.] I would not object so much to that; and I am not sure but it could be done. I very much doubt whether we could not have bought them all out for less money than it will take to pay for this war. [Laughter.] But while you are undertaking to fight them out, and carrying on war, I object to your furnishing them with the means, by way of trade, to carry on that war with you and against you. It is all folly, it is all delusion, to attempt to do such a thing. It arises entirely from looking at the subject in a pecuniary point of view. If that is the only way in which you will look at it, keep up your trade, but do not keep up the mockery of military operations under a policy of that kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 70) to enable the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of W. H. & C. S. Duncan;

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill from the House of Representatives in regard to the subsistence department. They have disagreed to our amendments, and I propose to insist upon them and let them go back to the House.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments. I do not want a committee of conference. I want to stand by our amendments, and let the bill go back to the House of Representatives, and let them take the responsibility of receding from their disagreement to our amendments or defeating the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

TRADE WITH INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] moved to amend this bill by striking out the proviso. I suppose it is in order to perfect or amend the proviso before the motion to strike out prevails. I desire to offer an amendment to that proviso that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) The Chair did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts to make that motion.

Mr. SUMNER. I simply gave notice that I should make it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood it.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of the proviso to the bill:

Nor shall such repeal prevent the bringing out for delivery of such products as may have been actually purchased under permits or licenses heretofore granted.

This discussion has been confined to the simple article of cotton. I do not know anything about this trade personally, for I never had anything to do with these persons; but I understand that parties have bought rosin, turpentine, and tobacco, and paid for it, and if this amendment should prevail and the bill be passed, they will have an opportunity to obtain what they have actually paid for. They cannot make any new contracts under it, but it will allow them to deliver what has actually been purchased under licenses already granted. I am informed, I know nothing about it myself, that such has been the practice. I think if the bill is to pass it ought to have this amendment on it. I do not care whether it passes or not.

Mr. COLLAMER. The eighth section, which it is now proposed to repeal, never authorized anybody on earth to get permits to go into the rebel lines and make purchases. It only authorizes agents of the Government to purchase for the Government.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator must beware that permits have been granted, whether right or wrong.

Mr. COLLAMER. The permits were granted totally without authority. That is the very abuse we want to get rid of.

Mr. POMEROY. The parties have committed this Government to it.

Mr. COLLAMER. We know what those parties were after. We know what the speculations were. We know they started it all themselves. We know by reading that section, as any man of common sense must know, that these men were to buy as agents of the Government for the Government, not give permits to people to buy for themselves.

Mr. WADE. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont whether his resolution calling for information on this subject has ever been responded to.

Mr. COLLAMER. Never to my knowledge. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNER. I now send to the Chair the amendment that I gave notice of a few moments ago: in line nine of the bill, after the word "hereby," to strike out the following words:

Repealed: Provided, however, That such repeal shall not affect any contract of sale provided for by the section of the act hereby repealed, where actual delivery of the products has been made.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Amended by inserting the following proviso, to wit: "Provided, That no purchase or other operation by any of the agents aforesaid shall be made, except within the lines of our military forces."

Mr. MORRILL. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts probably does not intend to strike out that saving clause. However, I will ask him whether he does or does not. It is obvious enough that so far as a contract for the purchase of cotton has been consummated, it should be protected; that is to say, so far as cotton has been purchased and delivered according to the act. That is the discrimination upon which that proviso rests. If it is in transitu to New York for sale, that should be protected. Therefore, I suggest to him that his amendment should come in after the saving clause. This saving clause makes the distinction between the two classes of transactions which have already been explained; first, the bona fide transaction under the law, which is a purchase consummated of cotton actually delivered; and the other is a speculative transaction, which is the abuse complained of, that grows up under permits, where a single individual promises to deliver one hundred and fifty thousand bales of cotton, and does not own a pound, and is authorized to go within the rebel lines to see what he can scare up. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Massachusetts whether he will not have his amendment come in after that saving clause.

Mr. SUMNER. Then that allows the repeal of the eighth section, which I wish to avoid.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; the repeal of the section is provided for before that.

Mr. COLLAMER. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts has misapprehended the purport of the present bill. The present bill is to repeal that eighth section.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that.

Mr. COLLAMER. Now, if that eighth section is repealed, the proviso there that the agents shall only do so and so would be without operation; there would be no agents.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator did not notice where my amendment comes in. I strike out the word "repealed" and insert "amended;" so that the bill will read as follows:

That the eighth section of the act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864, be, and the same is hereby amended by inserting the following proviso: "Provided, That no purchase or other operation by any of the agents aforesaid shall be made except within the lines of our military forces."

The effect of my amendment therefore is, instead of repealing the eighth section, simply to interpret it and to limit its operation to the lines of our own military forces. I believe in that I carry out the idea of my friend from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON. That does not save the proviso in the section as it stands.

Mr. SUMNER. There is no occasion to save the proviso if the section is not repealed. I do not propose to repeal it. I propose simply to amend it and limit its operation, and the limit is in the nature of an interpretation of the existing section.

Mr. JOHNSON. To limit in the future?

Mr. SUMNER. I limit the operation to purchases made within the lines of our own military forces.

Mr. JOHNSON. Speaking of future operations?

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, sir; future operations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that amendment will prevail. I believe it obviates all objection to the eighth section, and I think if that amendment prevails the bill may receive a unanimous vote.

Mr. SUMNER. I will say that I believe my amendment does strike at the abuse. It strikes at what my friend from Ohio seems to be aiming at; what I think my friend from Vermont seems to be aiming at also.

Mr. COLLAMER. The honorable Senator, I think, could not have listened to me, or the Senator from Iowa, or the Senator from Ohio. There never have been any of those agents anywhere but in our lines. The agent is in our lines, and he invites the people of the country around to bring in their cotton, and the permits are given to them to bring it in.

Mr. SUMNER. Then why should not the military authorities interfere? That is a military question.

Mr. COLLAMER. The military authorities are directed by the Department, in pursuance of the regulations, to aid and assist these people, and give them protection.

Mr. SUMNER. But they should not aid and assist them against the Army.

Mr. COLLAMER. Well, sir, the Treasury Department, under certain regulations, send agents down into our lines to purchase cotton within certain districts, and to invite people having the command of cotton to bring it to them. The military authorities, under a general order of the War Department, are directed to furnish safe-conducts to these people to go out and bring it in, in order to carry into effect the purchase. That is the very way in which it is done.

Mr. SUMNER. All that, it strikes me, is a military question, to be determined by the military authorities on the spot.

Mr. COLLAMER. I can merely say that that very operation is the very one that General Canby says defeats utterly all military operations.

Mr. WADE. This trade within the lines of the enemy would be a very unsafe one. I said a few moments since there was no law to prevent trade within our own lines. That is true; but then the evil that you cannot guard against is that these traders go on to the line, or as near as may be to the line between the two armies, and induce the enemy to come in and trade, and they bring their cotton, and the trader takes contraband articles of war to them, and thus enables them to keep up the war. Thousands of our men have fallen victims to this trade, as is proven by all the military officers with whom I have conversed along the line. You cannot get cotton in any other way, and you cannot guard against this abuse. From the very nature of it, the Senator must see that it is impossible to guard against it. If you give a license to go down there and trade in this manner, the military authorities cannot guard against it. They have tried to guard against it. They have always been opposed to it. There is not a department commander but what saw clearly how his authority was stricken down by it, how corruption had entered into the ranks of the whole Army, and he set his face like brass against it. But how could he prevent it? There was no means to prevent this contraband trade being carried on by the authorized agent, directed by the Executive here to aid and assist in the trade right by the lines of the enemy. It is idle, nugatory, and vain to talk about regulating a trade of this kind. It cannot be done; and that is the evil. You must stop this trade with the enemy, or you must submit to this abuse.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

MR. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. FARWELL. I merely wish to say that the opinion of the military authorities on this subject is conclusive upon me. The Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee on the conduct of the war, has been in constant communication with the officers of the Army who have seen this trade and its effects; and if they do not know whether it is wholesome or unwholesome who does know? Nobody doubts what the Senator heard from those officers; nobody doubts that he has got the opinion of the officers who have charge along the lines where this trade has been carried on. Can we set up our judgment against the judgment of these men on a question of this kind? Will this Senate set up their judgment against the judgment of these men? Why, sir, I think it would be preposterous if I should set up my judgment against the judgment of the men who know and who have told us what the effect of this trade is.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Morrill, Nesmith, Ramsey, Stewart, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Wilkinson—19.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of loyal citizens of Loudoun county, Virginia, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Thomas Bootle;

A bill (H. R. No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Leppien;

A bill (H. R. No. 605) to increase the pay of midshipmen and others;

A bill (H. R. No. 745) granting lands to the State of Michigan to aid in building a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior; and

A bill (H. R. No. 780) to extend the provisions of the first section of "An act for the government of persons in certain fisheries," approved June 19, 1813.

TRADE WITH INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864.

MR. HOWE. I will ask the unanimous consent to take up the bill which has just been sent to us by the House. It is one that will excite no debate, and will excite the sympathy of every Senator I am sure.

MR. GRIMES. What is it?

MR. HOWE. It is a resolution to restore to the people of Loudoun county the money that was the proceeds of their cattle taken, driven off, and sold, and the money placed into the Treasury, when the valley of the Shenandoah was devastated by order of General Sheridan.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foot.) It can only be considered by unanimous consent.

MR. CHANDLER. Let us take a vote on this subject first.

MR. GRIMES. I think it had better lie on the table until we see what it is.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendment be offered, the bill before the Senate, which is House bill No. 805, will be reported to the Senate; and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

MR. JOHNSON. The vote which I gave on the amendment suggested by the member from Massachusetts was given under a misapprehension. I have been from the first in favor of the repeal of the eighth section. I voted affirmatively upon the adoption of that amendment. I merely rise now to say that if the bill is about to be put on its passage, I shall vote against the bill as amended.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole; and the question will be taken on concurring in the amendments severally.

The first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to strike out the words:

"Repealed: Provided, however, That such repeal shall not affect any contract of sale provided for by the section of the act hereby repealed, where actual delivery of the products has been made," and to insert in lieu thereof, "amended by inserting the following proviso: Provided, That no purchase or other operation by any of the agents aforesaid shall be made except within the lines of our military forces."

MR. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

MR. SPRAGUE. When I find myself in doubt in relation to what course should be pursued on any question of public policy, I am governed by the judgment of those who I believe understand the question and its workings better than I can be expected to do. The Secretary of the Treasury has given the Senate to understand that he favors the continuance of the eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864, which is about to be abolished if the Senate sustain this bill. The Secretary of the Treasury believes that the Treasury of the United States will receive a large income from the continuation of this section of the existing law, and it is but fair that the section should be continued in force, because neither the Senate nor the country has yet been able to understand its workings and to know whether its continuation will be productive of evil or good. The whole evils of the system have grown out of previous legislation or previous execution of the law, and there has been no attempt, in my opinion, to give this section a satisfactory trial.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] gave the Senate a practical illustration of the working of the embargo upon cotton and other commodities of the South, and when those commodities were relieved from that embargo he gave you the result; and it was that while cotton came freely to the loyal people gold was comparatively low, and the commodities made from cotton were correspondingly low in price; but when an embargo was put upon the outlet or the reception of cotton gold increased to double its former rate, and all goods made from southern commodities increased in the same ratio. The operation of this section of the law is simply that since the Secretary of the Treasury has been able to secure this commodity to the country goods made from cotton have depreciated in price one half the amount they previously were before the thorough working of the system.

If the war was to end in a given time, limited in its extent, it might be that Congress should prohibit this trade; but the immense effort which is still necessary to continue the war and to subdue this rebellion requires that the finances of the country should remain strong, that the people should receive the commodities necessary for their subsistence and comfort as cheaply as possible. Whether or not the placing of this embargo upon southern commodities and preventing their being received into the trade of the world has been, or may be, of any advantage to the South I cannot say. I imagine, however, that everything which is prohibited from coming out will be increased in price, and the southern people will be like a certain minister who said he always preached stronger and better if his pocket was moderately supplied with funds, even if on Monday he was obliged to pay for the loan of the funds to give him that strength; and I believe that if an embargo is placed upon the commodities of the South it raises the price and it increases their strength to contend with us, because what little they are able to bring out commands such an enhanced price that they believe themselves to be rich whether they are or not.

I am opposed to granting private permits, and the trade of the country is opposed to permits of that character. The information which I receive from those engaged in business is that something be done to prevent the sale of permits in the commercial cities of the country. It is not for me here to suggest a proper remedy for the disgrace attending the execution of this law. I am not able nor am I prepared to make those suggestions; but being guided by the experience of the past I feel that if you pass this bill gold will increase in price and all the commodities used by the masses, by the poor of the country, will be at double their present rates, and your finances will be affected correspondingly.

Governing myself by these ideas, believing that the judgment of those having the matter in hand is better than mine, believing that the continuance of this system will not produce the disagreeable results which are suggested by those who are opposed to it, I shall give my assent to its continuance. I shall do so because I am unprepared to take the position that the war is over. I believe that it is necessary for Congress and the Executive to-day to use as much effort to surmount the terrible curse of this rebellion as has been found necessary for the past four years. I believe it is necessary to strengthen the currency, the trade, the industry of the country, in order to meet the demands which the laws you have recently passed require of them.

As one of the members of the Committee on Commerce, I favored the repeal of all privileges to trade with the people in the southern States, but on reflection I think it wiser to allow the law to stand as it is. I believe there have been corrupt practices on the part of persons in the Army and Navy, and civilians, to the detriment of the cause in which we are engaged. I think this whole matter should be concentrated in the hands of the Government. Let the Army, when it captures any of this property, turn it over to the Treasury, and let the Treasury dispose of the cotton and tobacco. Order to their homes all persons who obstruct the operations of the Government by bribes or otherwise. In that way I think considerable benefit would be derived from the operation of this law. Sufficient time has not elapsed to enable the Senate or the people of the country to judge whether it is of advantage or whether it is of disadvantage; and I trust the Senate will allow time enough to determine whether the complaint arises from the evils of the past or the evils of the present. I shall vote against the repeal, believing that thereby I act for the best interest of the country, and that I strike a deadlier blow against the rebellion than I should otherwise do. I shall so vote because those who are more familiar with the whole subject than I am desire the continuance of the section.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, and Wright—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Howe, McDougall, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wiley—15.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to insert as a new section:

"And be it further enacted, That all cotton seized by the military or naval authorities, or surrendered to said authorities, shall be delivered to the officers of the Treasury, and vouchers shall be given to the owner of such cotton entitling such owner or claimant personally to receive payment for such cotton at the end of the war, less taxes and expenses, in bonds of the United States bearing six per cent. interest, redeemable in twenty years.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move to add to the bill words "to the agent of the Government;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That such repeal shall not affect any contract of sale provided for by the section of the act hereby repealed, where actual delivery of the products has been made to the agent of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by adding the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall pass, utter, publish, or sell, or attempt to pass, utter, publish, or sell any note, token, device, scrip, bond, or other evidence of debt of the so-called confederate States, or any one of them, issued since the 1st day of January, 1861, he or they shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall on conviction thereof be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, and by imprisonment and confinement at hard labor, not exceeding ten years, at the discretion of the court, according to the aggravation of the offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the President be and is hereby authorized to declare free and unrestricted trade between the loyal States and the States in rebellion or any portion of the rebel States from time to time as he may deem expedient.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended by the addition of the words "and for other purposes."

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, in compliance with the requirements of the eighteenth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in obedience to law, an abstract of certain contracts made by the quartermaster's department; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of loyal citizens of Loudoun county, Virginia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes, or as volunteers in the Treasury [Army] or Navy, and to prevent frauds in the District jail in the city of Washington.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. J. A. GRISWOLD of New York, and Mr. S. S. COX of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 171) further to amend an act entitled "An act to facilitate the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 468) supplemental to an act to amend the several acts respecting copyright, approved February 3, 1831, and the acts in addition thereto and amendment thereof; and

A bill (H. R. No. 739) to regulate the fees of custom-house officers on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. WADE, at four o'clock, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and remained in executive session till half past four o'clock, when a recess was taken till seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate resumed its session at seven o'clock, p. m.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes or as volunteers in the Treasury [Army] or Navy, and to prevent frauds in the District jail in the city of Washington, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE TARIFF BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. CLARK, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. CLARK, FARWELL, and HENDRICKS.

DIRECT TAXES IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 171) to further amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill was passed by the Senate at the last session, and the House of Representatives has now passed it with amendments. I desire to have the amendments concurred in; I do not know whether it would be proper to do so before they are read. I have examined the amendments, and am instructed by the Committee of the Judiciary to ask that they be concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read.

The Secretary read the amendments, which were, after the word "commissioners" in line three of page 5 to insert "after the moneys received by them on the sale of such lands have been paid into the Treasury;" and to add to the bill the following sections:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That section seven of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes,'" be amended by striking therefrom the following words, that is to say, "or request the same to be struck off to a purchaser for a less sum than two thirds of the assessed value of said lots or parcels of ground."

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That in case application is made to pay tax on a part of any tract or tracts, lot or lots of land embraced in one valuation, it shall be competent for the commissioners, whether the valuation shall have been made by them or the State authorities, to apportion such valuation and tax in such manner as they may deem just and reasonable, and the tax so apportioned and fixed shall be a lien upon the different parts or parcels, the same as if each had been thus originally valued and assessed.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That each tax commissioner is hereby authorized and empowered to administer oaths or affirmations in all cases where the same may be required under this act, and any person who shall willfully take a false oath or affirmation in any such case shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to the punishment and penalties provided by the laws of the United States for the crime of perjury, and shall moreover forfeit the sum of $500.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That purchasers at any sale, persons redeeming or in whose behalf writs of possession may be issued, shall pay to the board of tax commissioners for their use the sum of two dollars for each certificate of sale, certificate of redemption, or writ, delivered, provided that the fees thus received, together with the salary of the commissioners for any district, shall not exceed the sum of $4,000 to each of said commissioners, and that any excess that may be received over that amount shall be applied in payment of clerks or other persons employed by said commissioners in pursuance of this act, so far as may be necessary, and the balance, if any, paid as the proceeds of the sales of lands sold by them are required to be paid.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That any board of tax commissioners may employ the requisite number of clerks, surveyors, and assistants, who shall receive such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and that any clerk appointed by said board may be specially empowered by the said Secretary to receive and collect moneys due for direct taxes, and rents for lands leased, and to pay them over to the said board: Provided, however, That they first give security in such sum and with such conditions as the said Secretary may direct, with sureties to be approved by him; and each tax commissioner shall be held to have entered on the discharge of his duties when he shall have given approved security, taken the required oath, received his commission, and reported at the office of the Secretary of the Treasury for duty, unless the said Secretary shall in any particular case direct otherwise.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That where lands or tenements have been, or shall hereafter be, sold under the provisions of the several acts of Congress relating to the sale of lands for direct taxes in insurrectionary districts, in tracts which, at the time of sale, were held by two or more freehold owners, in severally, any one of these owners, being otherwise entitled to redeem, shall be allowed to redeem for the piece or parcel of land held by him as a freehold owner, as aforesaid, on paying his proportionable part of the tax, penalty, costs, expenses, and interest—the said proportionable part to be ascertained by the said board of commissioners. And it shall be optional with the purchaser either to retain the residue of the tract purchased, after a redemption of a part, or to surrender his certificate of purchase to the commissioners, and receive back from them the amount of the purchase money paid, with interest; and in case he shall elect to retain the piece or parcel unredeemed, he shall surrender his certificate for the whole tract purchased, and the said board shall issue a new certificate for the piece or parcel of land retained.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

F. W. LANDER.

On motion of Mr. WADE, the bill (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Jean M. Lander, widow of F. W. Lander, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Mrs. Lander of $4,750 for services rendered and expenses incurred by F. W. Lander in making a reconnaissance for a railroad from Puget sound to the Mississippi river in 1854.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following report, memorial, and petition, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A report of the Attorney General, communicating information in relation to the property devised to the people of the United States by Captain Uriah P. Levy, late of the United States Navy;

A memorial of M. B. Duffield, United States marshal of the Territory of Arizona, praying for additional compensation; and

A petition of officers of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of New York, praying for an increase of their compensation.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 751) to provide for the settlement of private land claims in the Territory of Arizona, and for the survey thereof, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 107) to establish an additional judicial district in the State of New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of William Trevitt of Ohio, praying for compensation for consular services, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1866, reported it with amendments, and notified the Senate that he would call up the bill in a few minutes.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HARRIS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (S. No. 415) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, with an amendment; and as this is a matter which will excite no debate, I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the first section of the act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, shall not be so construed as in any way to affect the jurisdiction of the court in cases pending therein at the time of the passage of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

CIRCULATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," have instructed me to report it back without amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the twenty-first section of the national currency act so as to make it read as follows:

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That upon the transfer and delivery of bonds to the Treasurer as provided in the foregoing section, the association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered and countersigned as hereinafter provided, equal in amount to ninety per cent. of the current market value of the United States bonds so transferred and delivered, but not exceeding ninety per cent. of the amount of said bonds at the par value thereof, if bearing interest at a rate not less than five per cent. per annum; and the amount of such circulating notes to be furnished to each association shall be in proportion to its paid-up capital, as follows, and no more: to each association whose capital shall not exceed $500,000, ninety per cent. of such capital; to each association whose capital exceeds $500,000, but does not exceed $1,000,000, eighty per cent. of such capital; to each association whose capital exceeds $1,000,000, but does not exceed $3,000,000, seventy-five per cent. of such capital; to each association whose capital exceeds $3,000,000, sixty per cent. of such capital. And that $150,000,000 of the entire amount of circulating notes authorized to be issued, shall be apportioned to associations in the States and District of Columbia and in the Territories according to representative population, and the remainder shall be apportioned by the Secretary of the Treasury among associations formed in the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories, having due regard to existing banking capital, resources, and business of such States, District, and Territories.

The second section of the bill proposes to authorize, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the employment of one chief of the division of currency, one chief of the division of organization of banks, one chief of the division of general correspondence and statistics, and one chief of the division of redemption, with an annual salary of $2,200 each, and to make the salary of the Deputy Comptroller $3,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain to the Senate this bill, which only came to us to-day and is reported back at once, simply because I think the first section is very important. The second section classifies the employes of the Currency Bureau and increases their salaries. If the Senate is at all discontented with the increase of salary, I am perfectly willing to strike out the second section. The Committee on Finance were willing to do it. The first section is important in this respect: it is restrictive of the currency bill; it limits the circulation of the banks of large capital less than the amount now limited by law. The second limitation requires the circulation to be apportioned among the States, one half according to population and the other half according to banking resources. In this respect it is a copy of the provision in the original banking law, which was left out when the banking law was revised at the last session. I think the first section of great importance, and I hope, therefore, the Senate will act upon it promptly. The second section I am indifferent about. If any Senator desires to have it stricken out I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COWAN. I move that the bill be amended by striking out the second section.

Mr. HOWE. I hope that amendment will not prevail. In the first place I do not believe that the organization recommended there is prejudicial to the public service; I believe, on the contrary, it will prove highly beneficial; but the Senate may differ upon that point; and there is another reason why I would not vote to strike it out even if I thought it was not exactly judicious to raise these salaries at this time: it will necessitate sending the bill back to the House of Representatives. It is very important that we save the first section, and I hope the Senate will pass the bill as it comes to us from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say that I vote against this bill simply because it is impossible to know what it is. It is brought here at a time of the session when we cannot know its full effect upon existing laws.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say substantially that the reason why I vote against the bill is that assigned by the Senator from Indiana. If it was necessary that the laws in regard to the national banks should be changed, it seems to me there is no apology for the Bureau of Currency not having sent the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance earlier than the last hours of the session. I may be rather mentally obtuse, but I confess that I am yet unable to comprehend how the first section of this bill, which the Senator from Ohio deems to be of so much consequence, changes the law as it stands, from the casual reading that has been had. It has only been read here once, and has not been printed either in this body or in the other House, I believe.

In the next place, I am unwilling to vote for the second section, which lays the foundation for increasing the salaries paid to all the clerks in Washington, for I cannot conceive any reason why we should pay larger salaries to the clerks in the Bureau of Currency than to those in the Bureau of the Treasurer of the United States. They certainly handle as much money in the one case as in the other, and they are required to be as skillful and competent accountants in the one bureau as in the other, and I do not know why there is not the same responsibility, and why there ought not to be the same compensation in the one case as in the other.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am disposed to agree with the Senator from Iowa about the second section; but there was no division called for on it. There are but four clerks in the Currency Bureau whose salaries will be raised by this section, and the increase will be only $200 a year.

Mr. COLLAMER. That will be a foundation for every other case.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I said in the opening, I was perfectly willing to strike out the second section, but no one thought it of sufficient importance to call for a division. The first section does make an important change in the law, which ought to have been introduced at an earlier day; but that is not our fault. The House of Representatives did not send us the bill before, and it was one of that class of bills which we could not very well introduce here. I think it ought to be passed. It limits the circulation of the large banks. Under the present law a bank with a large capital can get ninety per cent. of its capital stock in circulating notes. By this bill it can only get from seventy to eighty per cent.

Another and still more important reason is that the banking system has gone on so rapidly that in Massachusetts her full share, according to a fair apportionment, has been reached, and so it is probably in one or two other States. The State of Ohio has a good deal of banking capital under this law. It is important now, before the limit is reached, that the capital should be fairly apportioned among the States. I think it necessary, therefore, to pass the bill at this session rather than at the next. In order to avoid all controversy about the bill I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to strike out the second section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will first be necessary to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to strike out the second section of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the question recurred on the amendment proposing to strike out the second section.

Mr. HOWE. I simply want to say that I do not believe there is a bank in the United States hiring that kind of service for the salaries we are paying, and I feel that the Government of the United States can pay as much as banks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time; and the question upon its passage being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Davis, Grimes, Hale, Howard, Powell, Riddle, Wade, and Wilson—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Farwell, Harding, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Richardson, Saulsbury, Stewart, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the bill was passed.

OFFICERS' SERVANTS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate. On motion of Mr. WILSON, the action of the House of Representatives was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending the 30th June, 1866, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending the 30th June, 1866, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the House agree to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, eighth, ninth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth amendments of the Senate.
2. That the Senate recede from their tenth amendment.
3. That the House agree to the sixth amendment of the Senate with the following amendments: strike out the words "insurance and" where they first occur in said amendment, and add after the word "cents" wherever it occurs, the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary."

To the seventh amendment of the Senate with the following amendment: strike out the words "this amount to supply a deficiency in."

To the seventeenth amendment of the Senate with the following amendments: insert in the eleventh line of said amendment after the word "Mississippi," the words "bands of Chippewas;" at the end of the thirteenth paragraph relating to the Chippewas, insert the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary;" in the first line of the fifteenth paragraph strike out the words "eleven hundred;" in the fourth line of the same paragraph, after the word "at" insert the words "a rate not exceeding;" at the end of the same paragraph insert the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary;" in the third line of the sixteenth paragraph after the word "at" insert the words "a rate not exceeding;" and at the end of the same paragraph add the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary;" in the third, fourth, and fifth lines of the seventeenth paragraph strike out the following words: "being four hundred and thirty-five thousand six hundred pounds of pork and flour in packages," and insert in lieu thereof the words "at a rate not exceeding," and at the end of the same paragraph add the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary."

To the section relating to the payment in coin with an amendment so that it will read as follows: "And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay in coin such of the annuities as by the terms of any treaty of the United States with any Indian tribe are required to be paid in coin."

To the section relating to the Stockbridge-Munsee tribe of Indians with the following amendment: insert after the words "subject to all duties" the words "and liabilities to taxation," and by adding to the title, "and for other purposes."

J. R. DOOLITTLE,
JAMES HARLAN,
JOHN CONNESS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN A. KASSON,
JOHN R. McBRIDE,
C. A. ELDRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to sixth, seventh, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-ninth, thirty-second, thirty-fourth, thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-ninth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth, forty-ninth, fifty-first, fifty-second, fifty-third, fifty-fifth, fifty-seventh, fifty-eighth, sixty-first, sixty-fourth, sixty-fifth, sixty-sixth and a half, sixty-sixth, sixty-seventh, sixty-eighth, seventy-second, seventy-third, seventy-fourth, seventy-fifth, seventy-sixth, seventy-seventh, seventy-eighth, seventy-ninth, eightieth, eighty-first, eighty-second, eighty-third, eighty-fifth, eighty-sixth, eighty-seventh, eighty-eighth, eighty-ninth, ninetieth, ninety-second, ninety-fourth, and ninety-fifth.

That the Senate recede from their first, third, fourth, fifth, eighth, eleventh, twelfth, sixteenth, twentieth, twenty-third, twenty-eighth, thirtieth, thirty-first, thirty-third, thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, sixtieth, sixty-first, sixty-second, sixty-third, sixty-ninth, seventy-first, ninety-first, and ninety-third.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line nine of said amendment, after the word "one" insert "or more," and strike out all after the word "district," in line ten, to the end of said amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: Insert, in lieu of the words stricken out, the words "also by inserting after the word 'warehouse,' and before the words 'and no drawback,' the following words: 'and the same fees shall be paid for exports as are charged to exporters for like services in the custom-house.'"

That the House recede from their disagreement to the tenth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out of said amendment the words "drawn in the States represented in Congress," and insert in lieu thereof the word "existing," and after the words "supplementary tickets" insert "of such lottery."

That the House recede from their disagreement to so much of the thirty-fifth amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out words, and agree thereto with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "on smoking tobacco of all kinds, and imitations thereof, not otherwise herein provided for, thirty-five cents per pound;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to so much of the thirty-eighth amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out words, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "on all cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, made wholly of tobacco or of any substitutes thereof, ten dollars per thousand cigars;" by inserting in the last paragraph relating to cigars, after the words "imprisonment not exceeding thirty days" the words "and any person furnished with such permit may apply to the assistant assessor or inspector of the district to have any cigars of their own manufacture counted; and on receiving a certificate of the number, for which such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be paid by the owner thereof, may sell and deliver such cigars to any purchaser, in the presence of said assistant assessor or inspector, in bulk or unpacked, without payment of the duty. A copy of the certificate shall be retained by the assistant assessor, or by the inspector, who shall return the same to the assistant assessor of the district. The purchaser shall pack such cigars in boxes, and have the same inspected and marked or stamped according to the provisions of this act, and shall make a return of the same as inspected to the assistant assessor of the district, and, unless removed to a bonded warehouse, shall pay the duties on such cigars within five days after purchasing them to the collector of the district wherein they were manufactured, and before the same have been removed from the store or building of such purchaser, or from his possession; and any such purchaser who shall neglect for more than five days to pack and have such cigars duly inspected, and pay the duties thereon according to this act, or who shall purchase any cigars from any person not holding such permit, the duties thereon not having been paid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court, and the cigars shall be forfeited and sold, one fourth for the benefit of the informer, one fourth for the officer who seized or had them condemned, and one half shall be paid to the Government."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fortieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: insert, in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out, the words, "that section one hundred and three be further amended by adding the following after the word 'vehicle,' where it occurs the second time in the section: 'Provided, That this section shall not apply to those teams, wagons, and vehicles used in the transportation of silver ores from the mines where the same are excavated to the place where they are reduced or worked.'"

That the House recede from their disagreement to the sixty-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: after the word "one" strike out the word "stamp," and insert, in lieu thereof, the words "one or more stamps."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with the following amendment: strike out the word "coal" in said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out, in addition to the word "act" the word "this" preceding said word.

JOHN SHERMAN,
EDGAR COWAN,
P. G. VAN WINKLE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
GEORGE H. PENDLETON,
S. HOOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain the report briefly. It is not precisely as I desired, nor as I think a majority of the Senate would desire, but under the circumstances is perhaps as good as could be expected. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE], containing a limitation upon the allowances for clerk hire, &c., is disagreed to by the House of Representatives. The limitation of the tax on miners is agreed to. The exception of Bibles and Testaments from the general tax on books is agreed to. There is an entire change made in the mode of taxing cigars. The tax reported by the committee of conference is ten dollars a thousand cigars, without regard to the quality or price. It will be remembered that the House proposed to tax tobacco in cigars sixty cents a pound. The Senate proposed a scale of taxes according to the value of the cigars. The committee of conference recommend that a uniform tax of ten dollars a thousand be applied to all cigars except cigarettes, which are taxed at a less rate. The amendment of the Senate taxing gross receipts of corporations is agreed to. The qualification of the tax on miners, proposed by the Senator from Nevada, is agreed to. The tax on savings banks is agreed to. The cotton section is entirely stricken out, the committee of conference not being able to agree on anything in regard to it.

Mr. HOWE. Leaving no tax on cotton?

Mr. SHERMAN. Leaving the old tax, two cents a pound. The new section in regard to the payments into the Treasury, and the reorganization of the payments of the Internal Revenue Bureau, is agreed to. The amendment of the Senate postponing until the 1st of July the tax of ten per cent. on State bank circulation is agreed to. The section offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY], giving a preference to existing State banks in the organization of additional national banks, is agreed to. The petroleum tax of the Senate is agreed to; that is, one dollar on a barrel of forty-five gallons. The tax on sales was disagreed to by the House and abandoned by the Senate committee. The section authorizing the appointment of revenue commissioners is agreed to.

There is a multitude of amendments of a minor character in regard to which I shall answer any Senator who feels an interest in them. I have named the principal subjects of controversy between the two Houses.

Mr. HOWE. I really believe that nearly the whole virtue of this bill is in that amendment agreed to by the Senate levying a tax on sales, and for myself I would rather lose the bill than see that tax surrendered. I am as convinced as I can be of anything that I do not positively know that that is the most beneficent and most equitable mode of levying taxes that there is known or has been suggested in our internal revenue system. Ever since 1861 I have been ambitious of seeing that tax tried. The Senate has at last agreed to try it, and I do not like to have the proposition surrendered without a further effort to secure the acquiescence of the House of Representatives in it. I am not without hope, indeed I have a pretty strong hope, that another committee of conference might secure such a result. I did not participate in the debate which took place on that proposition in the Senate; I listened to it; it did not affect the judgment which I formed three years ago in reference to this measure of taxation, and I am extremely anxious to see it tried. If, however, the Senate think it better to concur in the report of the committee, I of course must acquiesce in it, but I should like to know definitely the judgment of the Senate on it; and therefore I ask a division.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree entirely in the views that have been expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin. I am not willing to adopt this report without a further effort to secure that provision in the bill. I am aware that this tax on sales will fall as heavily on my constituents as on any part of the country, and perhaps more so; but there is no provision for raising revenue that has been suggested which commends itself so strongly to my judgment as this, and I desire that the Senate shall make one more effort to secure the passage of this section. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not concur in the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Senators before they dispose of this important bill ought to reflect on the condition of affairs by which we are surrounded. The tax on sales I voted for myself; I am in favor of it now; I regret that it was abandoned by the Senate conferees; but it must be remembered on the other hand that it was adopted here by only one vote, by the casting vote of the Vice President, and on another vote was only adopted by two majority; that it was rejected twice in the House of Representatives; that it is a new proposition, novel in its character; and to force it through the House upon the report of the committee of conference would be an extraordinary proceeding. A majority of the Senate conferees were opposed to it and voted against it when the question was up. As a matter of course, no other result could be expected from that conference.

On the other hand if you now defeat the report and send this question to another committee of conference it throws open the whole controversy, and it is not possible physically to enroll this bill if we should have another conference. At the next session the subject will be brought up. The Senator from New York asks me if we had not better lose the bill. I say not. There are very many important changes in this bill, changes of detail which will remove ambiguities and I think will add somewhat to the revenue. I do not think there is very much in the bill of vital importance, but all the changes which have been made are improvements; something has been secured, and I trust therefore that the Senate will not at this late hour defeat this bill. I shall vote for it myself with some reluctance because the three taxes upon which I most relied have been stricken out: first, the tax on sales; second, there is a total change in the tax on cigars; and third, the tax on petroleum is now very much reduced; but on the whole I prefer to vote for it rather than take the chance of getting a better bill at this late hour of the session.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator reminds me of another tax which has been surrendered, and that is the tax on cigars. I do not hesitate to say that if that was the only objection I had to the bill, I would vote against it on that ground alone, and I will. I do not give my assent to a proposition so monstrously unjust and unequal as to levy a tax of an even ten dollars a thousand on cigars, irrespective of their value—and they are sold for all sums from one dollar to $200 a thousand; an even tax of ten dollars on the poorest as on the best qualities of cigars. I do not just now think of anything more palpably unjust unless it be the practice of the highwayman. I cannot vote for a bill with that in it.

The Senator says it is late; there is work to be done to enroll this bill. That is so. I think another committee of conference might agree, and might report in the course of two hours, and a delay of two hours is not fatal to the passage of the bill if there are Senators who think it important to pass the bill. For myself I think it important to defeat the bill as it stands; but I do not ask a second committee of conference for this purpose.

The Senator has remarked upon a somewhat singular fact. He says that a majority of the conferees on the part of the Senate were opposed to the tax on sales. If that is so, I think at least the Senate owes it to its own judgment to try a conference with a majority who are in favor of it and see what they can do. It seems to me they do not make a proper effort to save the results of their own judgment until they have done that.

Mr. COWAN. I think, sir, one of the strangest spectacles that could be presented anywhere is that of Senators in the year of our Lord 1865 rising in the Senate and insisting upon a general tax on sales, that which for centuries has been deemed the most disastrous, ruinous, and mischievous of all modes of taxation. Mr. President, I would just as soon vote that you should place a tax-gatherer at every cross-roads in the country, levying toll on every one who passed. Certainly there is something to be learned from the experience of the past. Apart from the reason of the thing, a sufficient objection is the mischievous nature of thrusting the tax-gatherer into the private transactions of every man and woman all over the country, requiring an inquisition into every sale, and what is worse, a tax upon every sale; and the more sales, the more the country prospers, the more active commerce is, the more you burden it. The man who purchases at first hands gets the article with the tax which we now levy, because we now levy a tax upon the first sale of every commodity almost, and the consumer, the further he is removed away from the producer, the further he is from the center of production, the more his burdens increase. In the West, where the honorable Senator from Wisconsin resides, it would not be possible that he could get an article there without having paid three or four taxes upon it, while those on the sea-board would get but one or two.

As to the tax upon cigars, the very fact stated by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin is that fact which lies in the way of levying a tax upon cigars in any other way than that adopted by the committee of conference. What has been the obstacle in the way of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue according to the present law? Simply the fact that cigars cost from two dollars or $2 50 a thousand, up to $100 a thousand. How are you to discriminate between commodities which exist with all shades of difference? No other scheme has been devised, and no other can be devised, except the one that is now embodied in this report of the committee of conference, I think, which will realize anything like a proper return from this tax on cigars. There is the fact staring us in the face; we cannot make it otherwise. There may be a great many things which would be fit and proper subjects of taxation, if you could catch them at the right point and apply your tax-collecting machinery to them, but to do it upon cigars is utterly impossible.

Then, again, there is quite a mistaken notion as to the amount of revenue that can be levied in this country off tobacco. Tobacco here is not a royal monopoly. It may be grown by everybody and it may be grown everywhere; and upon the smallest area, say twenty feet square, an amount of it can be grown sufficient to supply the wants of any family in the country; but if you force this enormous burden on it the consequence will be that each man will become a producer for himself, and you will get no revenue at all. You had better be contented with the circumstances as you find them, and levy that which you can levy and not lose the whole by grasping too much. I have no doubt the committee came to a rational conclusion on both these topics.

Mr. HOWE. I want to say two or three words more to the Senate upon this question of a tax on sales. The Senator from Pennsylvania has told us again, what was told us repeatedly while the question was under discussion the other day, that the experience of the world had condemned this mode of taxation for two hundred years. I do not know how that is. American experience has not condemned it, for American experience never has tried it. I have been told that in Spain, Japan, Timbuctoo, and some other countries of that kind, the experiment had been tried and had not proved successful. I do not dispute the authenticity of the statement. I have simply to say that for myself I should not recommend our statesmen to go to Spain or Japan or Timbuctoo for a model of taxation. I ask that it may be tried here in America upon American trade and American business.

Again, it is objected to to-night, as it was objected to repeatedly the other day, upon the ground that it set your tax-gatherers to prying into the private affairs of every family in the land; and it is objected to in the face of the fact that your law as it stands calls upon your tax-gatherer to enter into the private affairs of every man so far as to take the amount of his income, which requires the most perfect knowledge of any man's affairs that any account of his business could require. It requires you to count his forks if they are made of silver, to go into his carriage-house, to go into his factories, to ascertain what business he is about to engage in to know how much he ought to pay for his license. This is required by a law as it stands, and yet they say it is odious to put a tax-gatherer into your houses of merchandise, your stores, to look at the books of your tradesmen to see what their sales are. Sir, is it any more offensive to a tradesman to report the amount of his sales than it is to a manufacturer to report the amount of his products for a month? The suggestion does not become us.

It is said it will be a restriction upon trade, it will embarrass the exchange of commodities. Look at it. What is it? It is a proposition to levy half a dollar on the sale of every $100 of merchandise. If a man sells $100 worth of merchandise, he must pay half a dollar tax for doing so; and that, it is said, is going to embarrass trade. Do you think it so, that a man is going to be bothered to sell $100 worth of goods by the fact that the law requires him to pay fifty cents tax? Mr. President, you cannot go into any two stores standing side by side on any street in any city of the United States and price $100 worth of goods where the prices will come within fifty cents or twice fifty cents of each other. I think I should be abundantly justified in going further and saying that you cannot ask any one tradesman occupying any one store, two days in succession, to price a lot of goods when he would give the same price within a dollar, and yet it is said it is going to embarrass trade to impose this tax!

Then it is objected to to-night as it was objected the other day that the further the goods go from the centers of business the more onerous the tax will become. That may be so. That peril falls upon the constituency I represent as much as upon any. But how do you raise your tax now? You require your manufacturer on the Atlantic, when he makes the first sale of his goods, to advance to the Government five per cent., or, as you now propose, six per cent. He advances that to the Government, and what does he get in return? He gets a roving commission from the Government authorizing him to levy that upon the community through the jobber, through the retailer, through the wholesale dealer; to levy that five per cent. back upon the community with just as heavy commissions for advancing it to the Government as he can get; for the manufacturer, when he pays that five per cent. to the Government, you know, charges it right over to the jobber, the commission merchant, the broker to whom he sells the goods, and he charges a commission for paying it to the Government; and the commission merchant charges what he pays and the profit he pays to the manufacturer over to the wholesale dealer; the wholesale dealer charges it over to the retail dealer, and the retailer to the consumer; and when your $100 worth of goods is passed from the manufacturer to the consumer it has not paid a half per cent. three or four times, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says will be done under this provision, but he has paid this six per cent. with from twenty-five to fifty per cent. of interest and commissions added to it. That is what he has done then. I know the goods will be sold two or three times, and will pay a half per cent. two or three times over; but is it not better for the community to pay their taxes in that way than to pay them as we have been paying them, hiring the manufacturers to advance the money to the Government, and getting authority from the Government in return to levy that upon us with just such commissions as they are pleased to demand for it? I prefer this milder way of collecting the tax. I believe I know it is a milder way of collecting the tax. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. There has been laboring in my mind an objection to this tax upon sales which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin does not seem to have apprehended, but which troubles me more than the objections I have heard named. I was not at all satisfied that there ought not to be some tax upon some sales, but it never entered into my head that when you were going to lay a tax on sales you were going down to the low water in which this is, taxing every person who takes out a license. If you took the wholesale dealers, large, extensive sellers, where it would be worth keeping the accounts, and stopped there, then perhaps the experiment would be worth trying. But it is a very vicious mode of taxation; I but state a general principle when I say that it is a very vicious mode of taxation which takes more money out of the people than the Government gets; which takes money from the people in the form of tax that does not reach the Treasury, unless the deduction be merely enough to pay the tax-gatherer. Whoever pays the tax on an article that he sells puts double the amount of the tax he pays on the price of the article when he sells it, and frequently a great deal more. No man advances the money to pay the tax upon an article that he buys to sell again, that does not put the amount of the tax on the price of the article, and double it if he can. I think the community generally find that they have more than double the amount of the tax to pay, with very few exceptions. It is agreed upon all hands that the articles of which the sales take place are generally sold two or three times, they will average more than twice, before they reach the consumer, probably, at least. Suppose the tax is a half per cent. on an article; that half per cent. is paid by the man who buys the article to sell; he computes that on the price and doubles it, making it one per cent.; the next man who buys of him to sell by retail again puts that on and doubles it; so that at last when the consumer buys the article he buys it with the tax put upon it and doubled each time, and yet only the original half per cent. reaches the Treasury. The people have to pay twice or thrice the amount the Government desires to obtain out of them. I call that a vicious mode of taxation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Wiley, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Powell, and Wilson—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Farwell, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Sausbury, and Ten Eyck—9.

So the amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 774) to establish certain post roads.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedmen's Saving and Trust Company.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) to encourage enlistments and to promote the efficiency of the military forces of the United States.

PRIVILEGES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee, to whom the communication of the Secretary of the Navy of the 28th of February, in answer to a resolution of inquiry of the Senate of the 3d of that month, was referred, to consider and report what part of the same was called for and what was not, and in what particular, if any, the same was objectionable, beg leave to report. The committee quote the resolution, and then proceed to make their report, which I send to the Chair to be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The only information that the Secretary was instructed to give was in relation to the particular matters mentioned in the resolution. What may have been said by Senators while it was under consideration was not submitted to him, either for approval or censure, nor was he called upon or authorized to vindicate himself or any person in his Department from allegations made or supposed to have been made in the Senate. However, the person supposing himself assailed is not without redress; he may appeal to the public judgment through the press, or request the Senate to constitute a committee of inquiry as to the truth of the charges; but there exists no right in an officer of the Government, in answer to specific inquiries, to comment on the debates of the body, nor to vindicate his conduct, either individually or officially, in any matters not called for in the inquiries of the Senate. If differences exist between any member of the Senate and a citizen not a member, it is not the proper province of the body to settle them. Their duties are limited to matters proper for legislation, or to such as refer to the public good, and require investigation.

With these views, it is the opinion of your committee that the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, as accompanying the communication of the Secretary, should not have been sent to the Senate by the latter officer:

1. Because the first part of it does not profess to relate to the Senate resolution, but to be in response to the allegations of Hon. JOHN P. HALE against the writer.

2. Because the remainder of it merely gives a history of his conduct in attempting to relieve the garrison of Fort Sumter in 1861—an attempt worthy of praise, but which has not the most remote connection with a single inquiry embraced by the resolution.

The committee therefore recommend the adoption of this resolution:

Resolved, That the letter to the Secretary of the Navy from the Assistant Secretary should not have been communicated in answer to the Senate resolution of February 3, 1865; and that the Secretary of the Senate be directed to return the same to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FOSTER. I merely wish to say that I do not concur in recommending the adoption of the resolution reported by the committee.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I now move that the order for the printing of that document be rescinded.

The motion was agreed to.

OFFICERS' SERVANTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up the civil and miscellaneous appropriation bill, which I reported a short time ago.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. With the consent of the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I desire to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs in regard to certain amendments to a joint resolution of ours, which have come from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia have authorized me to report an agreement to certain amendments and a disagreement to other amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants, and for other purposes. I desire to have the report read and acted upon at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I supposed the Senator merely wanted a committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON. It will not take long to read the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am informed that it will take a long time to dispose of it.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the amendments which the committee have reported should be agreed to by the Senate without reading them, and that the others be disagreed to, and that we then ask for a committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. GRIMES. I hope no such motion as that will be adopted, that we agree to the sections the committee have agreed to without hearing them read. I am told that one section of some of these amendments is to confer brevet pay on all the innumerable brevet officers we have been making. It will take five millions from the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. The committee disagreed to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must ask for the regular order of business.

Mr. WILSON. I will move at once to disagree to all the amendments of the House of Representatives to our amendments to this joint resolution, and to ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Vice President was authorized to appoint the committee; and Mr. WILSON, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. BUCKALEW were appointed on the part of the Senate.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

The Secretary was proceeding to read the first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill has never been read in this body. It ought to be read seriatim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOOT.) The bill will be read, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance will be considered as they occur in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out the following item:

For survey of and for buying out Seekonk river, from Pawtucket to India Point, in Providence, $1,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope that very small appropriation will not be stricken out. It is a very great convenience to have this improvement, and the amount has been estimated by the Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be glad to let a good many things go, but as this bill was sent to us to-day, as it has not been printed, we have endeavored to confine the appropriations to such objects as have been declared by the Departments to be indispensably necessary, and this has not even been estimated for.

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg the Senator's pardon; it is the estimate of the Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. What Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have before me the printed estimates, and I find no such thing there.

Mr. ANTHONY. The estimate for this work has been sent in since the printed estimates were submitted.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had no information before the Committee on Finance upon the subject, and as a matter of course Senators cannot expect us to allow matters to remain in the bill that are not contained in the regular estimates, and upon which we had no information and had no time to send to get any.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was a good reason for the committee in not agreeing to recommend the appropriation, but I understand from my colleague in the House of Representatives that the Department made this estimate and recommended the appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. This item is one of many more such, and I ask the Senate to stand by the Committee on Finance in their action. This bill was sent to us to-day, and if we take the assertions of a Senator here as to what a member of the other House may have said was estimated for at the other end of the avenue, when we have before us official documents containing no such estimate, we shall load down this bill to an extent that Senators would be startled at.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator will allow this amendment to lie over for the present, I think I can have the estimate here very soon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot agree to that; we must go on in regular order. The bill will probably be reported to the Senate some time after midnight, and the Senator can then have another vote on this question. I prefer to go on with it regularly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert:

For beacon lights at the mouth of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For renovations and repairs at Windmill Point light station, Lake Saint Clair, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For rebuilding outer-range light at Cedar Point, Sandusky bay, Ohio, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For beacon lights at Portage entry, Michigan, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following clause:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to properly fit up and furnish such rooms in the basement of the Capitol as the Supreme Court may desire for consultation and library purposes for the court, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso to the appropriation for lighting the President's house, the Capitol, Pennsylvania avenue, &c.:

Provided, That in order to enable the Washington Gas-Light Company to extend their pipes, and to accommodate the public in the remoter parts of the city, said company is hereby authorized to increase its capital stock $500,000, subject to the same liability as is provided in the eleventh section of the original act of incorporation, approved July 8, 1848.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For casing with stone and erecting a wall in front of the north basement of the Old Capitol building, so as to correspond with the south basement already completed, and to reimburse the money paid for casing the south basement, namely, $1,495, making $4,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, which was to strike out the item "to grade East Capitol street, $3,000," was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the item:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to have Pennsylvania avenue cleaned and swept prior to the inauguration on the 4th of March, 1865, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following items:

For repairs to Pennsylvania and South Carolina avenues, east of the Capitol, $5,000.

For continuing the flagstone pavement from the flagstone pavement now down in front of the President's to Seventeenth street, in front of the War Department, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out:

For building a sewer on Pennsylvania avenue from Seventh street to Twentieth street, $27,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause making an appropriation for surveying the public lands in Wisconsin the words "at a rate not exceeding five dollars per mile."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the item appropriating for surveys in Minnesota the words "at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, seven dollars for township, and six dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in Dakota Territory the words "at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, seven dollars for township, and six dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in Nebraska Territory the words "at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, six dollars for township, and five dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in Kansas the words "at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, six dollars for township, and five dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in Colorado Territory the words "at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, eight dollars for township, and seven dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the item of appropriation for surveys in Nevada the words "at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the item appropriating for surveys in New Mexico the words "at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in California the words "at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in Oregon the words "at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of the clause appropriating for surveys in Washington Territory the following words "at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For compensation to Charles B. Stuart for services as engineer, under appointment by the President, in examining, revising, and reporting upon the survey and estimates for the several proposed gunboat canals, $2,500.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is clearly a private claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause:

For building a custom-house at Portland, Maine, in addition to the sum appropriated by Congress at its last session, $75,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, if he thinks it advisable, expend a sum, not exceeding $25,000, in the purchase of ground adjoining the site of the old custom-house on Fore street, now owned by the United States, for the purpose of enlarging the same, or the Secretary may exchange the lot now owned as aforesaid for a more eligible one, if the same can be procured; but no money shall be paid or agreed to be paid by the United States in consideration of such exchange, and no transfer, assignment, or conveyance of property by the United States shall be made upon such exchange, except a conveyance, on its behalf, by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the interest of the United States in the lot aforesaid and the building thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that to be stricken out?

Mr. SHERMAN. As I said before the bill came to us to-day, and we had no official information on the subject of the custom-house at Portland. At the last session we appropriated, I think, $60,000 for building a custom-house at Portland, and it seems from the proviso attached to this appropriation that there was some doubt about the location of the custom-house; at least there is provision made for a change of the location, and we thought until that question was determined we ought not to appropriate any more money for this purpose. An explanation has been made to me since the action of the committee which makes me doubt somewhat the propriety of that action; but let the amendment be agreed to now, and before the bill is reported to the Senate I shall have time to confer with the members of the committee in regard to it and perhaps to get more information.

Mr. JOHNSON. The papers from the Treasury Department in relation to this particular improvement, which, as I understand, satisfied the Committee of Ways and Means and the other House, were not sent by that House to our committee with the bill, and therefore have not been before the Committee on Finance. I understand that the statement from the Treasury Department satisfied the House committee that the appropriation was not only a proper appropriation but one about which there should not really be any doubt. I rather think, therefore, under the circumstances, it would be better to reject this amendment.

Mr. COLLAMER. I trust we may not agree to this amendment. I think it has arisen from some misunderstanding of the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain to Senators again that the Committee on Finance never saw this appropriation bill or heard of it until to-day, and we had no official communication from anybody in regard to this item. It was not contained in any estimate of appropriations submitted to us. We knew very well that a year ago an appropriation had been made toward building a custom-house at Portland, and this provision on its face seemed to indicate that there was a doubt about the site. Under these circumstances we thought it was not wise to continue the appropriation until that question was settled. A statement has since been made to me that we shall find official information on the subject by sending to the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not care whether the amendment is now concurred in or non-concurred in, because by the time the bill is reported to the Senate I may be able to get the information. We are simply acting in the absence of information.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For compensation of the revenue agent stationed at New York, in addition to the sum authorized by the act of June 30, 1864, including $1,000 for the current fiscal year, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For one thousand copies of a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to revenue, commerce, and navigation, now in course of preparation for the press at the Treasury Department, such sum as may be necessary therefor in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not exceeding $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William Handy, of the Treasury Department, for extra clerical services, such sum as may be found due, not exceeding $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item:

For compensation to John Hopley for services in indexing the national currency act, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the third section of the bill, which was as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the ninth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, appropriating thirty per cent. of the cost of engraving the special dies for internal revenue stamps, not to exceed in amount $20,000, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors, Butler & Carpenter, the said sum of $20,000 in full of all claims for indemnity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fourth section of the bill, which was as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $20,000 appropriated at the present session of Congress to defray the legislative expenses of the Territory of Nebraska for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1866, shall and may be appropriated for and applied to the payment of the territorial militia called into service by the Governor of said Territory to protect the frontier settlements against the depredations of Indians in the fall and winter of the year 1864; which sum shall be disbursed and paid by the Governor of the Territory, who shall take vouchers therefor; and no other or further sum of money shall be appropriated to defray the legislative expenses for the year aforesaid. And the Governor as aforesaid shall, within one year, make a detailed report of his action hereon to the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth the several sums paid, and the names of the persons to whom paid, under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the sixth section, which was as follows:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $10,432 45 be, and is hereby, appropriated to pay Madison Sweetzer, upon condition that the said Madison Sweetzer shall, first, by a good and sufficient deed, convey to the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to the following lands, conveyed by the United States to Joseph Richardville, senior, and Joseph Richardville, junior, by treaty at St Mary's, October 6, 1818, to wit: the west half of section No. 26, the east half of section No. 28, and section No. 27, township five south, range four east, lying in the county of Auglaize and State of Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the seventh section of the bill, which was as follows:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to adjust and allow to the State of New York the claim of that State against the United States for duties paid by that State upon arms imported and purchased in bond at New York in the month of June, 1863, not exceeding the amount shown to have been actually paid therefor.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that section will not be stricken out. It is a just claim, an amount actually paid by the State, which should be refunded.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is like a good many other claims that will be put upon the bill if it be allowed to stay there. We have no official information on the subject except this: the Committee on Finance considered the matter two years ago, when they had ample leisure, and rejected the claim. These arms were imported by the State of New York on her own account, for herself, and she paid the duties on them. Other States did the same. We have no information on the subject before us recently; the bill came to us to-day, and there was no time to consider whether any change of facts had occurred since we examined it before. The State of Ohio, and other States, I believe, have presented similar claims.

Mr. HARRIS. My information on this subject is, that in the case of other States the duties were remitted, and that these arms came in a little too late for that, the limit fixed by law having expired, so that the State of New York was obliged to pay the duties; but in other cases the duties were remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. That is my information on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. When were the arms imported?

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot state the date, but it is since the rebellion began.

Mr. MORGAN. I send to the Chair the deposition of the commissary general of the State of New York in regard to these arms, and ask to have it read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

City and County of New York, ss:

James A. Farrell being duly sworn, says that he is commissary general of ordinance of the State of New York; that early in the month of June, 1863, under the direction of the Governor of the State of New York and the military board appointed by the Legislature of the said State, he entered into contracts with the following individuals for the purchase, in behalf of the State, of 9,664 Enfield rifled muskets, then in bond in the city of New York, namely: Frank Otard, New York, 2,664; Schuyler, Hartley, & Graham, New York, 2,000; Merwin & Bray, New York, 4,000; Naylor & Company, New York, 1,000. That at and about the time of the execution and closing of said contracts he labored under the impression that, inasmuch as the said arms were purchased for the use of the State and for the purpose of maintaining its laws and the laws of the United States, that under the supposed existing provisions of law the duty thereon would be remitted by the Government. That after the said contracts had been entered into, and upon an examination of a previous law of the United States, exempting from duty all arms imported for the use of the State, it was discovered that the time of such exemption had expired. That thereupon a provision was inserted in said contracts by which the said contracting parties agreed for and in behalf of the State to advance the duties on said arms, the money so advanced to be refunded by the State. That the said parties under and by virtue of the provisions of said contracts paid for the said duties to Hiram Barney, Esq., collector of the port of New York, the sum of $37,599 55; that said sum of $37,599 55 has been refunded and duly paid to the said contracting parties by the State; that the annexed bill contains a true and accurate statement of the duties paid and everything connected therewith, and reference is hereby made to the same as a part of this affidavit. That said duties were paid under a written protest executed by the undersigned in behalf of the State, to the following effect: that said duties should not be exacted on said arms, because they were the property of the State of New York, to be used only for her defense and in the defense of the United States against the enemies of the said State and the said United States; that they were not merchandise subject to the laws of trade and commerce, or for sale in any wise, but strictly and entirely for public use by the State as a member and component portion of the United States; that it could not be reasonable nor lawful for the Government to tax itself in one of its members for the means of its own preservation, it might be of its very existence; that a portion of the arms aforesaid are now in actual use of the New York State militia, now in the service of the United States, and that said arms are to be used only in the enforcement of the laws of the United States and the State of New York and for the protection of the citizens thereof. And deponent further says and submits, that because of the premises, and inasmuch as said arms were purchased to be used in defense of the State and of the United States, and for the protection of the citizens and the enforcement of the laws thereof, that the said sum of $37,599 55 in coin should be refunded and paid to the State. And deponent further says that the said sum so paid as aforesaid is a part and parcel of an appropriation made by the Legislature of the State of New York, an act entitled "An act to provide and repair arms and equipments of the militia of the State, and for the public defense," passed April 24, 1863. That said money when refunded to the State is to be used only for the purposes aforesaid. Deponent further saith not.

JAMES A. FARRELL,
Commissary General of Ordnance New York State.
Sworn before me this 11th day of December, 1863.

JAMES H. COLEMAN,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. The case made by the commissary general of New York shows that the arms were contracted for and imported after the expiration of the law, which lasted, if I remember right, for only one year. At that time it was the policy of the Government not to import any more arms. When the State governments went to foreign markets, competing with the national Government in the purchase of arms, it tended very largely to advance the price. Since the reading of the paper commenced I remember more distinctly the circumstances of the case. This very claim was referred to the Committee on Finance on the presentation of a petition, and we concluded that it was not wise to extend the provisions of that law. The claim was then rejected; and it is now presented at this late day, when we have no opportunity to examine the question. New York is ably represented here, and can present the matter at some other time. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that in no case has any State been required to pay duties on arms imported by it except in this single instance. It may be, and I understand that it is, the fact that the law which exempted States from paying duties on arms had expired when these arms were imported; and it was in consequence of this that the State of New York was obliged to pay these duties. If the State of New York is obliged to pay them, and this amount is not to be refunded, it is an exception to a rule which has no other exception. There is no case, I apprehend, in which any State has been required to pay duties on arms imported by it during this war except New York, and I hope this distinction will not be made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senator if the duties have been refunded in all other such cases.

Mr. HARRIS. These arms were ordered before the law expired, and came in a little too late to come under the law.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are there any other cases either under prior or subsequent laws?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to, strike out the tenth section of the bill, which was as follows:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to increase the clerical force in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia, and the aggregate salaries of said clerks shall not exceed the sum of $9,000; which amount is hereby appropriated out of any other money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the eleventh section, as follows:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That in addition to the appropriations hereinbefore allowed for the branch mint at San Francisco, in California, the following sums respectively are hereby in like manner appropriated, viz: for wages of workmen and adjusters, $69,450; for incidental and contingent expenses, repairs, and wastage, $106,529 29.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to understand from the chairman why this item is to be stricken out. I presume the appropriations were made in accordance with estimates.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can tell the honorable Senator why that is to be stricken out. The honorable Senator is a member of the Committee on Finance, and we looked to him for information in regard to California. We had a meeting to-day, the only day we could have a meeting on this bill, and he was not there to give us any information about it. We had no official information on the subject. We have appropriated enormous sums for the support of the mint in California, larger than ever before. The reason why they want $100,000 for incidental expenses in the mint at California we were not presumed to know by intuition. We had not the information from the honorable Senator who represents that State, nor had we any other information. We had not the opportunity to inquire at the Treasury Department, because we had no time. We had no official information of any kind. If the Senator can satisfy us that it is necessary I shall be very glad to have the information from him.

Mr. CONNESS. I did not know that I was going to develop a lecture on myself by the inquiry I made. It would be very difficult for me to be omnipresent; I do not think it is for man to have that exact character on earth; and I do not think I am amenable to the charge made by the honorable Senator indirectly of a neglect of my constituents' interests. I believe I was for an hour and a half or more pending that time in a committee of conference on Indian affairs that this body ordered me to be a member of, where not only the interests of California were concerned, but of the entire country; and, Mr. President, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance could hardly expect in fairness to depend on me to give that Senator information touching these appropriations. He is in direct connection with the Treasury Department; they are expected to know the reasons why their recommendations are made; and it cannot be expected that I should be able to explain why $60,000 is necessary to pay workmen in the mint simply because the mint is located in the city of San Francisco, or that I should be able to give the exact reasons why $100,000 are necessary to meet wastage and incidental expenses in that establishment. But it appears that the Senator assigns the minutiae of all this knowledge as my particular share of duty and province, and as a means of developing all this knowledge on my part he proposes to strike out the appropriation.

I simply have to say to the Senator that I do not think that is reason enough. I suppose the appropriations were inserted in accordance with estimates prepared by the Treasury Department upon the exact facts and knowledge that they have concerning that great institution, the branch mint at San Francisco, which now annually costs for us $20,000,000. I suppose the chairman of the committee was not very earnest in his desire to strike out this appropriation, and intended to make it a reminder to me that I should do all my duty. Well, Mr. President, I may fail in some of it; I suppose I do in much of it; but I generally try to be at some end of the line when matters are going on which concern the people that I in part represent here. I suppose the Senate will vote to keep these appropriations in the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to strike out the thirteenth section of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is scarcely worth while to read the section, as it relates to the reorganization of the various bureaus of the Treasury Department, and provides for heads of divisions in the various bureaus, &c. The Committee on Finance were satisfied that it was not now necessary to make these changes. We have already provided for the Revenue Bureau, and placed a pretty large sum at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to give additional compensation in certain cases where it is necessary; and we believed that that was all the legislation necessary at the present time in regard to these bureaus. At any rate, we were not prepared at this late period of the session to increase the salaries of all the employes in the Department. The section involves a reorganization of the leading bureaus of the Treasury Department, with a large increase of pay under the name of reorganization, and the establishment of new officers as heads of divisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fourteenth section, as follows:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be reorganized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into—

Mr. SHERMAN. That need not be read. The tax bill which has just been passed provides for the continuance of that arrangement in the Treasury Department for another year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fifteenth section, in the following words:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, namely:

For salary of cashier in the United States depository at Louisville, $1,800.

For salary of book-keeper in the United States depository at Louisville, $1,500.

For salary of assistant cashier in the United States depository at Louisville, $1,320.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Louisville, $1,320.

For contingent expenses of the United States depository at Louisville, $625.

For salary of cashier in the United States depository at Chicago, $1,600.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Chicago, $1,000.

For contingent expenses of the United States depository at Chicago, $400.

For salary of cashier in the United States depository at Pittsburg, $1,500.

For salary of assistant cashier in the United States depository at Pittsburg, $1,000.

For salary of watchman in the United States depository at Pittsburg, $900.

For contingent expenses of the United States depository at Pittsburg, $200.

For salary of cashier in the United States depository at Baltimore, $1,800.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Baltimore, $1,500.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Baltimore, $1,200.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Baltimore, $1,000.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Baltimore, $900.

For salary of messenger in the United States depository at Baltimore, $900.

For contingent expenses of United States depository at Baltimore, $300.

For salary of cashier in the office of the United States Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $2,500.

For salary of book-keeper in the office of the United States Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $2,000.

For salary of cashier in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $2,000.

For salary of the assistant cashier in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $1,500.

For salary of assistant cashier in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $1,200.

For salary of assistant cashier in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $1,000.

For salary of the teller in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $1,500.

For salary of the book-keeper in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $1,500.

For salaries of two clerks in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $2,500.

For salary of clerk in the United States depository at Cincinnati, $1,200.

For contingent expenses of the United States depository at Cincinnati, $2,000.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to have some information from the honorable chairman of the committee with regard to the reason for this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state to the Senator that is a section changing altogether the mode of paying this class of officers. I cannot, without some difficulty, without looking at the law, say how much these officers receive now. This is some increase; I cannot say how much. I have been trying to get the information. I am satisfied that the Senate ought not now, for the first time, to fix the pay of all these officers without any other information than we have at present. It is very probable that the scale of prices fixed in the section is reasonable and proper; but we have no information on the subject—I speak of the Committee on Finance. This is an attempt to classify and pay, by special appropriation, various officers that have heretofore been paid out of the customs appropriation. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the committee striking out the section will be concurred in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the sixteenth section, in the following words:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $9,881 25 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of salaries of clerks and others indicated in the preceding section, and of contingent expenses for the three months ending June 30, 1865.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the seventeenth section, in the following words:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized to pay A. D. Collingsworth, O. H. Vedder, Edward R. Sherman, Charles C. Adams, Theophilus H. Gladwin, Samuel W. Tucker, and the other persons employed by the deputy provost marshal of the District of Columbia in the enrolling office of said marshal, for night work and special service performed in pursuance of a contract between said clerks and said provost marshal, such accounts being properly certified upon the rolls, or by said deputy provost marshal; and the amount necessary therefor is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open except persons actually mustered or commissioned or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies charged with being spies.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say, in passing, that this is rather a new feature in an omnibus bill, a question of high constitutional privilege, involving the rights and liberty of the citizen, in regard to which men talk about chartered rights and privileges, &c. We thought it too grave a subject for the Committee on Finance to act upon. It is put into the appropriation bill, and we left it for the Senate to dispose of. I presume the reading of the section has not excited attention, but it will discharge all the persons in custody for military offenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) Does the Senator from Ohio move to strike out that section?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; we thought we would leave that to the discretion of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it presents no question for consideration, unless a motion is made.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to strike it out, and call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. COWAN. I think that is a section which every man in this Chamber, at all times and under all circumstances, should vote for and insist upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion to strike out is not now in order. Let us go through with the bill first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee do not recommend any amendment to this section, and the amendments of the committee should be first considered, according to the uniform custom of the Senate.

The next amendment was to strike out lines thirteen and fourteen of section nineteen, making appropriations for deficiencies, in the following words:

For tool and siege trains for armies in the field, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nineteen, to strike out the following paragraph:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the Indian service in Utah, being for money advanced by Brigham Young while Governor and ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs, found due and allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, $38,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause:

To pay H. A. Klopfer for ten months' services as a laborer in the office of the Attorney General, at forty dollars per month, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause:

For continuing work at the Brooklyn navy-yard, to wit: for piling, filling in, and building crib-work on cob dock for gun park, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the twentieth section, in the following words:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the true construction of the sixth section of the "Act respecting the organization of the Army, and for other purposes," approved August 23, 1843, and of all laws relating in any way to the allowance of double rations to officers, authorizes such allowance to the following officers, and to no others whatever: to the General-in-Chief commanding the armies of the United States; to each general officer commander-in-chief of a separate army actually in the field; to each general officer commanding a geographical division embracing one or more military departments; and to each officer commanding a military geographical department; and that any general order or regulation or usage allowing double rations to a chief of staff, or any other officer than those above mentioned, is illegal and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay the interest on the debt due the Smithsonian Institution in coin, as the interest on other permanent debts due by the United States prior to the present rebellion have been and are paid.

Mr. GRIMES. I have a word to say on that subject. I am opposed to the adoption of that amendment. In the first place, I do not know any reason why there should be a distinction made between a debt that is due to the Smithsonian Institution and a debt due to anybody else by the United States Government. I understand that by some construction or other the Treasury Department have decided that this is a kind of trust debt; and that from this time henceforth they intend to pay the interest upon what they call the trust fund in gold. The purpose of this amendment is to make this retrospective, and to pay some forty thousand dollars in currency, being the difference between the amount which has hitherto been received by the Smithsonian Institution and that which they claim they ought to have received and would have received if this money had been paid to them in coin. The Smithsonian Institution is a very wealthy corporation, and is able to reimburse itself, and to rebuild and refit the buildings which have been recently destroyed. It will be remembered that when Mr. Smithson made this bequest, or shortly after he made it, the Government created a corporation. That corporation, or their trustee, saw fit to invest their money in Arkansas bonds. Those bonds mostly turned out to be valueless. The Government, however, assumed it, and we now pay, and have for many years paid, the Smithsonian Institute upward of $30,000 a year upon this amount of $515,000, I think it is, which is the amount of the permanent fund of the Smithsonian Institute.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to ask the Senator whether the Government did not make that investment in Arkansas bonds. I think it was not an act of the corporation, but of the Government.

Mr. GRIMES. It is perfectly immaterial, so far as this question is concerned, whether the Government made it, or whether the regents of the Smithsonian Institute made it directly themselves; for if the Government made it, the Government made that investment at the instance and the request of the regents of the Smithsonian Institute.

Mr. SUMNER. No; it was before the organization; before there were regents.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, the amount of the fund belonging to the Smithsonian Institution is $515,000. They expended in the building, on the public reservation, $325,000. It is claimed by them that to put the roof on the building, and put it in about the condition it was in before the fire there will be required from thirty-six to forty thousand dollars; but to improve it as they want to improve it, to make it entirely fire-proof, to change its construction very materially, they say they have the opinion of an Army engineer, Colonel Alexander, but who is no architect, no expert, and whose judgment, therefore, is worthless in a matter of this kind, that it will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000. This Institution, beside the $515,000 upon which we are paying them the interest, have accumulated from that interest $75,000 in Indiana State bonds, which are good; $53,500 in Virginia bonds, which are not of much value; $12,000 in Tennessee bonds; $500 in Georgia bonds; and $100 in Washington city bonds. Then they have in cash $20,000, and they have in gold $26,200, which is worth $52,000 to-day in currency. So it will be observed that they have in available funds, saying nothing about the Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia, and Washington bonds, $95,000, beside $26,200 in gold.

I have heard it said that we ought to pay the Smithsonian Institution this money in gold, because we pay some of the Indians by treaty stipulation in gold. I think the Senators who are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs will bear testimony to the Senate that we have paid gold to no Indians except where there was an express agreement in the treaty that payment should be made in coin. We have had, and have, an abundance of treaties with the Indians; we hold their money in trust; but in no instance, I undertake to say, has the money been paid to these Indians in gold except when there was an express stipulation in the treaty that it should be paid in gold. I know of no reason why there should be an exception made in favor of this rich corporation, the Smithsonian Institution—why they should be treated any better than our Indian tribes are treated.

Mr. COLLAMER. Are they not paid in gold?

Mr. GRIMES. I undertake to say that there are not and have not been any Indians paid in gold except where there was an express stipulation in the treaty that they should be paid in coin. I asked the gentlemen on the Committee on Indian Affairs, when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration the other day, if that was not so, and they said it was so. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. LANE] bowed his head and said it was so. There are treaties made with the Indians, I admit, by which we have agreed to pay them in coin; and then there are other treaties in which we have not that stipulation; but where that stipulation is not embodied in the treaty we do not pay them in coin. There is lying on your table at this moment a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, asking that we shall do for these Indians precisely what the Smithsonian Institute asks we shall do for them—that we shall pay them in coin in the future. But this Senate, so far as I know, has refused to do that; so far as I am informed, the Committee on Indian Affairs have utterly refused to do it. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs present, nor my colleague; but there are gentlemen here, I think, who know what the facts are in regard to the payment of these Indians. Now, I ask, if it be true, and I think it will be demonstrated in a few minutes that it is true, that this is the method in which we treat the Indians whose funds we hold in trust, is there any very substantial reason why we should deviate from this rule in favor of this corporation, the Smithsonian Institute?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance have no doubt at all about this proposition so far as it is now reported. It is true that a proposition was submitted to the committee that the back payments already made should be made equal to gold. That we rejected on the ground that the money having been received by the corporation, without any objection, they certainly cannot now present a legal claim against the United States to make good any loss which may have accrued from their taking a depreciated currency. But upon the main question, that they are entitled to the interest of this trust fund in gold, we had no doubt. All the permanent debt of the United States is now payable in coin. That has been the established policy of the Government since the foundation of the Government, and I think it never has been departed from. Let me put this case: suppose this corporation, instead of allowing this money to remain simply as a trust fund in the Treasury of the United States, had taken bonds of the United States registered in the ordinary way, which they had a right to do, and left them in the Treasury Department; they would have drawn their interest in gold precisely as the holder of any other bonds would have done. I am informed that this now stands as a registered debt.

Mr. GRIMES. How long has that been so? Mr. SHERMAN. Always, I presume. It stands as a trust debt. There is no difference between them.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is the distinction between this case and that of the Indians?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will mention that in a few moments.

There is, therefore, no distinction between this case and any other portion of the permanent debt of the United States. This corporation, whether rich or poor, whether it is a charitable one, or one making money on its own account, would have the right to demand of the Government the same interest that is paid to any other bondholder of the United States. The fact that this money stands to the credit of this corporation as a trust fund in the Treasury Department only strengthens that obligation, because it is a general rule of equity, as well as a rule of law, that a trust fund must be treated more favorably than any other fund. Therefore the United States, having assumed the burden of a trustee, would be held in a court of equity to a more rigorous rule than it would be even where it stands upon its legal rights. If the United States is bound to pay to any other class of bondholders interest in gold it certainly should do so to this corporation, whether it be rich or poor, whether it be a charitable one or one making money on its own account. It seems to me, therefore, the proposition is plain.

But the Senator says that we have refused to do this with the Indians. The difference between our treaties with the Indians and an obligation of this kind is, that an Indian treaty requires us to pay annuities from time to time; every year we pay so much. It seems to me there is a distinction between the two. Wherever we stipulate to pay these annuities in coin, we pay them in coin. There is a difference between the payment of an annuity and the payment of interest on the public debt; and that difference has always been recognized since the foundation of the Government. But even if we did injustice to the Indians, we make it good by the payment of large bounties; we more than make it good by our annual appropriations for the expenses of the Indian department. Since the recent condition of affairs, since we have been involved in war, we have appropriated very large sums, this year amounting to more than a million dollars, for the benefit of the Indians not included in Indian treaties. We have indeed made good to them the appropriations in gold, or nearly so. If, therefore, there is any injustice done to the Indians, it certainly is not a peculiar hardship.

In this case the proposition was so plain that the committee had no hesitation about awarding the payment in gold from this time forward. I am told that this question has never been acted upon in the Treasury Department, but that if these parties had demanded their interest in gold, precisely as other creditors have done, and as they had a right to do, they would have been paid in coin at any time since the beginning of this war. There has been no distinction in the Treasury Department between this debt and any other funded debt of the United States the interest of which is payable in coin.

Mr. HALE. If I do not entirely misunderstand the nature of this case, it seems to me there is no force in the suggestions which have been made in regard to any obligations of the Government, for this reason: this Mr. Smithson gave this fund, some five hundred thousand dollars or more, to the United States; they are the beneficiaries of this donation; it was the property of the United States; and the Smithsonian Institution, whether it was a wise or an unwise creation of Congress, was simply a machinery instituted by the United States for the purpose of carrying on and carrying out the bequest of Mr. Smithson. To speak of this Institution as an institution apart from the Government of the United States, to my humble comprehension is perfectly absurd. It is the United States that own this Institution. It was for the benefit of the United States that the fund was given to them; and Congress, because it was not convenient to take it and manage it, as they did the other interests of the Government, created these agents, created this Institution, as a mere matter of convenience by which the Government might manage the fund that was intrusted to them for the purposes specified in Mr.

Smithson's will. They have no claim, no interest, in this matter. The only question was, how shall the Government, if they accept the trust, carry it on? They concluded to carry it on by this machinery. It is not an institution adverse to the United States Government. It is not an institution that has the least claim under heaven upon the Government. They are the mere creatures of the Government, to enable them, according to the purport of the will, to execute the trust that has been confided to them. How can they come here and occupy the position of creditors? They are no creditors. They have no interest under heaven, not the slightest; they are the mere agents appointed by law to execute this trust for the United States in the use of a fund which belongs to the United States. That is the whole of it. That being the case, this being the property of the United States, managed for their benefit through this instrumentality, it is contended that the Government of the United States shall increase by a hundred-fold the appropriations for the Institution. I do not see the slightest claim in the world.

Let me state another fact. The honorable Senator from Iowa did not state this thing exactly as it was. The fact was that about 1840, or not far from that time—I do not know the exact time that this fund was given to the United States—was a pretty hard time for the Democratic party; they had had hard luck; and the Secretary of the Treasury took the whole of this fund, every dollar of it, and gave it to Arkansas, no doubt for highly patriotic purposes, [laughter,] and it was all sunk; and there was an end of the bubble, or ought to have been. But Congress were so much tickled with the idea of this bequest that they assumed the debt. They did not make much by investing it in Arkansas politics; everything went by default; and then Congress stepped in and paid out of the Treasury that which they had wasted.

I will not repeat what I have heretofore said in regard to this Institution; I will not say but that it is possibly a wise one, and a wise appropriation of public money, because it is rather impertinent to the question that is now before the Senate. It has been characterized, I think by Greeley—and I do not often quote him—as a sort of lying-in hospital for literary valetudinarians, [laughter,] and that is about the amount of it. I remember once that some friends were here and had been visiting about the places of interest in the city of Washington, and had got pretty much through with them, and I asked them, "What are you going to do to-day?" They said they were going over to look at the Smithsonian Institution, and find out what it was. I told them I was exceedingly glad they were going to start on such a mission, and I asked them, if they did find out, to tell me when they got back. They did not call on me when they got back. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I know of no reason under heaven why, when we pay in currency the men who are shedding their blood in defense of the country, the men who are periling everything for the salvation of the country, we should come in and pay this pet child we have created in this manner in gold. I think it would shock the moral sense of the nation to-day, if they knew that we propose to pay in gold the interest on this debt, which is no debt at all, when we pay those who fight our battles, and shed their blood in our defense, in currency. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds investigated this subject to some extent, and became entirely satisfied, with the exception of the Senator from Iowa, I believe, that this interest ought to be paid in gold. I am very glad to hear the statement of the Senator from Iowa. I am glad he is able to prove that this Institution is in good condition. I am gratified that he has shown it has full funds, with an accumulation of $75,000 in Indiana bonds—a sure and reliable fund—and something against the State of Virginia. I shall be gratified each session while I have the honor of serving along with him to hear him make as good a statement of the Smithsonian Institution as he has to-night.

He says it is a rich institution. I am glad of that. I was once a member of the Indiana Legislature, and every now and then I heard some Representative or Senator talking about the bloated corporations of the State; and we all had it in our heads that the wealth of the corporations, in some way or other, was made off our constituents, and therefore, to some extent, we were justified in making war upon them, for they were men that made their gains off the people. But this is not the case with the corporation that the Senator now styles a wealthy corporation. No money to fill the coffers of that Institution came from the good people of Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. Not until we pay them in gold $62,000 in place of $31,000, while we pay to Iowa soldiers, as the Senator from New Hampshire well said, only six dollars and a half in gold. Then it will come off my constituents.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As I was going on to say, all the rich funds of that Institution came not from the people of Iowa or of Indiana. It was a munificent grant from a foreigner, Mr. Smithson, for the purpose of establishing in this country an institution for the acquisition and diffusion of useful knowledge among men. That $500,000 was received, not in paper, but in gold, coming from a kind friend of this country across the water. If therefore, the Institution is rich, it is well for us; if it were poor, it would be a disgrace to us to-day.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the Senator is mistaken in the language used in the will; and I think that in that respect the managers of it have been true to the direction of the testator. It was not "useful knowledge among men," but "knowledge among men." [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. Well, sir, whether all knowledge is useful or not I will not undertake to discuss now. The purpose of the bequest was to establish in this country an institution for the diffusion of knowledge, or useful knowledge, among men. I think the language used was "useful knowledge." Whether the knowledge that is diffused among men from that Institution be useful or not I do not care now to discuss. If I were to judge from the number of applications I have for the reports of that Institution, I should say it is useful knowledge.

Then, sir, if the Institution is rich, it has cost his constituents and mine nothing; but if it were poor to-day, and we refused to make up the entire fund, it would cost his constituents and mine something—it would cost their honor.

Now, sir, upon the leading question I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire. This Institution does not belong to us; it is not the property of the United States. The United States, in respect to that Institution and the funds that endowed it, is but the trustee. We are not the beneficiaries, in his language. The people of the world are the beneficiaries; all who can be instructed by the diffusion of useful knowledge are the beneficiaries.

The Senator from New Hampshire spoke also of a loss because of a purchase of bonds of the State of Arkansas. If we purchased bonds that were not a sure investment, in law, or rather in equity, we are bound to make it good. If the United States, as a trustee, makes a bad investment, she must make that investment good. If the Senator held funds for me, or if, as a guardian, he held funds for some of his minor constituents, and he made a bad investment, would he not be compelled to make it up? If he made a bad investment he would be compelled to make it good, unless he used due care and acted under the direction of the court. I admit, if entire diligence is used, perhaps, he would not be responsible in a court of equity. But I understand the facts to be that the Institution has lost nothing from the Arkansas bonds. That has been made up; they have been paid; and there has been no loss resulting from that investment.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was so told the other day. I am not fully informed, except as the committee were informed by Professor Henry, who has this business in charge. That is the way I understand it. The interest has been paid.

Mr. HALE. The bonds have not been paid.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Whether the bonds have been paid or not is not important. We got gold, and were to use it, as a trustee, to establish an institution that would be an ornament to the country as well as useful to the world. Now, sir, what is the obligation of the United States in respect to that, a gold investment, endowing an institution, not for the benefit of the United States, but for the benefit of mankind generally? I understand the decision of the Treasury Department has been that all trust funds are to be paid in gold, and that all the debts against the Government prior to the commencement of the war are to be paid in gold.

Both the Senators have asked why we pay gold to this Institution when we pay greenbacks to the soldiers. Why do the Senators agree, by their numerous votes here, to pay gold to the men who buy the bonds of the United States? Why do they make their investment worth twelve per cent., when other men use their money for their own benefit but to the extent of six per cent.? Why do they pay gold to the creditors that they create now, not by $500,000 at a time, but by $600,000,000 at a time, in gold? Let them answer that. It is a question between them and the soldiers. They pay the creditors of the Government in gold and the soldiers in greenbacks. Both Senators unquestionably were governed by proper considerations. I think it is a plain obligation on the part of the Government to pay this interest in gold. It is according to the practice of the Government; and I should think it a shame to the Government to do otherwise.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am a little surprised at the course of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire says this is not a trust at all; this property was given to the United States. It was given to the United States by James Smithson; but it was given for a particular purpose; and it is as much a trust as when any testator bequeaths property to a particular person for a particular purpose. The Congress of the United States in 1846 passed an act by which they recognized this as a trust; and I would like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if he means to repudiate the action of this Government, if he means to repudiate the solemn obligation which this Government has taken upon itself? It is a direct act of repudiation on the part of the Government to deny that this is a trust, and that it is held as a trust for particular purposes. The act of 1846, which I have before me, declares:

"That James Smithson, Esq., of London, in the kingdom of Great Britain, having by his last will and testament given the whole of his property to the United States of America to found at Washington, under the name of the Smithsonian Institution, an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men, and the United States having, by an act of Congress, received said property and accepted said trust: Therefore, for the full execution of said trust according to the will of the liberal and enlightened donor, Be it enacted," &c.

Here is a solemn act of Congress acknowledging the receipt of this property as a trust fund. It was given for the purpose of founding "at Washington, under the name of the Smithsonian Institution, an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men;" and the Senator from Iowa says "not useful knowledge." Why, sir, I thought that the term "knowledge" implied that it was a useful thing. I supposed that knowledge was valuable; that it was what we all sought to acquire. This property was accepted in trust for this identical purpose; and to repudiate it now, and say it is no trust, it is the money of the Government, and you have a right to squander it and use it, is as direct a breach of faith as it would be on the part of this Congress to pass a law that it would pay no debt whatever that it had created. It would be the worst species of repudiation, worse than borrowing money and refusing to pay it under ordinary circumstances. The Government has accepted it; it has committed itself to it; and this Institution had as perfect a right to call for the payment of the interest as it fell due, in coin, as had any other creditor of the Government.

The Senator from Iowa wants to know why a distinction is to be made between the debt due the Smithsonian Institution and a debt due any other person. No distinction is to be made. It is the very thing we do not want to do. The Government of the United States, in 1861, when this rebellion broke out, owed some ninety million dollars; and does not the Senator from Iowa know that we paid the interest to every one of the holders of that indebtedness in gold?

Mr. GRIMES. I know we did not do it to the Indians.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You have done it to the Indians in many instances; but because you have wronged the Indian, who cannot assert his rights; because you have violated your treaties with him, and by act of Congress are changing treaties every day, and driving him from the lands that you set apart to him and said you would never disturb him in the possession of; because you impose upon the Indian, do you propose now to violate all your contracts? You are bound to pay the Indian in gold, if you have agreed so to pay him. Sir, this argument by which you talk about not paying the poor soldier in coin smacks a little of a speech upon the stump. The Senator from Iowa votes here to pay the foreign bondholder in coin.

In my opinion this amendment does not go far enough. The reason, probably, for the introduction of the amendment at this time is in consequence of a calamity, the destruction of a part of the Smithsonian building within a few days by fire, involving a very large expenditure to repair the building; but instead of calling upon Congress for an appropriation for that purpose, it was thought on the part of the managers of the Institution they would be enabled to get along if they received the interest due the Institution in coin. They were entitled to receive it, and they would have received it in coin had they insisted upon it heretofore. The only reason that it has not been insisted upon, as I understand, is that in this great emergency of the country, as the Institution was able to get along, the matter was not pressed upon the Secretary of the Treasury, who never denied the obligation of the Government to pay in coin as much upon this debt as any other debt which the Government owed. I am informed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FARWELL] that they received the currency of the country without making a special demand for the coin under the particular condition of things in the country at the time. The Institution will be able, as I understand, to repair the building, provided they receive what they are entitled to receive; and hence this proposition to pay the interest in coin. I shall move an amendment to the proposition to make up the difference between the currency which the Institution has received, and the coin to which they were entitled, in order that they may have the means to repair the building. I think the Government is bound to pay it by every obligation, and particularly by the obligation, which it took upon itself when it accepted this fund.

But the Senator from Iowa brings in here the fact that this fund was invested in Arkansas bonds. Was that the fault of Smithson who made the bequest? Whose fault was it if an improvident use was made of the funds of the Institution? But that question is not now to be settled. The Government of the United States has assumed the control of this money, has incorporated this Institution, has agreed to pay the interest forever at six per cent. upon the money that was placed in its Treasury; and, unless it means to repudiate this obligation, it is bound to pay it, and it is bound to pay it in the same currency that it pays to other creditors similarly situated. That is all that the Institution asks. They probably would not have pressed at this time for the payment in coin but for the misfortune of the fire which has recently occurred. I move to amend the section which is pending by adding to it the following:

And in case the interest heretofore paid to said Institution has been paid in a different currency, or of less value, than that paid by the Government on other permanent debts or trust funds, that the Secretary be directed to make up the difference to said Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. COLLAMER. Mr. President, I do not wish to confine my remarks to the amendment now under consideration. I can see no good reason for the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. So far as this Institution have received their interest in any money that was satisfactory to them when they received it, I consider it paid. In relation to what has not been paid them, it undoubtedly should be paid them, as I think, in coin, as is the case with all the trust funds in the hands of the Government.

But, sir, I rose more particularly to make one remark. I feel a good deal gratified at the speeches that have been made on this subject this evening; and from this consideration: Congress, by the votes of many of the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject to-night, passed a law nearly four years ago to enable individuals to pay off their old notes in depreciated paper at half price, and we called it a tender. These gentlemen voted for that measure, by which people were enabled to cheat their creditors, and by which the Government never got anything, and never will. But what particularly gratifies me is this: that while they were willing to make a law, and it is a standing law now, to enable individuals to cheat their creditors by paying them off in money at half price, they are ashamed to do it on their own account, and will not do any such thing; and I hope they never will. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I think there is a higher obligation to keep this bequest at its original amount than any legal obligation. Smithsonian was a natural son of the Duke of Northumberland. He made a declaration in connection with this bequest that he would render his name more famous than that of the illustrious house to which he was allied. He executed a will, in which he bestowed the whole of his estate upon the United States, in trust, to establish, as the honorable Senator from Illinois has just read, an institution to be located in the city of Washington for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men. That was the highest testimony that that individual could have rendered to the Government of the United States, or to the United States themselves. Although allied to an illustrious house, he gave all that he had of worldly property to our country and to our Government, for the purpose of founding an institution for the increase and diffusion of knowledge. From the circumstances under which this bequest was made, and the manner in which its execution was assumed by our Government, in my judgment, it creates a higher than a legal obligation that the amount and value of this noble bequest shall not deteriorate or be reduced in amount in the hands of those that he charged with the execution of the trust.

The honorable Senator from Illinois says, correctly no doubt, that the reason why this application is now made at this time is because of the misfortune that befell the Smithsonian Institution a few weeks since. That was in some degree the fault of the United States Government. It had property deposited for custody and exhibition in the Interior Department, which was directed by the officers of the Government to be transferred to the Smithsonian Institution for the same custody and for similar exhibition. This property was not properly attached to, or appended to, the Smithsonian Institution. The managers of that Institution received the custody and the possession of this property reluctantly, and only because its custody had been imposed upon them by the officials of the United States Government. The proper arrangement of that property in one of its halls rendered necessary the making of some repairs in the hall that caused the making of a fire in that hall, which resulted in the conflagration of the building.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of the nature of the bequest, of the nobleness of the motives of the testator who bequeathed it, of the high scientific purposes for which it was given to the United States; in view of the great trust and confidence that was reposed by the testator in the Government, and in the United States, and in our country; and in view of the fact that this fire that resulted in the burning of the Smithsonian building arose from the imposition of a duty that did not appertain to that Institution at all, the United States Government ought to hold itself bound by every obligation to keep the bequest at its original value; and that is all that is proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foot in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was adopted; there being, on a division—yes twenty-one, noes not counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Finance are all disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I find we have got another Smithsonian Institution on a smaller scale in this bill that I want to get rid of. I move to strike out the following clause:

For publishing the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences, made to Congress, under the act approved March 3, 1863, $5,000.

If there is no objection to striking it out, I have nothing to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the petitions and memorials of Woodruff & Beach, William H. Webb, Paul S. Forbes, James B. Eads, Z. & F. Secor, William Perrin & Edwin F. Secor, Harrison Loring, Alexander Smith, Niles, Works & Co., Hardan & Hollingsworth, Miles Greenwood & Robert J. Mason, George W. Quintard, George C. Baston, G. B. Allen & Co., T. G. Gaylord, R. T. Poe & Co., Donohue, Ryan & Secor, and the contractors for the seven iron vessels and their machinery, known as "double-enders," and the contractors for the seventeen vessels known as "double-enders," and the contractors for the following engines and machinery, to wit: five one hundred-inch engines, twenty-eight engines for wooden double-enders—

Mr. SHERMAN. I have heard enough of that amendment read to raise a point of order upon it. It is a private bill, for the payment of private individuals—a private claim.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought it possible that the point of order would be presented which has just been raised by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, but I think the objection is not well taken. This amendment relates to a class of public contractors, and this relief is necessary, in the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs, not only to save the contractors themselves from bankruptcy in some instances, but also to secure the completion of this very important work. These are the men who undertook to a very large extent to provide a navy, and some of them are able to complete their contracts; others are not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that a question of this kind is not debatable. I would not raise the point except at this stage of the session.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not propose to discuss the merits of it at all, but simply to say that this affects the public interest, in the judgment of the committee, as well as the parties themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate whether this amendment shall be received as in order under the 30th rule of the Senate, the latter portion of which is as follows:

"And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation."

The question is, Shall this amendment be received as in order under this rule?

The question being put, the amendment was not received.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a section on page 14 of the bill. I have it not before me, but I ask the Secretary to read that section:

The Secretary read, as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue the investigations which he has instituted in relation to the mineral resources of the United States, and the minerals, their extent and locality, in the public domain, who shall report his doings as by law required in relation to other business of the General Land Office, $15,000.

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out that clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For a geological and mineralogical survey of the lands known as mineral lands, $50,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in making geological and mineralogical surveys, and such other explorations as may be necessary to set apart and designate what lands in the mineral districts are not mineral lands, for the purpose of exposing the same to preemption and sale. And the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three commissioners, who shall each be a mining engineer with a knowledge of geology and mineralogy; and the Secretary of the Interior shall organize the commission and make rules and regulations for the government of the same; which commission shall report from time to time; and within ninety days after the publication of any such report, if no objection be made thereto, the Secretary shall approve the same, and the lands therein designated as not mineral lands shall thereupon be open to preemption and sale, as other public lands: Provided, The homestead law shall only apply to such of said lands as are chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes. And $50,000 is also appropriated for the purpose of a survey of the lands designated as not mineral lands under the foregoing provision; and the surveys and explorations made under the foregoing provisions shall commence at such point as the Secretary may direct.

I wish simply to say a word in explanation. The section in the bill appears to refer to previous appropriations and previous investigations on this subject. I know of no law by which these investigations are directed; and I must say, without desiring to reflect upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office—

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order. I ask the honorable Senator if this amendment appropriating money comes from any committee.

Mr. STEWART. It does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the point of order is not well taken. The Senator from Nevada showed me that amendment, and I thought it was in order. He increases the appropriation, and more specifically directs its use.

Mr. SHERMAN. He moves to strike out the whole of one item, and to insert a new item of appropriation entirely different in its character. I think it is a new item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair regards it as a modification of the amendment reported by the committee, and, as such, in order.

Mr. STEWART. The Secretary of the Interior has published in his report, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office has also published in his annual report, certain information with regard to the mines which has been anything but accurate, and anything but such information as legislation should be predicated upon. The information that has been collected is entirely erroneous, so far as the experience of every one who has been in the mining region is concerned. There is an appropriation in the bill of $15,000 for the purpose of obtaining information in regard to the mineral resources of the country; and I understand that sum is appropriated annually without being directed to any serviceable purpose. If nothing can be substituted in place of it, I would much rather that that appropriation should be stricken out, and I shall insist on the motion to strike out at all events; for until this subject can be taken hold of in a manner to accomplish some good purpose, in such a manner that we can lay before Congress facts upon which legislation can be based, I am opposed to the expenditure of money upon it. I have lived for the last fifteen years in the mining regions. Foreign countries have sent commissions of scientific men there who have gone to the mines, made their examinations, and reported to their Governments. Those reports have been printed, some in the French and some in the German language, and been translated into English. But I have seen no report on the part of any one connected with the United States which was made from actual observation and survey. I am opposed to laying any information before Congress except such as shall be accurate. Such as we have had not only misleads Congress, but it misleads the people. You make false estimates and false calculations on the subject.

This amendment proposes to start at some point with a survey which shall separate the regions that are not mineral from those that are mineral, so that the lands not mineral may be exposed to sale. If the amendment should be adopted you will get some revenue, and you will get some accurate information; but whether the amendment is adopted or not, I shall most certainly insist that there shall be no attempt to publish information on an appropriation of $15,000, without any provision as to how that money shall be expended, or where the information is to be obtained. To obtain information with regard to the mines requires a careful examination. It requires geological and mineralogical surveys and explorations by men of experience who understand the subject. It is a science that is capable of a great deal of accurate description. It can be reduced to such information that Congress can act upon it with certainty. But it is throwing money away to pay $15,000 per annum for collecting idle rumors and publishing them; and I am opposed to that. I think this amendment will be a step in the right direction. By it we shall get some information; we shall expose some land for sale, get some money into the Treasury, do a little good, and do no harm.

Mr. CLARK. This is a curious proposition at this time of the session. At twenty minutes after eleven o'clock, on the last night of the session, on the very last appropriation bill that could be found, the Senator proposes to expend $100,000 for a survey between the mineral and agricultural lands, beginning nowhere, and ending, perhaps, in the same place. Where does he propose to make this survey? In what State? In what Territory? I had almost said in what country?

Mr. NYE. Where is this expenditure to be made? It does not state.

Mr. CLARK. Which?

Mr. NYE. This appropriation of $15,000 for this purpose in the bill.

Mr. CLARK. At such place as the Commissioner of the General Land Office, if directed to procure the information, shall think he can best find it.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will read the last clause of my amendment he will find the same thing. The last clause says that the survey shall commence at such point as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct.

Mr. CLARK. I understand it. It is a very different thing to select and collect information into the Land Office from the whole country from what it is to survey the whole country. The information may be necessary before we start to survey. It may be necessary to know whether it is worth while to begin to survey, and then to appoint three commissioners to go on afterward to make further surveys. I think it is better to have the information that is provided for in the bill as it comes from the House before we attempt to do this. But, sir, this is not a time to debate it any more than it is a time to introduce it. I can only conclude by saying that I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I undertake to say that the clause to which I have offered this amendment does not pretend to determine what information we shall have. The Senator says we should first get the information that the bill provides for. It does not provide for any definite information; and the facts of record show that the information which has been pretended to be obtained, and which has been published to the people, is incorrect in every essential particular, extravagant, calculated to produce a great deal of uneasiness, a great deal of disquiet, a great deal of dissatisfaction. The whole condition of the mineral region has been misrepresented, to the great detriment of the country. The provision in the bill is an injurious, hurtful one, and it had better be out. You had better appropriate nothing at all unless you mean to carry out some measure as I have offered.

Mr. GRIMES. Move to strike it out.

Mr. STEWART. I have moved to strike it out and to insert in lieu of it the provision that has been read. The amendment that I have offered, so far from being indefinite, provides for a geological survey at such point as the Secretary of the Interior shall designate in the mineral lands, for the purpose of separating the mineral lands from those that are not mineral, so that homesteads may be had in the mineral districts; so that a large amount of lands may be brought into market; so that the Government may get some information; so that it may get some money. I should not have offered it at this late stage of the session if there had been an opportunity to mature a bill before this. There was no opportunity. The subject, however, has been up and talked about in the Committee on Public Lands. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of that committee, and myself, and two or three others, have discussed it. We had a sub-committee appointed to bring in something of this kind, to make a start with regard to obtaining information as to what lands could be offered for sale in the mineral regions, to see what mineral lands we have. We have conversed about this subject. This amendment has not been hastily prepared. It was prepared some days ago, talked over by the members of the committee, and agreed to, if there should be an opportunity to present it. It is in definite shape. We should not, however, have presented it, or attempted to clog any bill with it if we had not been met with an appropriation, vague and indefinite, to appropriate $15,000 for collecting idle rumors which will again insult the sense of the people, because they are not founded in fact. That certainly should be stricken out. There is no use of spending money in that way. But a geological survey of the country is something we must have before we can put in market any of the lands that are not mineral that are within the mineral districts. It must first be determined by exploration. This amendment appropriates $50,000 for a geological survey, and the balance, after those surveys shall have been made, is to be appropriated for the purpose of laying off the lands, surveying the lands that are not mineral, for the purpose of sale.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can the question be decided? The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot. A motion to strike out and insert is an indivisible proposition.

Mr. HARLAN. I will suggest to my friend from Nevada the propriety of diminishing the sum named in the first item of his amendment to $15,000, the same amount that is contained in the bill, and then I could vote for the whole proposition if you require the application of the $15,000 to be made by the Secretary of the Interior in such a mode as to enable him to discriminate between the lands that are in fact mineral, and those which are denominated as mineral which are not in fact mineral.

Mr. STEWART. I accept that amendment: The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is competent for the Senator to modify his amendment, and it will be so modified.

Mr. HARLAN. I was about to suggest the propriety of dispensing with that part of the amendment which provides for the appointment of three commissioners. I think the $15,000 may be expended as wisely, probably, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose attention has been called to the subject.

Mr. STEWART. I will accept that also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada further modifies his amendment by striking out that portion of it relating to the appointment of commissioners.

Mr. HARLAN. I will say to my friend from New Hampshire that the proposition to appropriate $50,000 for the survey of these lands is eminently proper. There are vast quantities of public lands in some of the new States, including California, Oregon, and the Territory of Washington, that are excellent lands, and are included in what are called mineral lands, and are not surveyed.

Mr. CLARK. It is a bad time to begin now.

Mr. HARLAN. I think it is the time to begin now. We need the money to be derived from the proceeds of the sale of those lands. These lands are being occupied by agriculturists, and the timber growing on them is being carried off, not only by the people of your own country, but is being shipped to England and to various countries in Europe. Fleets go around on this coast and take the best timber growing on the lands and carry it off. We are not able under the existing laws of the United States to sell these lands to our own citizens. They are not mineral lands in fact; that is, they do not bear the precious metals. They are of a mineral character, but the developments are not such as usually bear either gold, silver, copper, tin, or quicksilver. They may contain iron, coal, and the baser metals. I think the time has arrived when we should enter on the survey of these lands that do not bear the precious metals, that are now being occupied by squatters, and all the valuable timber being taken off. If, in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, none of these lands should be brought into market, not a dollar would be expended except the $15,000 which is provided for in the text of the bill. The amendment prepared by the Senator from Nevada provides that this $15,000 shall be so expended as to enable the Commissioner to discriminate between the lands that are not mineral and those that are mineral, with a view to a survey of those that are not really mineral and to bringing them into market. With the modifications that the Senator has made, I am in favor of his amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. COLLAMER. I am directed by the Committee on the Library to offer the following amendment:

For the purchase and removal of materials and for erecting four greenhouses in the botanic garden, to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $2,500.

I will state that a favorable opportunity is now offered, when we desire some more greenhouses and need them, to purchase a large greenhouse erected by Mr. Rives in his lifetime on his place, which his heirs desire not to continue, and we can purchase for less than half the cost, the very materials we want for this purpose; and the whole cost, including the purchase, removal, and erection, will be but $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move an amendment to the bill, to be inserted as additional sections, which I will send up to the Chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Unless some member of the Senate desires to have the amendment read, there is probably no necessity of proceeding with it, as it is an exact copy of a bill which has already occupied the attention of the Senate to some extent. I will explain the nature of the amendment. For the time being, I move that its reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be dispensed with if no Senator insists on the reading.

Mr. BROWN. I am instructed to move this as an amendment to this bill by the Committee on Military Affairs, under the conviction that it is necessary for the military defense of the country, and under the further conviction that it will result in the saving of many million dollars to the Government. The Senate will remember that when this bill was under discussion it was explained that it was to reimburse the State of Missouri in the sum of $4,000,000 for money which had been expended and paid out to the militia troops serving in that State.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us take a vote upon it.

Mr. BROWN. I will not prolong the discussion at all unless it is desired.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator does not carry his amendment he can call for a division and then explain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish only to say in regard to this amendment that I would object to it and resist it as an amendment to this bill but for one reason: the Senate have already passed this bill unanimously and sent it to the House of Representatives, and they have defeated it. I give notice to the honorable Senator that by an inflexible rule on a committee of conference, if objected to by the House, it will fail; and I scarcely see any use in putting it on this bill.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think it will be objected to. I think it failed in the House under a misapprehension altogether.

The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That immediately after the passage of this act, the President shall appoint a commissioner, whose duty it shall be to ascertain the amount of moneys expended by the State of Missouri in enrolling, equipping, subsisting, and paying such State forces as have been called into service in said State since the 24th day of August, 1861, to act in concert with the United States forces in the suppression of rebellion against the United States.

And be it further enacted, That the commissioner so appointed shall proceed at once to examine all the items of expenditure made by said State for the purposes herein named, allowing only for disbursements made and amounts assumed by the State for enrolling, equipping, subsisting, and paying such troops as were called into service by the Governor at the request of the United States department commander commanding the district in which Missouri may at the time have been included, or by the express order, consent, or concurrence of such commander. And no allowance shall be made for any troops which did not perform actual military service in full concert and cooperation with the authorities of the United States and subject to their orders.

And be it further enacted, That in making up said account, for the convenience of the accounting officers of the Government, the commissioner shall state separately the amounts expended respectively, for enrolling, equipping, arming, subsisting, and paying said troops, and from the aggregate amount he shall deduct the amount of direct tax due by the said State to the United States under the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1861, or the act entitled "An act to allow and pay to the State of Missouri the amount of money expended by said State in the arming and paying of troops employed in the suppression of insurrection against the laws of the United States," approved July 17, 1862.

And be it further enacted, That in the adjustment of accounts under this act the commissioner shall not allow for any expenditure or compensation for service at a rate greater than was at the time authorized by the laws of the United States in similar cases.

And be it further enacted, That so soon as said commissioner shall have made up said account and ascertained the balance, as herein directed, he shall make written report thereof, showing the different items of expenditure as hereinbefore stated, to the Secretary of the Treasury; and if from said report it shall appear that any sum remains due to the said State, he shall draw his warrant for the same, payable to the Governor of said State, and deliver it to him.

And be it further enacted, That the commissioner to be appointed as aforesaid shall, before proceeding to the discharge of his duties, be sworn that he will carefully examine the accounts existing between the United States and the State of Missouri, and that he will, to the best of his ability, make a just, true, and impartial statement thereof, as required by this act. He shall receive such compensation for his services as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $4,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to carry this act into effect.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment:

For repairing, refitting, and preparing the Naval Academy buildings and grounds at Annapolis, Maryland, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if that comes from a committee?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; and is based upon a letter of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I have another small amendment that was accidentally left out of the naval appropriation bill:

For mileage of Visitors to the annual examination of the Academy, $3,000.

That is the usual appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer the following amendment:

For continuing the work on the Washington aqueduct, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture in the purchase of seeds for loyal citizens of —, who have been impoverished by Army invasions.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me to offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of the first section of the bill:

For subsistence of fifteen thousand, seven hundred refugee Indians in the Indian Territory and Kansas, from the 1st day of January to the 31st day of March, both inclusive, ninety days, $204,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That a detailed statement of all moneys expended under this provision shall be made to the next Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is rather singular to make provision for the subsistence of these Indians for times past. If the Department have expended this money without authority of law, that is one thing. I supposed we had disposed of these fifteen thousand Indians last night by turning them over to the War Department.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No committee of this body, with the exception, it may be, of the Finance Committee, the Military Committee, and the Naval Committee, performs more labor than the Committee on Indian Affairs; and I believe that committee are satisfied that this appropriation is necessary. By a law of Congress the Secretary of the Interior was directed to take these Indians out of Kansas as refugees and put them in the Indian Territory. The Indians were upon the hands of the Department in a starving condition and were taken down there. These expenses have been incurred from the 1st of January last up to the last day of this month. It is true that by your action last night you turned these Indians over to the War Department, but it will take you thirty days before you can get them into the hands of the War Department. It is a necessity, in my opinion, that this appropriation should be made. It has been estimated for, recommended, and urged by the Secretary of the Interior. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Harlan, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wiley—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foot, Grimes, Howard, Morgan, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Ten Eyck, and Trumbull—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Collamer, Hale, Harding, Harris, Howe, McDougall, Richardson, Salisbury, Wilkinson, Wilson, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1866.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had insisted upon its amendment to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants, disagreed to by the Senate, had agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. MOSES F. ODELL of New York, and Mr. GLENNI W. SCOFFIELD of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department, insisted on by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ROBERT C. SCHENCK of Ohio, Mr. ARCHIBALD McALLISTER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. AMASA COBB of Wisconsin, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 2) granting a pension to Ellen M. Whipple, widow of the late Major General Amiel W. Whipple, of the United States Army;

A bill (S. No. 44) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;

A bill (S. No. 91) to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. No. 122) for the relief of Mary A. Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 807) to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) to facilitate communication with certain Territories.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof."

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured or abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. M. RUSSELL THAYER of Pennsylvania, Mr. JAMES G. BLAINE of Maine, and Mr. FRANCIS KERNAN of New York, managers at the same on its part.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to strike out the eighteenth section of this bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives; and I ask the Secretary to read that section.

Mr. POWELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for the present.

Mr. SUMNER. There are amendments reported from committees that have not yet been acted upon.

Mr. POWELL. I have an amendment to offer from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I do not understand that after the Committee on Finance have exhausted their amendments that other committees have any precedence in amendments. I do not understand that there is any such rule.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the rule is to go through with the amendments from all the committees of the body.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I understand no such rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no other rule than that of practice. The usual practice is to receive amendments from committees first.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. There is no such rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no express rule on the subject as to priority.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I wish the Secretary to read the section which I ask to have stricken out.

Mr. SUMNER. Before my friend begins with that allow me to make a suggestion. The topic he is going to introduce now will perhaps cause debate. I suggest whether it is not better that we should go through with the few remaining practical questions. For instance, I have three or four amendments to move from the Committee on Foreign Relations, not very important, but still which I am instructed to move on this bill, and I should like to move them before any discussion is opened.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I should like exceedingly to accommodate the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts; but the most practical point in this whole bill is the very section that I propose to strike out; it is more important than the whole balance; and I shall vote against the whole bill if it is not stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the amendment?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Let the Secretary read the eighteenth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves to strike out the following section:

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons actually mustered or commissioned or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies charged with being spies.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Now, Mr. President, here is a regular appropriation bill, every item of which is to carry out an express provision of law or is recommended by one of the Departments of the Government; and upon that bill in the last hours of the session is introduced this provision calculated to revolutionize and change the whole military jurisprudence of the country for the last four years. What business has this proposition upon such an appropriation bill? What connection has it with an appropriation bill? I fail utterly to see that it has any connection with the bill before the Senate. I desire to be exceedingly brief, for the great master of the English drama has said that "brevity is the soul of wit," and if it is the soul of wit on all occasions it is surely the soul of propriety upon the present occasion.

But what does this provision of the House propose to do? To strike down the whole military jurisdiction in the country; to revolutionize the whole jurisprudence of the country; to repeal two Articles of War which have been in force for more than sixty years. You are told by this provision that no one, except those in the military or naval service of the United States or a spy within our lines, shall be tried by a court-martial. Is that the law? Has it been the law for the last sixty years, or from the very foundation of the Government? No such provision has been the law. I ask the Secretary to read the fifty-sixth and fifty-seventh Articles of War passed under the Administration of Thomas Jefferson, who was a Democrat when Democracy was not an idle name; when it meant something; when it meant devotion to human rights; and there you will see the jurisdiction of military courts affirmed and confirmed. Those articles have been applied in military courts for the last sixty years; and yet we are now told that this whole jurisdiction shall be stricken down in this time of war and rebellion. I ask the Secretary to read those two sections to show the complete jurisdiction of military courts in all such cases.

The Secretary read, as follows:

"56. Whosoever shall relieve the enemy with money, victuals, or ammunition, or shall knowingly harbor or protect an enemy, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall be ordered by the sentence of a court-martial.

"57. Whosoever shall be convicted of holding correspondence with, or giving intelligence to the enemy, either directly or indirectly, shall suffer death or such other punishment as shall be ordered by the sentence of a court-martial."

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The Senate will perceive by reading the section immediately preceding these two sections that the punishment was confined to men enlisted in the military or naval service; but when it comes to these provisions, these two classes are expressly excluded, and it applies to every one in a time of war who shall give aid and comfort to the enemy. If you will read the four preceding sections you will find that they apply expressly to men in the naval or military service of the United States; but when it comes to these two sections, these classes are expressly excluded and it applies universally to all people, and it should so apply. We are now in a state of civil war. The war rages South and the war rages North, and wheresoever aid and comfort are given to the enemy there the jurisdiction of a military court applies, and ought to apply.

How was it last summer in my own State? A treasonable organization was gotten up to murder and assassinate our Governor, to release the rebel prisoners, and to deluge in blood the fair plains of that great State from the lakes to the Ohio river, giving aid and comfort to the enemy. Military courts were organized to try the conspirators, and they may now be under sentence of death; but if you adopt this proposition, you rebuke the whole policy of the Government. A court is now organized in Ohio to try the Chicago conspirators, who were in complicity, as I verily believe, as much as I believe in my own existence, or in the God above me, with many of the leaders of the Chicago convention to revolutionize the northwestern States, to release the rebel prisoners, and to burn the city of Chicago. They are now under trial; but if you adopt this proposition they cannot be tried by a military court. They must be turned over to the civil tribunals. How are they constituted? By a jury to be called, with the right of challenge and the right of the "Sons of Liberty" to sit upon the jury; and how will you get convictions? I believe that this bill had far better fail than to incorporate any such provision upon it. It is but a reëcho of the old cry against arbitrary arrests that I first heard in this Chamber from the mouth of John C. Breckinridge, now a rebel in arms against the Government. All that has been said against arbitrary arrests I heard more eloquently and more ably said by him than I have heard by any one since; and yet this is introduced here as a rebuke to the Administration, as a rebuke to all these military courts! Let me tell the Senate that when you put in operation all the machinery of criminal courts and all the machinery of civil courts, you will not punish the one hundredth part of the rebels, either North or South, who deserve to die the felon's death. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor.) Order! Order! A repetition of the offense will be followed by an order to clear the galleries at once.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I hope the galleries will not be cleared, for I am pleased to speak to the galleries. They represent the public opinion, more terrible to tyrants than an army with banners.

But there is a constitutional objection interposed. What is it? That no one shall be convicted of a capital or otherwise infamous offense without a presentment or indictment by a grand jury; and what does that mean? It is simply applicable to a state of profound peace; for neither the framers of the Constitution nor the framers of any other organic law upon earth ever provided for or contemplated their own dissolution. "No one shall be convicted of a capital or otherwise infamous offense, except by presentment or indictment by a grand jury." How do you try and convict and execute spies? How do you try and convict and execute all criminals who desert to the enemy or who violate their paroles? Under the provisions of this House proposition you could not in the State of Kentucky try by a military commission a single guerrilla. Guerrilla bands are organized in Kentucky, carrying murder, assassination, rapine, and bloodshed over that whole State; and when you proceed to try them by a grand jury, their peers must try them. Who are their peers? Rebels and traitors, deeply dyed in treachery to the Constitution and Government as they themselves are.

The same provision of the Constitution which requires that no one shall be convicted of a capital or otherwise infamous offense without presentment or indictment, provides further that no private property shall be taken for public use without full value being paid therefor, and that the rights of the citizen shall not be sacrificed except by due course of law. Now let me show you the utter absurdity and inapplicability of that provision of the Constitution to a state of war. In the first place, you could not convict a spy; you could not capture a rebel; and, in the second place, you could not destroy the property of a rebel without due compensation being made, and except through due process of law. The truth, as I understand it, is that war has one law and that peace has another law; and that the laws of war are as well recognized in the Constitution as the laws of peace. Otherwise the Government is bound hand and foot and turned over to the mercy of its enemies and the rebels.

I am prepared first to vote against this proposition, and if it shall be carried, then I shall vote this bill down, so far as my vote is concerned, if there is never another dollar appropriated to carry out the provisions of this bill while the world stands. I never will sanction the principle that this military jurisdiction shall be given over. It never can be given over with security to the country. I know it is in proof in my own State that a large military organization to subvert the Government was organized there and was organized all over the Northwest. I believe, as I believe in my own existence, that if we had waited the slow process of civil prosecutions before grand juries, long ere this the State of Indiana would have been one scene of universal bloodshed. To avert that, I am willing to give the same jurisdiction to military courts-martial that is given by the rules and articles of war, and by the act of 1806, passed under the administration of Thomas Jefferson. I believe it is necessary and proper. I apprehend no evil to result from it.

Where does this cry against military courts come from? Does it come from the true, and loyal, and Union men, or does it come from the disaffected? We see echoed in the Richmond papers, and all over rebeldom, the "tyranny of Lincoln!" Whatever else Abraham Lincoln may be, he is to-day one of the kindest and most amiable gentlemen upon earth, having a sense of justice equal to any man who ever lived; and in the hands of Providence he is the instrument to lead this country to final redemption and the reconstruction of the Union, but not through any timid or time-serving policy. He is to exert all the constitutional powers guaranteed to him to enforce the military power of courts-martial, to make rebels believe that there is still a Government in the United States and a "God in Israel."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am not able to lash myself into that state of excitement into which the honorable member from Indiana has succeeded in bringing himself. What I propose to say, therefore, will be said with all proper coolness. The question is whether the section now before us conflicts with the section in the Articles of War established in 1806, and if it does, whether that section consists with the constitutional inhibition upon Congress. I shall make myself better understood by speaking first to the meaning of the constitutional inhibition. The Senator will remember that that is to be found in the fifth amendment; and the first proposition which I submit to the Senate is, that the meaning of that amendment is that it applies as well to a state of war as a state of peace. There is not a word in it which can be tortured to show that it was not the purpose of the amendment to comprehend every condition in which the country may be placed. So jealous were our fathers against military rule, and so anxious were they to protect the citizens by all those guarantees which in England have been found sufficient for that purpose, and which in all the States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution were deemed vital to that object, that notwithstanding they believed that in the Constitution, as it was originally framed, they could not properly be taken away from the citizen, they deemed it necessary to protect him by positive and express inhibition; and it is for the Senate to decide what is the meaning of the clause by which they sought to attain that object. The language of the article is:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury."

If it had stopped there I suppose everybody would agree that it embraced every crime capital in its nature or otherwise infamous, and that Congress would have no authority to provide that he who was charged with a capital or infamous crime should be tried in any other way than by having first a presentment or indictment of a grand jury; but there were cases common to England and common to the States in which it was deemed expedient to add that an antecedent presentment or indictment should not be rendered necessary; and what are they?

"Cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

Those are the only exceptions; and the first question for the Senate to decide is, whether it is the purpose of the first portion of the exception to apply only to a condition of war. To my mind it is as clear as the sun in its meridian that it comprehended every state, either of war or of peace, in which the country might be placed. The language is:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces."

When arising? How arising? Arising at any time. If the offense charged is to be punished capitally, or is infamous, then the party against whom the charge is made is first to have a presentment or an indictment, unless he be at the time in the land or naval forces, whether in a state of peace or in a state of war. There can be no doubt that the exception comprehends both conditions; that is to say, that if the case arises in the land or naval service of the United States, in peace or in war, the party is not entitled to the benefit of a presentment or indictment; and if the exception comprehends both classes of cases, why is not the inhibition equally comprehensive on both classes of cases? But there is another provision to be found in the exception, which, to my judgment, demonstrates it. The militia may be called into service; and when providing that the article shall not apply to cases arising in the land or naval forces, they go on to say that it shall not apply to cases

"In the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

But so far as the Army and the Navy of the United States are concerned, whether there be war, or whether there be peace, whether there be quiet, or whether there be public danger, the party is not entitled to the benefit of a presentment or indictment. It necessarily follows, as I submit to the honorable member from Indiana, that that constitutional provision embraces everything in which a man is charged with a capital or infamous crime, who is not in the service of the United States, in its Army, or in its Navy, or in the militia when the militia is called into the service of the United States in time of war or public danger.

But that is not the whole of the article. With just as much propriety could the honorable member except from the article the latter part of the provision, provided the country be in a state of war, as the first part of the provision. What is the latter part:

"Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb."

Does not that apply to the military service, the naval service, to cases arising in the militia when in the service of the United States? If it does, it goes to show that it was the purpose of the article to cover everything by that conservative provision which can arise, to cover the case of a capital or an infamous crime, unless the party charged, at the time when the offense is said to have been committed, is in the land or naval service, or in the militia of the United States when in the actual service of the United States. The honorable member tells us—and from the earnestness with which he speaks, and his character, nobody can doubt his sincerity—that the great apostle of American liberty, Jefferson, construed that constitutional provision as he would have the Senate to construe it. He is wholly mistaken. He comes to that conclusion by supposing that the clause of the Articles of War to which he has adverted was intended to provide that all cases arising in time of war are to be tried by a court-martial. It is a misapprehension of the meaning of the articles; and if the honorable member will permit me to say so, it is a libel upon the memory of Jefferson. If any man ever lived who would have protested against subjecting the citizen to military rule, unless from necessity, it was him. What is the act of Congress confirming the article? As the Senator will see, it is an act relating to the armies of the United States alone, and containing almost every variety of regulation supposed to be necessary for the organization and preservation and discipline of the Army. It provides, by the fifty-fifth article:

"Whosoever belonging to the armies of the United States employed in foreign parts shall force a safeguard shall suffer death."

"Whosoever shall relieve the enemy with money," &c.

And the honorable member seems to suppose that the words "belonging to the armies" have nothing to do with the meaning of the immediate succeeding article. It is not so. The article is to be read, although a separate article, as you would read it if it constituted one and the same article. The fact that the one article completes a sentence and the next article begins and is a sentence of itself amounts to nothing. When you look to the law as a law regulating the armies of the United States, and you see that it provides that "whosoever belonging to the armies of the United States, &c., shall force a safeguard shall suffer death," and "whosoever shall relieve the enemy with money," &c., by every rule of construction, if there was nothing else to drive you to the necessity of applying that rule of construction, you are obliged to carry on the words "belonging to the armies of the United States" into the meaning of the second article; and the honorable member will permit me to say that until this war commenced—

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. How will you try a spy in a loyal State where the courts are open? He does not belong to the Army, and never did.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; but that is an exception.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Under this provision in the Articles of War?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; an exception under this section, and is to be tried by the laws of war.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. So, I contend, is every conspirator in the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Who is a conspirator? Why, Mr. President, then treason, in peace or in war, is to be tried by these courts-martial.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend his remarks to enable the Chair to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had receded from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and had agreed to the said first amendment, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and it had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on all the other disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 2) granting a pension to Ellen M. Whipple, widow of the late Major General Amiel W. Whipple, of the United States Army;

A bill (S. No. 44) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;

A bill (S. No. 91) to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 122) for the relief of Mary A. Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker;

A bill (S. No. 171) further to amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862;

A bill (S. No. 390) relating to the postal laws;

A bill (S. No. 411) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia;"

A bill (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company;

A bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees; and

A bill (H. R. No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof."

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I wish to make a motion in regard to a bill that has just come from the House. The Army bill has been returned from the House of Representatives, and I will ask that the action of the House be read, and then I desire to submit a motion.

The Secretary read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1865.

Resolved, That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and agree to the same amended as follows: insert in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out by the Senate:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be used for the purpose of paying the Illinois Central railroad for the transportation of property or troops of the United States.

Resolved, That the House agree to the report of the committee of conference on the remaining disagreements of the two Houses on said bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will be observed that the House has agreed to the report of the committee of conference in all respects except as to one amendment, and that they have amended and presented in a different shape, applying it distinctly to the Illinois Central Railroad Company. I do not know whether it is necessary for us to act upon the report of the committee of conference, but I suppose it is, before any further action is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOOT.) This is a case of a committee agreeing in part upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and so far as they agree it is necessary for each House to concur in that report to the extent that they do agree.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I submit the report of the committee of conference and ask the Senate to agree to the portions to which the House have agreed, and that will narrow down the disagreement to one point.

Mr. COWAN. I submit whether it is competent for this body to agree to a part of a conference report and reject a part. The report itself is an entirety, and must be wholly agreed to or wholly rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the committee of conference agree on some portions of the disagreeing votes and disagree on others. That it is competent for a committee of conference to do; the precedents are very numerous.

Mr. COWAN. Unquestionably; but if they do not agree upon all the subjects in dispute then there is no report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is then open for either House to recede from those upon which they do not agree, or to appoint another committee of conference. The report will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their fourth amendment.

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the second and third amendments of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

As to the first amendment of the Senate, striking out the proviso at the end of the bill, the committee are unable to agree.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,
N. A. FARWELL,
L. W. POWELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,
WILLIAM S. HOLMAN,
THOMAS T. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to the first amendment of the Senate, and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The motion was agreed to; and

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. WILLEY.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. CLARK, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered one, two, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, and fourteen, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their third, fifth and a half, twelfth, and thirteenth amendments.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "on iron bars for railroads or inclined planes, ten cents per one hundred pounds."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out "two and a half cents" and insert, in lieu thereof, "one cent."

DANIEL CLARK,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
N. A. FARWELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THADDEUS STEVENS,
SAMUEL S. COX,
JOHN A. GRISWOLD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. POMEROY. I thought, after the vote we had this morning, that the committee on the part of the Senate would certainly insist on carrying out the wishes and vote of the Senate. After voting as we did, two to one almost, not to increase the tax on iron, (and that is about the only thing there is in the bill, and, in my opinion, the only reason why a tariff bill was got up at all,) I did not think the Senate committee would recede and agree to the amendment of the House. But unless some other Senator desires to make opposition to it, I shall not. I discharged my duty this morning, and I shall not persist against it now and thus defeat the bill. My opinion is that this increase of duty on iron is bad for internal improvements, bad for the revenue, and bad for everything. I do not believe there is a good feature in it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say that on the report of the committee of conference I shall not present my views about the propriety of any tax on railroad iron. I regret to see it done. I would rather see the bill lost than that and some other provisions of the bill adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays on concurring in the report, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Hale, Howard, Howe, Lane, of Indiana, Morrill, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Ten Eyck Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Crimes, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Wilkinson, and Willey—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Collamer, Doolittle, Harding, Harris, Henderson, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wright—16.

So the report was concurred in.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. MORGAN, Mr. SPRAGUE, and Mr. POWELL.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 807) to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Finance.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) to facilitate communication with certain Territories—to the Committee on Territories.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) to facilitate communication with the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado—to the Committee on Territories.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of this date, information in relation to the amount of money paid by the War Department from the 1st of March, 1861, to the 1st of March, 1865, to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company for the transportation of troops and munitions of war between Baltimore and Washington, or for any other purpose; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, to strike out the eighteenth section of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am nearly through. I was about to say, when interrupted, that until this war commenced I never had heard a different construction given to the Articles of War adopted by Congress in 1806, and certainly never heard it intimated that it was possible, by any interpretation of the fifth constitutional amendment, to authorize a man to be tried for a capital or other infamous offense except on an indictment and presentment, unless he was in the military or naval service of the United States or in the militia. But the practical construction that these military men have put upon that clause is that they have the power to try everybody who is charged with any offense that in their opinion remotely affects the military service, or remotely—no matter how remotely—has a tendency to aid the rebellion. I know the military prisons in Baltimore have been filled with citizens who have been charged with no offense that, except by military sense, could be construed in any way as assisting the rebellion; and that is the case all over the country; and it is attended with enormous expense. There have been at times from one to two hundred men in Baltimore, citizens of Maryland or citizens who happened to be found there, imprisoned; not notified of what the offense for which they were imprisoned was until they were brought out before a military commission or military court-martial to be tried; and that was not done until they had been in prison for months and months; and when they are brought out, how are they tried? They are tried by a violation of the most ordinary and best-established rules of evidence. All the safeguards and rules of evidence, adopted after the experience of centuries and thrown around the citizen who is charged with an offense, have been disregarded. What is the operation upon the Government in a financial point of view? The honorable member from Ohio showed me a letter the other day stating that there was a trial going on in Cincinnati at that time that had cost or would cost the Government from one to two hundred thousand dollars. A trial down in Boston, the trial to which I believe the honorable member from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] referred the other day, cost the Government I do not know how much more.

But not only have these military gentlemen violated, as I think, and I speak it with all proper respect for the opinion of my friend from Indiana, their duty in the particulars to which I have adverted, but the provisions of your own legislation on the subject have been disregarded by the Executive. Congress was aware—the wailings from every State brought the fact to your knowledge—that these outrages upon the liberty of the citizen were being perpetrated; that men were kept in prison, not for days, for weeks, or for months, but for years, without being advised of what the charge against them was, and you therefore, as far back as the 3d of March, 1863, said:

"That the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War be, and they are hereby, directed, as soon as may be practicable, to furnish to the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and of the District of Columbia, a list of the names of all persons, citizens of States in which the administration of the laws has continued unimpaired in the said Federal courts, who are now, or may hereafter be, held as prisoners of the United States, by order or authority of the President of the United States, or either of said Secretaries, in any fort, arsenal, or other place, as State or political prisoners, or otherwise than as prisoners of war."

The list is to be sent to the courts, and if there was no presentment or indictment within a limited time the parties are to be discharged. That law has been utterly disregarded. An investigation made by a committee of the other House some weeks ago exhibited a state of things existing here, within the sound of our voices, shocking to every sense of freedom which ought to be entertained by the American citizen. More than a year ago the President of the United States constituted a commission to visit these several places and discharge persons against whom there was no ground of arrest in their opinion, and they found, as one of them told me, here in the Old Capitol prison, right before us, a man who had been there for five or six months, and when the person who had placed him there was called before the commission to state upon what grounds he was placed there, he said that he had made a mistake; he was not the man he intended to arrest; it was somebody else.

Mr. President, it is too late in the session to argue this question; but it is not, and I am sure it will not, be considered as a party question by the Senate of the United States. It is a question that rises high above party. It is a question that involves the liberty of the American citizen. To say now that every citizen of the United States is to be dragged before a military tribunal is to say that our fathers fought during the Revolution in vain. We are now, as long as this state of things lasts, in no better condition than the subjects of the Turkish empire; not in as good a condition as the subjects of the Emperor of France, if any one can, at the instance of any detective of the Government, be cast into prison, and whenever he may think proper, or the military may think proper, brought out and tried by a military commission who do not know what the rules of evidence are, or who, if they do know, in general utterly disregard them. I have done, sir.

Mr. STEWART. I do not desire to make a speech on this subject; but I think this section is of such a remarkable character that it ought not to pass without a protest or comment. The section implies, in the first place, that there is an evil which Congress is called upon to redress; a wrong that demands this action on our part; that the Administration is committing such outrages that it is necessary for Congress to interpose and prevent its carrying out the policy which it has been carrying out for years. We are called upon here to pass a vote of condemnation upon the Administration of the country for the last four years. On the last night of the session we are called upon to admit as true what was charged upon us in the canvass, and what we met upon every stump throughout the United States, that the Government of the United States has become a despotism; that they are guilty of arbitrary arrests and unjust punishments. We combated that charge throughout the presidential canvass; and we, some of whom were elected on that very issue, are now called upon, I repeat, at the close of the session to admit that our enemies were right and we were wrong. It is no new thing. It is the issue that was made in the last canvass before the people, and upon which the verdict of the people was rendered—a verdict grander in its character and more sublime in conception than any the world has ever seen; of a free people, after four years of trial and of war, going forward to the ballot-box, and by the ballot-box declaring that that condition of things should be continued. The reason why that verdict was cast was because the American people loved the Constitution and the laws. They loved that Constitution that gives them the right of trial by jury. They loved that Constitution which enables the Government to maintain its own existence. They believed that the Constitution, when fairly construed, does enable this Government to defend itself against its enemies.

Now, look at the cunning, I may say the very artful, construction here intended to be given. It is said that this section is a fair construction of the Constitution. I have only examined this question since it has been brought up here, and I did not know that such a question could be brought before us until this evening. It is said that this section is a just exposition of the Constitution; that the Constitution only allows those actually mustered or commissioned into the military service, or those charged with being spies, to be tried and punished by military commissions. I should like to ask, where do you find in the Constitution a provision whereby those who are charged with being rebel spies can be punished by a military commission? If the construction which the gentleman from Maryland seeks to place on this instrument means that none except those in the military or naval service shall be tried and punished by a military commission, where do you find the authority to punish spies? "Oh," it is said, "but they are rebel enemies; we have got to give the Constitution some construction; it does not mean exactly what it says; it has not provided for every contingency of war; it does not contain the full Articles of War; we must give it a reasonable construction; it must include rebel spies; it would be unreasonable to say otherwise." Very well; if it would be unreasonable to say that it does not include rebel spies among those who may be tried and punished by a military commission, is it not equally unreasonable to say that it does not include a secret enemy that has not declared himself a rebel, but who is plotting the ruin of his country?

Mr. President, but for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, but for the strong arm of the war power, but for the enforcement of that power in this country, there would be no country today. We should not be here to-night but for the exercise of the war powers. Before we deliberately come forward and, in face of the verdict of the people, censure an Administration that has held the helm of the ship of State through this terrific storm; this great trial of republican institutions, which in the end promises so much for the cause of human liberty, and declare that the exercise of this military power for the preservation of the nation, for the preservation of the great Republic, has been wrong, violent, oppressive, and wicked, let us pause. I am not prepared to take such a step.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to ask the Senate either to pass this bill without further debate, or to lay it on the table. It will be scarcely possible now to engross it with the various amendments that have been put upon it, and unless we can have a vote on the various propositions of amendment yet to be offered without debate, we might as well save time by considering the bill as lost and taking a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOOT.) The question is on striking out the eighteenth section.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before that motion is put, I move to amend the section by inserting the words "employed, drafted, enlisted, or," after the word "persons."

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. JOHNSON. How will it read then?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read as it will stand if amended.

The Secretary read, as follows:

That no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons employed, drafted, enlisted, or actually mustered or commissioned or appointed in the military or naval service of the United States, or rebel enemies charged with being spies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first occurs on amending the section as proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The object of that amendment is to subject to trial by military courts-martial or commissions not only persons who have been mustered into the service of the United States, but all persons in the employ of the military service. Persons, for instance, in the arsenals who have been detected filling shells with sand instead of powder, and teamsters and others who are in the employ of the Army, may properly, I think, be considered as part of the Army, and subjected to trial by military courts-martial. That is the object of that amendment.

At this late hour, and with the appeal which the Senator from Ohio makes that we take action, I do not feel that I should be justified in making any lengthy remarks upon the matter now under consideration. I think, notwithstanding the very eloquent remarks of the Senator from Indiana and of the Senator from Nevada, that, so far from strengthening the Union sentiment of this country, no one thing has done so much to alienate the feelings of loyal men as the unwarranted arrests which have been made by subordinate officers in the loyal States.

Mr. CONNESS. No one pretense has been so continually set up.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And that is what has divided them. Nearly one half the people of the North have been arrayed, not against the Government, but have been expressing dissatisfaction and weakening the arm of the Government by just such acts as this section seeks to avoid. From the beginning of this war I have believed that the true course to pursue was to preserve the Government and preserve liberty together. I believed that constitutional liberty, liberty regulated by law, could be preserved in this land. It is the liberty we are fighting for. And when gentlemen lay aside the law and the Constitution and say, "There is no law, nothing but the strong arm," how are you any better than the traitor you fight? What does he do but disregard the law and the Constitution? What is this rebellion but an armed resistance to constitutional and legal authority? If you would be strong, be strong under the banner of the law and the Constitution. Fight for liberty, fight for law, and then you will be strong.

Now, sir, I have before me the report of the Secretary of War; and I wish to do an act of justice to that high officer on this occasion. I have often heard him denounced for these arbitrary arrests and for non-compliance with the act of Congress which made it his duty and the duty of other officers of the Government, whenever persons charged with political offenses were arrested, to report their cases to the first term of the court which should be held in the proper district after the arrest took place. I am happy to know from this official report that in this respect the Secretary of War has endeavored to do his duty. The act of Congress making it the duty of the Secretaries to report to the judicial tribunals all cases of persons arrested in the loyal States charged with political offenses was passed on the 3d day of March, 1863. Within twenty days from the time the act passed, and perhaps as soon as it came to the notice of the Secretary of War, he issued this order:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, March 23, 1863.

COLONEL: I beg you to direct your attention to the provision of the late act of Congress requiring prisoners held under military authority to be released within a certain time, and to ask that proceedings may be taken against such as are not proper to be released, and that you will see that the provisions of that law are observed in regard to all persons held in military custody.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. HOLT, Judge Advocate General.

Here was an order of the War Department, made within twenty days of the passage of the act, charging a particular officer in his Department with the execution of this law, and enjoining upon him that he should see that the provisions of the act were observed in regard to all persons held in custody. What more could he do? The Secretary of War could not personally visit all the prisons in the land to ascertain if persons were held in confinement. He had to intrust this duty to some one; and if you will look through this report you will find that at different times he appointed commissions to visit the different prisons throughout the country and ascertain if there were persons held there in confinement who ought not to be confined; and many have been released by these commissioners. I make this statement in justice to a public officer. I have had some conversation with the Secretary of War upon this subject, and I learned from him that these arrests which had been made in the different parts of the country by subordinate officers had given him more pain than almost anything else that had occurred during the war; that he had been unable to sleep at night in consequence of its coming to his knowledge that persons had without cause been thus arrested and sometimes held for a considerable period of time before it came to his notice.

I voted for the law authorizing the suspension of the habeas corpus. I did it because in a time of war like this, in a great emergency, I thought there might be occasions when it was proper that men should be arrested and held in confinement. I voted for that law which provided that they might be taken and so held, and should not be released by a court or anybody else until after there was an opportunity to present their case to a grand jury, and not then unless the judge was satisfied that it was proper to release them, and they gave bond for their good behavior and took an oath of fidelity to the Government. But, sir, when I voted for that law, I did not expect that the writ of habeas corpus was to be regarded as suspended by all the subordinate officers throughout the land. I did not suppose that every provost marshal in the land would be at liberty to arrest whom he pleased, and keep him in confinement. I thought that whenever an arrest was made, the fact would be immediately reported to headquarters, to the War Department, or to the President himself, and that action would be taken in regard to the case at the earliest possible period. It seems the Secretary of War has endeavored to take action. It seems by this report that he has endeavored to discharge his duty in that respect; and I am glad that he has; and I am glad that the fact turns out to be that persons who have been arrested have had relief and been discharged where it did not appear on investigation that there were any charges against them sufficient to put them on trial.

In regard to the section under consideration, I think it should be guarded; I think it should be so framed as not to impair the efficiency of the Government in carrying on this war, and not unnecessarily to infringe upon the right of the citizen. Sir, I have a great respect for law. I love the Constitution. I believe it is the respect for law and the love of the Constitution that is bearing us triumphantly through this great struggle. I believe that is the banner under which our soldiers march to victory; that they feel they are marching in obedience to law and the Constitution and not as violators of law. Therefore I am willing that a provision carefully worded—I am not sure that this is sufficiently carefully worded—but I am willing that a provision should be inserted in the law, and I think there ought to be one inserted, that shall secure to the citizen the great rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution, and which have been handed down to us from our ancestors. I am not for placing the liberties and the lives of the peaceable citizens of this country at the disposition of the provost marshals and the subordinate officers throughout the land who are clothed with military authority. While I would be willing, and have been willing, that in special cases which meet the approbation of the Secretary of War and of the President, noted persons may be arrested and held, as a general proposition I am in favor of securing to the citizen, wherever it can be done, all the rights which the Constitution guarantees to him.

I say to the Senators who are so zealous tonight in favor of military trials, who are in favor of trying the citizen by a military tribunal, that you are setting an example which is utterly subversive of the Constitution and regulated liberty; you are overturning all that the Anglo-Saxon race has contended for for two hundred years, which is, the right of the citizen to be protected by law and regulated by law, and not to have his rights and his liberties dependent upon an officer, without law, and in disregard of it. There is no law regulating these trials of the citizen. Wherever an act is done—and I think that is the distinction—connected with the military service of the Government, there the military tribunals take hold of the party. Wherever the judicial tribunals of the country are overborne, of necessity the military tribunals must govern.

Your military authority must preserve the peace in Charleston, in Savannah, in all those localities where officers who were loyal to the Government have been displaced by rebels and traitors, where you have no civil tribunals to administer the law according to the Constitution which provides for the administration of justice. When war rages, we are to carry on the war according to the rules of civilized warfare. We have a right when we meet the enemy to shoot him down. The Constitution gives us the right to make war, to raise armies and maintain navies, and we may use those armies and those navies for the purpose of subduing insurrection and rebellion. But because you have a right to use an army and a navy in battering down the houses in Charleston, you have no right to use them to batter down the houses in Albany, New York, or in Columbus, Ohio. And that, in my judgment, is the proper distinction; the military rules where the civil authorities are overborne; the military takes jurisdiction of all offenses connected with the military service; it takes prisoners of the enemy; it tries and punishes by court-martial and military commission offenders connected with the military service.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I shall not at this late hour of the night long detain the Senate; but I cannot listen to the remarks of the Senator from Illinois without attempting something in the shape of a reply. What does this section propose which is now moved to be stricken out? It proposes to release and liberate hundreds of rogues and conspirators now confined in prison awaiting trial, and some of them undergoing their sentences; to set them at liberty again to plot and conspire against the peace and safety of the United States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It does not propose to set anybody free.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, it does.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Read it. There is no such word in it.

Mr. HOWARD. Read it. Will the honorable Senator from Illinois tell me that that section which is now proposed to be stricken out will not release persons now detained for trial? If he shall, I have to say to him, with some diminution of my ordinary respect for his professional opinion, that he has not read his books of law with sufficient care. That section declares that henceforth no person shall be tried, &c.: if a man is detained for trial for a particular offense he cannot, by this section, be tried for that offense; he is, ipso facto, by the very terms themselves of the statute, released, liberated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator either misunderstands the proposition or I do. I understood the Senator to say it would release persons who had been convicted and were undergoing their sentences. The proposition is that persons are not to be tried in a particular way, but that does not prevent their being tried by civil tribunals. It prevents their being tried by court-martial or military commission; but as I read it—I have certainly misread it if it is not so—it does not propose to release anybody, and has no effect whatever on a person undergoing his sentence.

Mr. HOWARD. I have read the clause with some care, and I tell you if that shall pass as it is there written in the bill before us, all those men who are now detained for trial by courts-martial will be released and liberated. It is impossible that such should not be the result. It is not necessary that the statute should in terms declare that they should be released; it is sufficient if the statute be such that they cannot be tried in that form; if they cannot be thus tried, they must, from the very terms of the statute, be released and liberated. Had it not been for the salutary use of this restraining power on the part of the Executive as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, it is, I think, no news to say to the Senator from Illinois that the very city in which he resides would have been reduced to a mass of cinders and ashes during the sitting of the Chicago convention, for it is perfectly well known, as well established as any fact can be, that on that occasion there were thousands of conspirators who came over from Canada, where they had been hatching their plots against the United States, and for the very purpose of firing that town, liberating the prisoners confined at Camp Douglas, and doing other acts of mischief and destruction. Had it not been for the same protective, the same tutelary power which the Senator now denounces so bitterly, and of which he has heretofore spoken in this body in terms of approbation and praise on more than one occasion, the very dwelling of that Senator would have been laid in ashes by the hands of just such wretches as these military courts and commissions are intended to punish. Now, sir, away with this mawkish, affected sensibility in regard to courts-martial. If there be any fault connected with them, and connected with the Administration on account of them, it is that they have not been used with sufficient vigor and vigilance. That is my opinion. The rigors belonging to martial law are in a moment of war and public danger the only restraining power sufficient to compel obedience to law and order. I will not trespass on the time of the Senate longer. I am glad the motion has been made to strike out that section so anomalous in a statute making appropriations.

Mr. CONNESS. I shall not certainly speak long. The honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] dilates at length, and treats us to his fears of and his contempt for provost marshals. Well, sir, I never heard it from that source before done so well; I have often heard it in the Senate since I have had a seat here, and I have heard it all over the country; but I never knew until now that the shadow of a provost marshal frightened the honorable Senator from Illinois. Did a provost marshal ever arrest the Senator? Has he been detained by a provost marshal? Has the honorable Senator from Michigan been arrested on his way from Washington to home or back by a provost marshal? Have you or I, sir? It may be that now and then provost marshals miss their game and strike an innocent man; but it has been more frequent that they have missed the base conspirators who have filled the country in organized gangs blurring professions to the Union and respect for the Constitution, and yet engaged in tearing both down. It is against such that provost marshals have been organized. It is against such that provost marshals should have performed their duties more effectually than they have done.

We are told by the honorable Senator from Illinois that nothing has so injured the cause of the Union, nothing has so injured the Administration of the country since the war began, as the system of "arbitrary arrests." No, Mr. President, nothing has injured the Administration and the cause of the Union, since the war began, more than timorousness and fear, for there has not been a time when the administrative power in any of its branches has come up to the high tone of the mass of the people. It is in the integrity, in the unselfish patriotism, in the innate, inborn, instinctive zeal of the masses of the poor citizens of this land that we have found protection and security. The faults of the Administration have been in coming short of meeting this high-toned, this determined patriotism existing in the body of the people.

It is true, Mr. President, that the actions of provost marshals and the acts of the Administration have been declaimed against; but by whom? Either for the base purpose of building up and organizing party in the country pending war, or for the meaner purpose and intent of subverting the Government of the country. No honest man fears any and every effort during war that goes to strengthen the national arm. Only wretches, only cowards, stand in dread. Sir, the last election by the American people, one of the great consummations of which we are to witness perhaps in this Hall to-morrow, is testimony better than that of the honorable Senator from Illinois that the Administration, the War Department, the provost marshals, have not transcended the proper bounds since this war began.

Sir, I have little respect for these croakings and these pretentious exhibitions of regard for constitutional law. Give me a country, give me a society, give me a noble people, and I will give you, or they will give you, a Constitution; but destroy the integrity of a people, render them base, let them become detestable and properly subject to the scorn of honest men, and you have neither a people nor a Constitution; you are not an example longer to mankind; you become the scorn, the by-word, of the world. The work of the great American fathers was never intended to degenerate into this, but it was intended to culminate grandly and gloriously down to the end of time.

Sir, I frequently hear leerings against the enthusiasm of men who feel. It is the acts of the men who feel that have preserved us, and through whose devotion and truthfulness we stand here to-night.

But, Mr. President, I did not intend to consume the time of the Senate, and I know that I transcend in doing so. I will simply say that rather than allow this section to pass, rather than that the Congress of which I am a member should knowingly adopt this section, and plant the condemnation of its expression upon the best acts of our people for four years past, I would see this appropriation bill and all the others that you have passed sunk into perdition. You cannot taint the bill before you with this miserable and disgraceful attack upon the patriotism of the land, and get my vote for it. It is a poor compliment at this time for us law-makers to pay to the men who have been our agents, the men who have been the mediums through which we have acted in all this great contest, that we now turn about and definitively say to them, "You have violated liberty, you have outraged law, you have pulled down the great edifice of civil liberty, and we reproach you thus for it." Such an act, Mr. President, can have no vote of mine.

Mr. GRIMES. I desired to say a few words on this subject, and had intended to do so; but I am admonished by the lateness of the hour, or rather the early hour [half past one o'clock a.m.] at which we are holding our session, and also by the fact that the subject has been ably argued on all sides, that it would be a work of supererogation for me to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have got to remain together.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not understand that we have to remain.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Army appropriation bill is behind.

Mr. GRIMES. There are several other measures besides this that ought to be passed. It is necessary that this bill should be passed at some time, in order to have a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and have it enrolled. If we wish to have an extra session, if we desire to come back here in the course of ten or fifteen days, we had better continue this debate. If we do not, I think we had better take the vote. I have a great anxiety to speak, but for that reason I shall decline to do so.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot think of abusing the patience of the Senate by attempting an argument at this hour of the night; yet I deem it proper, because of some things that have been said by my colleague, to claim the attention of the Senate for a brief period.

From the argument which has been indulged in one would think this was the first time this subject had been spoken of in the Senate. I beg leave to call the attention of Senators to the very proposition that is now before us which has been denounced with quite as much passion as judgment. This section provides that hereafter no person shall be tried by court-martial or military commission in any State or Territory where the courts of the United States are open, except persons actually mustered or in commission in the service of the United States, or enemies charged with being spies, and a modification acceptable to myself is proposed by the Senator from Illinois. Just two years ago to-day the Senate of the United States agreed to quite this much, and prescribed a penalty for the violation of the very principles defined in this section. When the Senate of the United States, two years ago, agreed that the President might suspend the writ of habeas corpus, it was not unconditionally and without restrictions, but it was with such provisions as would yet secure the liberty of the citizen; and although the statute has been referred to, I feel justified, because of the importance of the question, in referring to it again. After authorizing the President to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, that law goes on to provide:

"That the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War be, and they are hereby, directed, as soon as may be practicable, to furnish to the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States and the District of Columbia a list of the names of all persons, citizens of States in which the administration of the laws has continued unimpaired in the said Federal courts, who are now, or may hereafter be, held as prisoners of the United States, by order or authority of the President of the United States, or either of said Secretaries, in any fort, arsenal, or other place, as State or political prisoners, or otherwise than as prisoners of war; the said list to contain the names of all those who reside in the respective jurisdictions of said judges, or who may be deemed by the said Secretaries, or either of them, to have violated any law of the United States in any of said jurisdictions, and also the date of each arrest; the Secretary of State to furnish a list of such persons as are imprisoned by the order or authority of the President, acting through the State Department, and the Secretary of War a list of such as are imprisoned by the order or authority of the President, acting through the Department of War. And in all cases where a grand jury, having attended any of said courts having jurisdiction in the premises after the passage of this act, and after the furnishing of said list, as aforesaid, has terminated its session without finding an indictment, or presentment, or other proceeding against any such person, it shall be the duty of the judge of said court forthwith to make an order that any such prisoner desiring a discharge from said imprisonment be brought before him to be discharged; and every officer of the United States having custody of such prisoner is hereby directed immediately to obey and execute said judge's order; and in case he shall delay or refuse so to do, he shall be subject to indictment for a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and imprisonment in the common jail for a period not less than six months, in the discretion of the court: Provided, however, That no person shall be discharged by virtue of the provisions of this act until after he or she shall have taken an oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, and to support the Constitution thereof; and that he or she will not hereafter in any way encourage or give aid and comfort to the present rebellion or the supporters thereof."

It is further provided in this law, but I will not detain the Senate by reading it, that if the Secretary of State or War shall neglect to make return of the persons held as described, to the proper court, the parties imprisoned shall upon their own motion be brought before the judge, and upon a hearing shall be discharged. What has been the condition and state of the law since the enactment of this statute up to the present time, and what is the law of the case now? That a man may be arrested at the pleasure of any military officer and put upon trial before any court-martial or military commission? By no means. The President may order an arrest; thus far the writ of habeas corpus is suspended; but there is a substitute furnished for the writ of habeas corpus by this very law that many of you, Senators, enacted. I had no part in the enactment of this law, nor I suppose had the Senator from California, who is so very earnest in his appeals here to-night; but many of you, Senators, helped to enact this law. You would not say that the ancient guard and protection of the liberty of the citizen, the writ of habeas corpus, should be unconditionally suspended. You allowed it to be suspended for a time until the courts should meet, and then on the meeting of the court you required the party to be brought before the judge, and if no indictment were found against him he should be discharged upon the order of the court. No trial was contemplated; simply a holding, a holding until the court should come around and the grand jury should be in session, and if that grand jury found no bill the order was (as it would have been upon the trial of a writ of habeas corpus) that the party should be discharged.

Does any Senator regret that action? My colleague helped to enact this law; he, two years ago to-night, by his deliberate vote said, "No man shall be arrested and tried before a military court unless he is, according to the spirit of our Constitution and laws, answerable to a military court."

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to say that my impression is that I voted the other way; but if I voted differently then, I think the exigencies and circumstances of the country require the vote I propose to give now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. For two years my colleague has sat in his place here and allowed this to be the law of the land. He has never proposed its repeal or modification. By his silence he has said this law is right. This law, which will not allow the President to put any man on his trial before a military court unless he be properly answerable before such a court, has stood for two years without a word of complaint from my worthy and very able colleague. But to-night he says he would rather see any of these appropriation bills fail; he would see all the appropriations necessary for the support of what he regards, and what I regard, to be the best Government on earth go down to perdition rather than he would sanction that which has been the law of the land well expressed for two years. The trouble is not in the law. Senators, the law is plain. When you said there should be no longer the writ of habeas corpus in the United States, you said that in its stead there should be this high and sure remedy, that a man should only be held for a time, but that when the court came round, if the grand jury did not indict him he should be discharged. You said it. The question is, shall it be the law, or shall there be above the Senate and above the House of Representatives a higher power in the country, a power to place a man upon trial?

My colleague says that some of our fellow-citizens in Indiana have been put upon trial before courts-martial for civil offenses. I know what the offense charged was. It was a conspiracy to commit treason. That was the charge. And where do you find the offense described? You find it defined in the act of 1862, well defined, and the penalty prescribed—not the penalty of going before a military court, but the penalty is a trial before the United States district court, a civil court, upon an indictment, and the punishment is to follow the judgment of that court.

Then, my colleague says, by acquiescing in this law it is all right; when the court comes around, and the grand jury inquires into this matter, if that grand jury ignores the prosecution the party shall go acquitted; but now to put that in an appropriation bill to-night not only ought to sink that bill but ought to sink all the bills! My colleague says, leave your President without his salary, leave your armies unpaid, leave your ships to rot in the ports; the machinery of the Government must stop rather than take away from military officers the power to try, convict, and put to death men contrary to law, not contrary to the common law, not contrary to our impressions, but contrary to what you Senators wrote just two years ago to-night should be the law of the land. How is it? Where is the law-making power now? Is it here? Have we anything to do with the making of the law? Our fathers thought so; our constituents thought so when they elected us here; but it is not so. The law is, as we declared it, that the President shall not try a man who is not connected with the Army or the Navy before a military court, but that he shall simply hold him in custody, and for that time the writ of habeas corpus is suspended, and shall then bring him before the court, and if he is not found guilty by a grand jury he shall go acquitted. We said that; but the military officers say no, and, as my colleague says, in the very eye of that law men have been sentenced to death in Indiana. That is true, as I understand. Men have been so sentenced to die, and if they die in violation of law who is the murderer? No man's life can be taken except by authority of law. If there is authority of law for it my colleague may sustain the shedding of the blood, he may say that the garments of the officers are yet white after it is done, but it has been long decided by the tribunals of our race that if it is against law it is a murder. That has been too long decided to be questioned now.

If this law is law, it did suspend the writ of habeas corpus for a time until a court came around; but when the court passed by and the jury found no indictment then the law says the party shall go. Instead of that a court unknown to that law has assumed the power of trying men for the orinary crimes that are defined in our statutes; a military tribunal brings these men before it, tries them, convicts them, and they are shot. Senators, how does it stand? It is not justified, for the law says it is wrong. They may be guilty, they may be scoundrels, as Senators say, guilty felons. I do not know of that; but before you shed a guilty felon's blood the law must clothe you with the power. Go out into the avenues of your city, and you may find some man that is a guilty scoundrel, and will you undertake to put him to death? It would haunt you to the day of your death. You would not dare to do it; and if you cannot do it simply because he is a guilty scoundrel, can eight men called together by a commanding officer in the very face of the law do it? I say to my colleague, I say to Senators who become excited here, it is not of much consequence to you, to your children, to the millions of people that are to inhabit this country after we have ceased to legislate for them, whether the War Department is criticised or whitewashed, but I tell you what is of high consequence, that the law which protects the high and the low alike, which guards the humblest in society and checks the most powerful, shall be maintained as the rock of ages. It is the salvation of every man, woman, and child in the country. This raging and rampaging about a criticism on an Administration that will pass away, to be recollected in history either for its virtues or vices as may be, has not much weight with me.

I ask Senators to stand by this law. You enacted it deliberately; you thought it was right; you thought when you suspended the writ of habeas corpus that you would not do it without condition; it was a great protection, and had long been the pride of our race; you said it shall be suspended at the pleasure of the President for a time, until the court can meet, but when the court met the President shall bring the man before the court. Shall he do it? You Senators that are above passion, I appeal to you, shall he do it? This provision of the law proposes that he shall do it. It is denounced here to-night as an infamous thing. Are you ready to repeal this law? Are you ready to say that the ancient writ of liberty, the pride of the English race, shall, without condition and without limit, be suspended? When you look back to this statute of two years ago, are you not proud that you allowed its suspension only for a time? You would not allow even the President to hold a man for a longer time than until the court met; and now it is asked to go further than that; that whether the court meets or not, the Departments of the Government and the military authorities need not inquire any more! You go further than that, and say that against law tribunals shall be established to try men and shoot them! It would be the last thing I would want to do to sit on a court like that. When blood is shed I want to know that I am clothed with the sanctity and authority of the law.

Mr. President, I could not have conceived after this was the statute for two years that any Senator could object to this provision of this bill. I fear it will not do much good. It is not any stronger than that; it goes no further than that; and if that, with a penalty against the man who disregards it, has failed to protect the citizen, and men are about to lose their lives in the face of it, I do not know that a simple declaration in a statute of this year will do any good.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, it is probable that to-night half a million of our fellow-countrymen are sleeping out on the tented field, far away from their homes and the happiness and comfort only to be found in homes. They are the soldiers of the Republic, enlisted to fight its battles in one of the most terrible of all wars the world has yet seen. They are ready at any moment to arouse and rush to deadly conflict, where life itself is the stake they put in peril.

Now, sir, the question arises distinctly here in this place as to the object or purpose for which they fight. What is the issue in this fierce contest which has arrayed brother against brother, and has crimsoned so many battle-fields with their blood?

There is and there can be but one answer to this question right and proper to be given in the Senate of the United States, namely, this war is waged to maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and laws, and not from the desire of domination or of conquering and subjugating a people whom we hate. It is not because this man, this body, or this community wants war or delights in it that we make it, but it is because the will of the American people is of necessity supreme and must be obeyed, and that obedience must be enforced, even to the death, against all arming to resist it. The only true and proper exponent of the will of the American people is the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance of its authority.

This is a plain proposition, and one which can be stated without tearing it to tatters in passion, and it can be argued without hot blood. The nation has spoken its will through its appropriate organs in distinct and audible language; it has spoken to command, and when it commands it must be obeyed. It alone has the right to command, and it alone has the right to be obeyed. What other will dares come in conflict with it? Who so strong and powerful as to attempt to enforce any other command than it has authorized? Nobody dares such a thing, or dares it at the peril of a terrible reckoning in account with the outraged majesty of the nation when the day comes. Our guide is not our own will; we are the representatives of the nation, and we must execute its will as we find it written. Can we doubt this?

Some Senators, however, say that, being in a state of war, we cannot follow this guide. I answer, what guide are we to follow? To whose will must we be subordinate? Is the supremacy of the national will suspended in time of war; is it paralyzed? If war be dangerous, is it not the more necessary that this will should be in full vigor then? What can be more mischievous or false than to say that when we make war to enforce the Constitution and laws, they must stand aside and be in abeyance till the war is over?

The proposition under discussion declares that wherever the courts are open there the citizen charged with offense shall be tried by the law, and not by the arbitrary will of tribunals to whom the law has denied this authority. It declares this because it assumes that in such cases there is no war where the courts are open. And although the war may for the time being prevent the law from having its due course elsewhere, yet it cannot produce this result when the courts are open. There may be war in Virginia, in South Carolina, and Georgia, but there is no war in New England, New York, or Pennsylvania, and in these latter the reason, even if it were good, does not hold, and their citizens are just as much under the protection of the law as if there was no war anywhere.

I have seen that in time of war, of all other times, the will of the nation should be supreme and strictly obeyed. Why? Because when our armies are in the field, as in this war, fighting for the express purpose of enforcing obedience to the Constitution, how dare we violate it, set ourselves above it, or allow anybody else to do so? How could we look our soldiers in the face, if in their absence we had disregarded and trampled under foot the very ordinances for which they had encountered such dangers and endured such hardships? Let us beware on their account.

Mr. President, there is still another reason why we should always sustain and support the Constitution, apart from any I have mentioned, and that is that it asserts, maintains, provides for, and secures the liberty of the citizen in the most complete and ample manner. This has endeared it to struggling, suffering men everywhere, and this I fondly hope is that which has made us engage in the present war to save it. But how does it give us liberty? And I put the question because I am afraid that in the long enjoyment of that blessing there are some even in high places who have actually forgotten how the Constitution is necessary to it at all; they seem to think there is little or no connection between them. To such I will answer that it gives and secures liberty by declaring that no man shall be tried and punished except by law. That law must be written, declared, and published, so that all may know it, and ignorance of it is no excuse for its violation. Its rules must be made before its cases occur; they precede the cases and do not grow out of them.

No people can properly appreciate the value of this principle till tyrants teach them by depriving them of it. Rome began to feel it when Caligula wrote his edicts in characters so small and stuck them on such high posts that the people found it difficult to read them. Still, although this was tyranny, yet it was tyranny which might be avoided by a ladder and a pair of glasses, and was mild compared with that which punishes at the mere arbitrary will of a superior and in a mode unknown to the law.

Now, sir, there are three kinds of laws known and recognized as constitutional. First, the laws of nations, which govern us in all our relations with foreigners in peace and war; and whenever there is actual war even among ourselves these govern us; we apply them now daily to the rebels. Second, there is military law, to govern our land and naval forces, applicable to them, and them alone, by its very terms; and to apply it to any other classes of the people is sheer tyranny. The section under discussion has for its object to confine this law within its proper sphere, and to prevent those who administer it from encroaching on the next and last, which is municipal law, and which is the law for the people and for their protection.

Now let us for one moment contrast the operation of these laws and watch their working when applied to the actual task of punishing or protecting the citizen. I will take the civil side first, in order to show with what excessive care the weak are shielded against the strong.

No man can be arrested except upon view by the officer or upon information made on oath; and if it were otherwise innocent people might be annoyed continually without chance to know their accuser or their imputed crime; but when the oath is written preceding the warrant both are in the light. I suppose, too, that the value of this safeguard has been shown recently, from the complaints made that so many are merely arrested and confined, then discharged, without knowing why; they are put in peril and nobody punished.

In the next place, after a man is in custody of the law it is matter of great moment where he shall be tried. Shall it be in a strange place and among strange people, or shall it be in his own districts where the offense has been committed, where the facts are known, and where the character of the witnesses may be ascertained? Surely no one can doubt on this point, and our law wisely fixes by accurate metes and boundaries the several judicial districts, so that every man may be certain as to the place where his defense is to be made, and his rights protected.

Again, as to the tribunal: the judge must be one learned in the law, wise in its reasons, and skilled in its application. He must be responsible, too, for his conduct in its administration; if he were not all these no one could be safe in his court. But the district and the tribunal being fixed, we come to the agencies used.

Here we find the grand jury, which is, perhaps, the noblest of all the institutions of the common law, the great barrier which stands between the citizen and danger. He cannot be called upon to answer any charge against him till at least twelve of his neighbors agree that he ought to answer, and if they refuse he is safe. This grand jury, too, must fix, define, and find the offense charged, and no attorney, not even the Attorney General of the United States, can dispense with their action, even in the case of the humblest man; and there is even here a right of challenge.

The indictment found, who shall determine the fact of the guilt? Here, again, the neighborhood is invoked, and a jury of the vicinity is called, impaneled, and sworn to try according to the evidence. They must be impartial men, too, and if they are not the accused has the right to reject them. Nay, he is even allowed to challenge a certain number of them peremptorily, and without showing cause, in consideration as it were even of his antipathies. But it is perhaps in the presumption of innocence which accompanies the unfortunate all the way through these proceedings we find that which gives to our law its most sacred character; in this it rises almost to the divine; guilt must be proved to the exclusion of every other hypothesis.

On the trial, and moved by this great presumption, the judge is bound to consider himself the counsel of the prisoner, and before the courts were corrupted the prosecutor was bound to compel the attendance of all the witnesses, so that a subpena for the defense was unnecessary. Now, however, for fear any one should suffer from the neglect or corruption of officials, the humanity of the age allows to the defendant counsel and witnesses, thus securing him against all accidents.

The fact of the guilt, it will be seen, is committed to the juries; because if a man cannot be tried by his peers or equals, men who can sympathize with him and who are exposed to the same dangers, it is not very hard to see that the masses would soon be at the mercy of the few; and even if the latter did not abuse their prerogatives, the former never would be satisfied with their action. Still more, nobody but juries could take the responsibilities of trying facts. They are the representatives of communities, and communities acquiesce in their verdicts; and I think no judge in this country could possibly maintain himself for any length of time if you compelled him to decide the questions of fact which arise in criminal cases. Shield him with a jury, and all is easy; for he may then interpose and grant a new trial in case of conviction, and thus become the guardian of innocence against the blunders or prejudices of the jury.

In capital cases there is still another safeguard to life, in the fact that the sentence cannot be executed without the warrant of the executive; so that we find all the way through so many obstacles to the exercise of tyranny, that it is hardly possible that an innocent man can ever suffer an ultimate penalty. It is not in the nature of things that the committing magistrate, the grand jury, the petit jury, the court, the executive, should all combine to violate the laws and punish innocence.

Now, here is what is called liberty, and the safeguards of liberty, and whenever they are taken away there is no liberty; indeed, the removal of any one of them would be fatal to it. They are the principles of our Government which have endeared it to our citizens, have carried them forward in a career of unexampled prosperity, and, if strictly maintained, will yet give us assurance of a happy and free people.

The honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. LANE] thinks it impossible at present in his State to extend to political criminals the benefits of these provisions in favor of liberty. No man entertains for that Senator a higher opinion than I do; but does he really comprehend the value of his objections to the trial by "due process of law?" Why, sir, if it is true that the country is in such a condition that in the State of Indiana the laws cannot be administered, there is an end of it. If the people are so debased, so corrupt, or so malignant to each other that they cannot lay down their party differences on the altar, and stand by the law first, last, and all the time, then, sir, I am obliged to pronounce this form of government a failure. If the United States courts in the State of Indiana, where the judges are appointed by the President, where the jurors are summoned by the United States marshal, cannot be depended upon to punish those who conspire against the Government, then, sir, I say that there is an end of it. But, sir, I do not think so. I think patriots have taken counsel of their fears rather than of their reason. Surely we are not so lost to all that is sacred in any loyal State in the Union that our resentments override our oaths, and that we cannot as jurors conscientiously administer the laws of the country.

Mr. President, I will not, I cannot, believe this. I believe there are everywhere good and true men whom no threat would intimidate, whom no affection would sway, and whom no bribe would purchase; and that they, if called in the United States courts, would "true deliverance make according to the evidence." I am for trying them and trusting them fully and fairly, and then when they fail, if fail they do, then I am in despair; we have no longer free government; and as to despotisms, one is as good as another, the worst being the soonest cured.

I am willing to say, however, that I have had great charity for many people who at first supposed it was necessary to resort to military tribunals to find a remedy for disloyalty. The thought that the Union would be destroyed and the nation divided was so shocking to the minds of loyal men that they were not likely to stop at any means likely to prevent a consummation so much dreaded; but after the experience we have had of the mischievous working of unconstitutional measures, we ought not only to stop them for the future, but we ought to congratulate ourselves that the Constitution itself is again vindicated in the fact that it contains the true rules for our guidance even in times of civil war. I hope, too, that when it is again established as the supreme law of the Union it will only have a firmer hold on our affections, because its wisdom has been demonstrated by the consequences of disregarding it.

Now, let us contrast the course of the law as I have described it with the course adopted since the commencement of the war, of subjecting citizens not in the land or naval forces to trial by courts-martial, and we will soon see the difference. In the one we will find the utmost care and tenderness for the life, liberty, and character of the citizen, while in the other there is no security whatever for any of them. The innocent are in quite as much danger as the guilty, and not generally as well qualified to make defense.

And first: the charges are half the time of that vague, indefinite character, that it is not possible to reduce them with any degree of certainty to a definition, especially as there is no statute to furnish a guide. They are drawn up without any technical skill, and the record left of them would make but a sorry plea on a subsequent trial for either a former acquittal or conviction. A man might be put in peril on account of the same offense as often as it pleased his judges for aught they would serve him.

The court-martial itself is not free; it is composed of officers themselves constantly seeking and constantly expecting promotion from their superiors; and they are of course not at liberty to do anything which might interfere with their prospects in that respect. This is a prime mischief, as they only sit under special commissions, and for the trial of particular persons, whom it is the desire of the superiors to convict, or they would not have issued the commission. It would be singular, therefore, if the tribunal did not do the work it was set to do, and that with hearty good will, while they can have no sympathy with the accused, who belongs to a different class from themselves.

These officers are chosen, too, by those who as a general rule are anxious to vindicate the administration of their own department, and divert the attention of the public from their own delinquencies, by exposing the spectacle of some inferior victim, the judge advocate, who is in reality a kind of anomalous cross between a prosecutor and judge, having the disposition of the one and the power of the other to bring about a conviction.

The further mischief of these trials is that being utterly repugnant to the genius of our institutions and our laws, they command no respect and satisfy no demand of justice. Nobody ever acquiesces in the propriety of their findings, even while admitting them to be substantially correct, because, having no confidence in the machinery used, there is always a lingering suspicion that unfairness has existed in the proceedings.

Again, these courts are directed to sit oftentimes, without any regard to the convenience of suitors or witnesses, in places remote from their homes and from the locality where the offense was alleged to have been committed. This is a great hardship, especially to the poor, who cannot afford to pay for the travel and wages of witnesses, who come from great distances, nor can the witnesses themselves afford to attend at their own expense, with but a doubtful chance that the bills of costs in the end will be paid. Those familiar with the practice in criminal courts will be able at once to feel the importance of this defect.

On the trial, too, it is well known that most of the questions requiring the peculiar learning of the lawyer are those of evidence, such as the relevancy of the testimony.

But, perhaps, after all the greatest and most serious objection to these courts lies in the fact that they are engines of tyranny, useful only to wreak out the vengeance of private malice or partisan fury. They are in their nature especially adapted to these ends, and in all ages and under all circumstances have been denounced for the facilities they afforded in the execution of such purposes. The slightest grounds are sufficient to give them authority, and when once in motion there is no force adequate to restrain them, and they usually go on till they are intolerable.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS. PUBLISHED BY F. & J. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865.

NEW SERIES.....No. 87.

I do not think either that it makes much difference if we allow that the superior officers concerned in these proceedings are honest and patriotic, because the defects are in the tribunals themselves and in the mode and manner in which they try to administer justice. They lack that element of fairness which constitutes the distinguishing characteristic of our race, and which forever impels them to seek for a system which on this score will leave to the criminal himself nothing of which he can complain. Even his mouth ought to be closed in the presence of the strict impartiality and tender consideration given to his case; and when this is achieved, as it is in the courts of law, the art of governing has attained the utmost perfection of which it is capable.

I have listened with pain to the remarks of some Senators, who seem to be of opinion that so far from there being any just cause of complaint on account of these courts-martial, they are salutary in their operation and indispensable in the present crisis of our affairs. The honorable Senator from California was exceedingly passionate and full of invective on this subject. Now I understand that two or three years ago he was a Democrat, and I have no doubt honest in his belief.

Mr. CONNESS. Allow me to say to the Senator that I am now a Democrat.

Mr. COWAN. I suppose so, but I wish to put in a practical point of view the working of this mode of administering criminal justice. If, then, a Democrat in California, impregnated with his peculiar notions, should get into a discussion with a member of the party in power, and assail the Administration, as he had always been in the habit of doing, as matter of right, this of course would annoy his adversary, and if the dispute ran high, might lead him to seek the aid of the law to strengthen his argument; but he, being wiser than his anger, would refuse its assistance. What shall then be done? Is the Government powerless to protect itself against seditious and treasonable words, and must we wait, as the law waits, for the overt act before the blatant Democrat can be punished? Here then is a contingency in which it is thought necessary to invoke the aid of the military, and the hot and impetuous provost marshal, who feels the weight of the nation's fate on his shoulders, listens to the complaint, arrests the offender, flings him into confinement, or carries him away to some distant point, there to await such further disposition of him as may be determined upon. In the mean time all the facts of the case are exaggerated and distorted, the danger to the country from these seditious babblers is magnified, and all the worse passions are aroused into a desire for summary punishment.

Now, I should like to hear the Senator from California, if put in this position, speaking either for himself or another, and protesting against this outrageous violation of the rights of the citizen.

Mr. CONNESS. Allow me to say that since the beginning of this war there have been a great many Democrats arrested in my State, but they were very much like such Democrats as my friend from Pennsylvania. They were not my kind of Democrats. That kind is not arrested there; but my friend's class of Democrats is arrested very often and taken care of.

Mr. COWAN. I am of opinion the Senator from California will hardly ever be subjected to the fate of which I have spoken, for if I do not very much mistake his character he will always be found first to bow the suppliant knee at the footstool of power. He will always keep himself under the gabardine of him who reigns.

Still I say that if he were counsel in such a case as I have described you could not imagine the vehemence with which he would assert the constitutional rights of the citizen. Would he not insist that if he had committed a crime against the law that fact must be ascertained in the mode pointed out in the law? That to pretend to ascertain it in any other way was an insult to the majesty of the nation, and in itself the highest of all offenses?

Sir, I have put the case of one who had in fact committed no offense at all against the law; but it makes no difference even if he had committed the highest of all crimes, the wrong is just the same on the part of those who unlawfully usurp the power to try and punish him. What possible right has anybody to wrest from the custody of the law a criminal and inflict punishment upon him? In well-ordered States the populace is not allowed even to insult a murderer taken with the blood of murder upon him, nor on his trial, nor after his conviction, and not even at the foot of the gallows.

On the other hand, it is in the sacred observance of the law, the decent and reverential respect it exacts from all, and the sober, solemn majesty of its demeanor, which makes the people yield it all these; but they never accord them to a usurper. For instance, a man has been tried and convicted lately by a court-martial for fraud in his dealings with one of the Departments of the Government. He was a resident of Boston, and his crime, if he were guilty of it, was one which at this time is particularly odious, and which, if punished legally, would have given universal satisfaction. As it is, however, dissatisfaction exists, murmurs are heard everywhere; we have heard them even in this Chamber. Why? Because people lack confidence in these courts, and they have no faith that the proceedings were fair.

Now, take a case from the same State which occurred some years ago. One of the professors of one her colleges, a man of good character and high standing, was arrested for murder, taken into the proper court, and tried according to the forms and ceremonies of the law. The chief justice presided, the jurors were challenged, the witnesses were examined and cross-examined, the counsel were heard, and all was done patiently and painfully that Massachusetts could do to shield him if innocent. The theory of his guilt, however, was overpowering, and excluded every other hypothesis. He was condemned and executed as solemnly as if the whole had been a religious sacrifice, and the people bowed in acquiescence and without regret.

Mr. CONNESS. Will my friend allow me to ask for the name of the party to whom he has reference in Massachusetts?

Mr. COWAN. Does not the Senator know? If he does not, I will state the name.

Mr. CONNESS. Is it Smith, who was tried for frauds connected with the Navy Department?

Mr. COWAN. No, sir; I am referring to the case of Dr. Webster.

Mr. CONNESS. I understood that reference; but I was inquiring as to the other one.

Mr. COWAN. Smith has been imprisoned, I believe.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the Senator from California will not interrupt the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is charged as one of the members of the Finance Committee with securing the passage of all these appropriation bills, and is now making a speech in the Senate for the purpose of accomplishing that object. [Laughter.]

Mr. COWAN. For the purpose, Mr. President, of carrying that bill entire as it came from the Committee on Finance, and for the purpose of sustaining here and everywhere the great principles which are involved in that section of the bill which it is now proposed to strike out. I would not have put it in this bill if I had had my own way about it, but it is there, and being there I will vote for it. I will vote for it there, anywhere, at all times, and under all circumstances, simply because I believe it is wholesome, wise, beneficial, and conservative of the best interests of the country.

Mr. CONNESS. Will my friend allow me now to ask him whether the party he meant was a Mr. Smith, of Boston, who was convicted by a court-martial?

Mr. COWAN. I have said so.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe he was convicted before the last election in Massachusetts; was he not?

Mr. COWAN. I do not know, indeed.

Mr. CONNESS. And I think the majority in that State after his conviction was some seventy thousand.

Mr. COWAN. I think that gentlemen who attempt to draw the inference that because the people supported the Administration at the last election, they therefore supported all these trials by courts-martial all over the country, and all the doings of provost marshals and of military officers, in derogation of the courts of justice, make a very great mistake. The American people in sustaining the Administration at the last election were moved by a much higher and a much nobler impulse than that. It does not follow because a man condemns and reflects upon his friends when they do what he thinks to be wrong, that he therefore abandons them.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to ask one question. Was not the question of military arrests one of the issues placed in the platform on which Mr. McClellan ran at the last election?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, and I know, too, the answer. That allegation in the mouth of a friend of General McClellan was met immediately by saying, "You did it first; your candidate was the first man to make these arrests; he arrested the Maryland Legislature," and thus the wind was taken out of the sails of the McClellan men the moment complaint was made on that subject. That was not the issue, and it was not an issue which had any influence in the contest. The contest, as I said, rested on entirely different considerations, and I beg gentlemen will not lay that flattering unction to their souls that because the people endorsed the Administration generally, they did it particularly and in detail, because that is not true. Our people are sensible people, and when they deal with a matter of this kind they deal with it as a whole, and not partially. They decided that upon the whole it was better to continue the present Administration for another term, but they do not mean to say that they approved of everything that was done by it. No friend of the Administration that I have ever heard speak on this floor has said that he approved of everything it did, and I think nobody but a sycophant and a slave would say so, whether it merits approbation or not.

Mr. CLARK. I want to appeal now to the Senate to come to a vote. It is perhaps the last possible moment we can spare if we mean to pass this bill, and I appeal to Senators to make an effort to pass it by coming directly to a vote, rather than risk an extra session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall not detain the Senate long, but I have struggled for some time to get the floor to reply to a remark of—

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a report from a committee of conference?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly.

Mr. GRIMES. I object to a suspension of this bill for anything until we get through with it. I do not attribute any such design to the Senator from New York, but I have noticed that several Senators, after they have got rid of the business immediately in their hands in this way have turned in and treated to speeches for an hour or an hour and a half.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the Senator from New York is entitled to the floor to make his report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The Senator from New York has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the reading of the rule by which business can be suspended.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was upon the floor. The Senator from New York asked me to give way to him. I did so, and that entitled him to the floor. Now, I think the Senator from Iowa is out of order in seeking to prevent the Senator from New York making his report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report of the Senator from New York.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MORGAN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill No. 600, and the several amendments thereto, having met, after full and free conference do agree and recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The managers on the part of the Senate agree that the Senate shall recede from its first amendment, and the managers on the part of the House agree to modify the proviso to which that amendment was proposed, as follows: in line eighteen, section one, page 2, after the word "selected" insert the words "for each grade."

In line twenty, same section and page, strike out the word "only" and insert the words "and from the regular subsistence department, in proportion to the number of each of said classes respectively in service at the date of the passage of this act;" so that the proviso will read as follows:

And provided further, That the officers authorized to be assigned by this act shall be selected, for each grade, from the commissaries of subsistence who hold commissions or rank in the volunteer service, and in the regular subsistence department, in proportion to the number of each of said classes respectively in service at the date of the passage of this act.

And the managers on the part of the Senate, in behalf of the Senate, agree to such modification.

The managers on the part of the House agree, on behalf of the House, to the second amendment of the Senate.

E. D. MORGAN,
L. W. POWELL,
WILLIAM SPRAGUE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
A. McALLISTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

THE MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President—
Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me to make a report from a committee of conference?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I yield for that purpose.
Mr. WILSON. From the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House joint resolution No. 170, and the several amendments thereto, having met, after full and free conference do agree and recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the Senate recede from the ninth section of its amendment.

2. That the House recede from its disagreement to the tenth section of the Senate amendment.

3. That the Senate recede from the eleventh section of its amendment.

4. That the Senate recede from the twelfth and thirteenth sections of its amendment.

5. That the House recede from the ninth section of its amendment.

6. That the House recede from its tenth amendment.

7. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the eleventh amendment of the House.

8. That the committee agree upon the following substitute for the twelfth section of the House amendment: "And be it further enacted, That the bounty of $100 provided by present laws to be paid to the heirs of volunteers killed in battle shall be extended to the widow, if living, or, if she be dead, to the children, of any volunteer who shall have been or may be killed in the service, whether he shall have enlisted for two years or a less period of time."

9. That the committee agree upon the following substitute for the thirteenth section of the House amendment: "And be it further resolved, That in case any officer of the military or naval service who may be hereafter dismissed by authority of the President shall make an application in writing for a trial, setting forth under oath that he has been wrongfully and unjustly dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the public service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he was dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not award dismissal, or death, as the punishment of such officer the order of dismissal shall be void; and if the court-martial aforesaid shall not be convened for the trial of such officer within six months from the presentation of his application for trial, the sentence of dismissal shall be void."

10. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth sections of the House amendment.

11. That the House recede from the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth sections of its amendment.

12. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, thirtieth, and thirty-first sections of the House amendment.

13. That the House recede from the thirty-second section of its amendment.

14. That the committee agree to the following title to the joint resolution: "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes."

HENRY WILSON,
J. M. HOWARD,
C. R. BUCKALEW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. A. GARFIELD,
M. F. ODELL,
G. W. SCOFFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of that amendment in regard to the power of the President to dismiss an officer.

The Secretary read the ninth item of the report.

Mr. WILSON. I will say in regard to that matter that the House of Representatives adopted an amendment to the joint resolution that officers must be tried hereafter before they can be dismissed. By law an officer may be dismissed on charges, and he goes before a board and rights himself if he can. We have modified the amendment and agreed that the power to dismiss an officer shall not be taken away; that he may be dismissed, but that if he makes application for a trial after his dismissal by the President, he may have a court-martial; the court must be called within six months, and then he is to have a fair trial.

Mr. GRIMES. And he must be restored or must be killed.

Mr. WILSON. No.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, the result must be his restoration to service or a sentence of death. There is no intermediate grade. I ask for the reading again.

The Secretary read the item again.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What bill is this?

Mr. WILSON. A military bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is it a draft bill?

Mr. WILSON. A portion of that bill has been put on this.

Mr. GRIMES. Everything has been put on it. Mr. WILSON. It is a capital bill.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The report of the committee of conference is perfectly clear to me, and it means just this: if a court-martial does not acquit him or shoot him, the President may reinstate him, and after he is shot the reinstatement will amount to very much. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know what else is in this bill. I should like to hear the other sections of it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The whole report has been read.

Mr. GRIMES. I am aware of that, but I should like to have the sections read that are referred to in the report. This is a matter of no small moment to the people of this country.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs what this bill is, what it proposes to do?

Mr. WILSON. The bill is not here, but I will tell the Senator what it is. The first section of the bill is in regard to officers' servants.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no interest in that.

Mr. WILSON. The next is a section that non-commissioned officers and privates in the volunteer service shall receive the same amount of clothing as those in the regular Army.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is all right.

Mr. WILSON. Another is that every non-commissioned officer and private and other person discharged from the Army because of wounds received on picket line shall be entitled to the same allowance as if wounded in any other way. The Department has ruled that if an officer is shot on picket line he cannot have a pension. We propose to correct that. Another section gives to the four regiments raised by General Hunter, under a special written promise, full pay, and allows them their back pay.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The South Carolina darkies! [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. The eighth section is that the President is authorized to enlist six regiments of engineers for the Army. The other sections are mainly some provisions of the enrollment act. The first section of that portion of the bill provides that every locality shall be credited with the men who belong to it, thus cutting up the whole system of getting men from one place and crediting them to another.

Mr. GRIMES. Read it.

Mr. WILSON.

That hereafter all persons mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as substitutes, or otherwise, shall be credited to the ward, township, precinct, or other enrollment sub-district where such persons belong by actual residence.

Another section is in regard to computing quotas, and provides that the hundred-day men, the six-months men, and all those men who have been brought out for short periods, shall be credited to their respective States, measuring by the three-year standard, so that a hundred-day man is equal to about three months' service of a three-year man. The State of Ohio furnished last summer about thirty regiments of hundred-day men, and this section will allow her to be credited with them according to the proportion that their terms bore to the terms of the same number of three-year men.

Then we add four or five sections of a bill which the Senate passed some weeks ago, providing that any recruiting agent, substitute broker, or other person, who for pay or profit shall enlist or cause to be enlisted as a volunteer or substitute any insane person, or convict, or person under indictment for felony, or a drunkard, shall be punished.

Mr. GRIMES. By death or dismissal?

Mr. WILSON. He is to be tried by a judicial tribunal, and not by a court-martial. On that point the motion of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] prevailed. Another provision is that any officer who shall muster into the military or naval service a drunken person or a deserter or a convict, shall be dismissed the service. Another section is that in addition to the penalties of desertion, persons who shall desert, and those who have deserted, and shall not return within sixty days, when the President makes a proclamation offering to forgive them, shall be disfranchised. Another section repeals the law that allows Massachusetts—I suppose my friend from Iowa would say—to enlist colored persons in the rebel States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that retained?

Mr. WILSON. One section of this bill repeals that law; and if we adopt this report, Massachusetts cannot any longer send agents to the rebel States to enlist colored men. I suppose that will gratify my friend from Iowa.

Mr. SUMNER. Is that repeal absolute?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; we had to make it absolute. Another provision allows any persons in a sub-district which is called upon to furnish so many men to club together and furnish the men, and be themselves discharged from the service. It is rather an insurance company, by which men can protect themselves from the draft.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear that?

Mr. WILSON. The provision is that—

Any person or persons enrolled in any sub-district may, after notice of a draft, and before the same shall have taken place, cause to be mustered into the service of the United States such number of recruits not subject to draft as they may deem expedient; which recruits shall stand to the credit of the persons thus causing them to be mustered in, and shall be taken as substitutes for such persons, or so many of them as may be drafted, to the extent of the number of such recruits, and in the order designated by the persons at the time such recruits are thus mustered in.

I think it is an excellent provision, which will probably tend to bring a good many men into the Army.

Then there is another section authorizing the Secretary of War to detail one or more persons to receive the oaths of the officers who go through the various departments. Another section is that acting assistant surgeons and contract surgeons and commissioners of the boards of enrollment, while in the military service, shall not be liable to draft.

Then there is a provision that officers of the Army shall be put upon the same footing as the officers of volunteers in regard to brevet rank. If this passes, Army officers cannot receive compensation for brevet rank.

Mr. GRIMES. Is there anything in the bill to prevent the frauds that have been perpetrated so extensively in some sections of the country growing out of the paper naval credits?

Mr. WILSON. No; I had to strike out the section we put in to meet that case, and I gave it up with reluctance. It was a point made by the House committee. The point was that it threw the naval credits into the large cities, and would operate against the country.

Mr. GRIMES. That is the trouble now.

Mr. WILSON. It is said that in many cases persons enlisted in the Navy in New York city ought to be credited to the western towns, and you cannot take them out there without great expense.

Mr. GRIMES. In other words, because the large towns steal naval credits, the small towns ought to be permitted to do so also!

Mr. WILSON. The argument they made was that it would operate against the country, and altogether in favor of the large cities; and on that consideration we yielded. I have now stated the main features of the measure. There are two or three sections in regard to substitute brokers that are very stringent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The explanation of the chairman is very clear, but I want to know how the committee of conference got so many things together.

Mr. WILSON. I will tell the Senator. Two or three weeks ago the Senate passed a bill of some seven or eight sections amending the enrollment act. Then the House of Representatives prepared a bill to amend the enrollment act, in which they copied five sections of our bill, and sent us here a bill containing altogether fifteen or sixteen sections.

Mr. GRIMES. Does the Senator know that the bill of which he has been speaking is not here, and that we have not the power to act upon it?

Mr. WILSON. I have sent to the House of Representatives for it.

Mr. GRIMES. How can it be reported to us when the House of Representatives, that has to act on it first, has not sent it to us?

Mr. WILSON. The House has acted.

Mr. GRIMES. That fact has not been reported to us.

Mr. WILSON. I have sent down to the House for the bill. We put a portion of the House enrollment bill on this act. We took eleven sections and added quite a number to them.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand the honorable member to say that one of the amendments takes from the officers who are brevetted in the regular Army the pay corresponding to their rank.

Mr. WILSON. We passed an act a year or two ago allowing brevets to be conferred, and we put a provision in it that it should not confer increased pay, and intending to reach all cases we used the phrase "in the volunteer and other forces." The Departments construed that to mean that the "other forces" did not mean the regular Army, and they have under that construction paid Army officers for brevet rank when they are assigned to duty according to the rank they fill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think they have received that from the time we had an Army.

Mr. WILSON. They have from 1840. The House of Representatives insisted upon it that the volunteer officers whom we have brevetted so largely should have additional compensation. We have disagreed to that and put them all on the same footing, and provide that none of them shall get any additional pay by being brevetted. The brevet is a mere honorary matter and does not bring any increase of compensation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator if this committee of conference have not combined several bills together for the purpose of making what they esteemed a more perfect piece of legislation; whether their report is confined to matters of disagreement in respect to any one bill; and before the Senator answers that question I wish to ask him what bill the committee of conference was on.

Mr. WILSON. I will tell the Senator. We passed a bill last evening of eleven sections as an amendment to a House bill of one section. That went to the House of Representatives, and the House struck out three sections of our bill, leaving eight sections to stand as we passed them, and then they put on a large number of additional sections by way of amendment. They agreed to our amendment with amendments. Most of their amendments were in a bill which they sent here two or three days ago, but which we have not had time to take up. When the bill came back in this shape we rejected the action of the House, and sent the whole matter to a committee of conference. In point of fact, we yield hardly anything on these points, except that section which the Senator from Iowa put into our bill the other day, and we yielded that with a great deal of reluctance.

Mr. WADE. Is it in order to move to take up a bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order. By common consent there are two questions already before the Senate. One is the bill to which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LANE] has made a motion to amend; and the report of the committee of conference on the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] is also pending.

Mr. WILSON. I have now got the bill.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Massachusetts, to whom I gave way for a report, does not seem to be ready, and if the Senate will permit, I will proceed with the few remarks I intended to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I regret as much as anybody to detain the Senate at this late hour, and particularly to speak to persons who have no disposition to listen; but I cannot permit the extraordinary remarks which have fallen from one or two Senators to pass without saying a word in reply; I shall be very brief in doing it; and first as to the question before the Senate.

It has been argued against as if it were something very different from what it is. The Senator from Michigan says in his argument that this is a proposition to let loose the criminals of the country. He says that men who are undergoing sentence will be discharged by it, and that those held for trial will be discharged, and that it is an assault upon the manner in which persons charged with the administration of the Government have discharged their duty. It is no such thing, sir. The proposition is that hereafter in the loyal States, where the courts are open, no person not in some way connected with the military service shall be tried by court-martial or military commission. That is the proposition. It does not propose to interfere in the least with anybody who has been tried. It is prospective in its operation. It does not propose to discharge anybody. There is no such word in it. Now, what becomes of all that the Senator from Michigan said?

Mr. HOWARD. Does the Senator from Illinois wish an answer here?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall speak but a few moments. I merely wish to show that the Senator from Michigan has argued a proposition that is not under consideration. Then the Senator goes on to say that but for the exercise of this power to try persons by court-martial and military commission, the city of Chicago would have been burned, the dwelling in which I live would have been burned. I do not think any such thing. I have no such opinion. And the Senator from Nevada speaks of the issue in the last election, and says that what he had to meet upon the stump was a complaint about arbitrary arrests. That is not this question. This section does not say anything about arbitrary arrests; this is a proposition that persons shall not be tried in a particular way. It has nothing to do with arresting them. It is not proposed to interfere with the power of arresting persons. That is given by another act by which the habeas corpus is suspended. This does not propose to repeal that act.

But the Senator from Nevada says that something akin to this was a question in the last election. How came it to be a question? What was it that divided the North? There was a time in the early stages of this war when we were very much united in the North. Does not the Senator from Nevada wish that to be so again? I know he does. He would have every man in all these States united as one man to crush this rebellion and crush it at once. I think we should do nothing to divide the North if we can help it. It is not politic to do it. It is not wise to do it. What is it that has divided the North? He says himself that the very question he had to meet away out in Nevada was the question about arrests, not the question we are now considering, because this says nothing about arrests, but somehow akin to it. Does he not think it would have been better if those who are charged with the administration of the Government had so conducted themselves as, if possible, to have kept a united public sentiment?

Mr. STEWART. Let me answer that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You may answer it in a moment. I know the Senator from Nevada would like to have a united loyal public sentiment.

Mr. STEWART. We have got it pretty near.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Pretty near! If you talk about the election, hundreds of thousands of voters, yea, more than a million of voters in the loyal States, did not vote as the Senator and I did. Do you know how those voters came to be alienated? Almost one half of the voters of the great States of New York and Pennsylvania voted differently from him and me. Does he know how they became alienated?

Mr. STEWART. By secret sympathizers with the rebellion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And you put a club into their hands by which they were enabled to strengthen their power, and whenever you do so you give them an advantage over you. If you want to put down the sympathizers with rebellion you must not give them an advantage, you must not give them a position from which they can assail you. I remember a few years ago that petitions used to be presented in the House of Representatives asking for the abolition of slavery, and I recall that they were presented by Mr. Adams, of Massachusetts. Nobody at that time believed that Congress had any power to abolish slavery. The petitions amounted to very little, but the advocates of the slaveholding power were outraged at this attempt to introduce a petition, and what did they do? They attacked the right of petition. That was sacred. Every American, though he was no abolitionist, and did not believe that Congress had any power to abolish slavery, believed in the sacred right of petition. False issues were got up which divided the country. There was no division of the country as to abolition; in the whole country there were not abolitionists enough to disturb anybody; all parties declared in their platforms, and acquiesced in the principle, that there was no power in Congress to abolish slavery; but all parties would not agree to the proposition that the right of petition should not be held sacred. It is just so in regard to these secret sympathizers that the Senator speaks of. They are powerless; crush them; there is no trouble about it; but if you give them the advantage of putting yourselves in the wrong and raising a false issue with them they get much more strength. That, in my judgment, is unwise, and I think that more capital has been made against the Administration, more obstacles thrown in the way of an efficient prosecution of this war, by the attempt to do things that need not have been done, and by giving an advantage to these secret sympathizers, than in any other way. This is no evidence, because the election went this way, that this measure was indorsed. The Administration was carried triumphantly through in spite of these things, not because of them, by the patriotism of the country. The people were determined to maintain the Government, and they overlooked many errors; no doubt a great many have been committed. It is not the errors that give strength, but in spite of the errors the Government has been sustained. I think that every unnecessary departure from the law and from the Constitution weakens instead of strengthens the Government.

Now, sir, a word or two, and only a word or two, as to the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS] who modestly assumes so much patriotism; and if patriotism consists in noise and bluster, he certainly is possessed of a great deal. He made himself heard most certainly, and he talks of "croaking," and talk of "cowards," and says that he cares nothing for the Constitution, so that he has a country. He had better migrate to Dahomey, or somewhere else, where there is a country. I care, sir, for the Constitution and for liberty, and I think a country or life itself scarcely worth having without liberty—without liberty regulated by law. But he is bold and brave—yes, sir, bold and brave—and would sink the Government, would vote against all appropriations, sooner than not have the power to try a man by a court-martial or a military commission! That great patriot would stand here and vote—vote against appropriations for the Army or anything else, if he could not arrest somebody and try him in a loyal State, where the courts are open, by a military commission or court-martial! He says substantially, "I will not appropriate to sustain our soldiers; the rebels may come here and tear down the Capitol and destroy the Government, because I, the Senator from California, cannot be permitted to have somebody arrested—no, not arrested, but cannot have somebody tried by a court-martial;" and that is his patriotism, that is his love of country! And he says no provost marshal arrested him. Why, sir, those who "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning" are never arrested.

Mr. CONNESS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois give way?

Mr. TRUMBULL. When I am through the Senator can talk, if he wishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He need not expect to be arrested; oh no, sir! But the liberty he talks of is the liberty of the highwayman. Disregard law! How is he any better than the brigand who meets you at night and calls upon you to stand and deliver? No regard for law; he cares nothing for the Constitution, so that he has a country, and he talks of cowards and croakers! Sir, I am not brave enough, thank God! I am not bold enough, to walk up to that stand and lay my hand upon the words of Eternal Life and promise, calling God to witness, to maintain the Constitution, and then say I care nothing for it! I am not bold enough to make such a declaration. I hope I never may be. Sir, if nothing else should restrain us from treating with contempt the Constitution of the country, the oath we have taken should restrain us, the appeal we have made to the Supreme Being should withhold us, from such a declaration. I say that I do care for the Constitution and for law and for liberty, and that I am for preserving them all, and the country and the Union also, for it is the Constitution and liberty that make the Union worth preserving. Without them a Union forced by arbitrary power, a Union such as is brought about by the heel of despotism, is not the Union that I am struggling for. It is not the Union that the brave soldiers of the Republic are fighting for. They go forth to battle for the purpose of maintaining the Government their fathers founded, for the purpose of maintaining the Constitution under which they themselves have enjoyed freedom, and handing it down for the protection of their posterity. It is for this we are fighting, and not simply for power, or to try a man by a court-martial or a military commission.

I have no disposition to prolong this debate. I do not desire the bill to be lost, but I have felt it due to myself, after the remarks made by the Senator from California, to say thus much. In the remarks I made at the outset I made no allusion to individual Senators. I never attack my associates; I never make personal assaults upon anybody. I have now simply repelled the assaults of the mighty and brave Senator from California.

Mr. FARWELL. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] calls for the "question." That is just what I want. I got up for that. If Senators are ready to vote, I am ready to sit down.

Mr. CLARK. I appeal to the Senator from Maine to let us try and get a vote.

Mr. FARWELL. That is all I am up for, to try to get a vote. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] stated that the law on the books is just what this section is, and if that is so, I do not believe it will call for an extra session of Congress, for it will not make any difference whether this is passed or not.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Several Senators. Oh, no!

Mr. CONNESS. At the desire of Senators I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "persons" in line four of the section, it is proposed to insert the words "employed, drafted, enlisted, or."

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary commenced the call of the roll, and Mr. ANTHONY answered when his name was called.

Mr. GRIMES. Although I shall vote to strike out the whole section, I shall vote for this amendment as an improvement on the proposition.

Mr. ANTHONY. I object to debate: a response has been made.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President—
Mr. ANTHONY. I have answered to my name. Debate is out of order.

Mr. McDUGALL. I was on the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not recognize the Senator.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am not large enough to be recognized well, I suppose, but I sought to be recognized, and I am on the floor. I have my rights, and I will demand them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it a right?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. By a rule of the Senate, debate is out of order after the call of the roll has commenced and a response has been made.

Mr. McDUGALL. I addressed the Chair three times before the call commenced.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I insist on the enforcement of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not recognize the Senator from California, and did not hear him address the Chair before the call commenced. The call commenced and the Senator from Rhode Island responded before the Chair heard the Senator from California. Under these circumstances the Chair thinks the Senator from California is too late. The call will proceed.

Mr. McDUGALL. I addressed the Chair before the call commenced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not doubt the fact, but simply asserts that he did not hear the Senator. The call will proceed.

The Secretary continued, and concluded the call of the roll; and the result was—yeas 25, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Conness, Howard, Nye, and Stewart—4.
ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wright—21.

So the amendment of Mr. TRUMBULL was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, to strike out the section as amended,

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Wilkinson, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hale, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wade—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Willey, and Wright—16.

So the motion to strike out prevailed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburgh; and

A bill (S. No. 350) supplemental to the act approved July 1, 1864, "for the disposal of coal lands and of town property on the public domain."

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 401) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. No. 761) extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the States of Minnesota and Iowa, and for other purposes; which was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its first and second amendments.

That the Senate concur in the third amendment of the House.

JAMES R. DOOLITTLE,
B. GRATZ BROWN,
JAMES HARLAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM WINDOM,
PHILIP JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. There is a bill on the table from the House of Representatives which I desire to have taken up and referred to the Committee on Territories.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 401) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That bill might just as well be passed now. It only allows biennial instead of annual sessions of the Legislature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that the bill be put on its passage?

Mr. CONNESS. I object to that.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. My object was to have the bill referred to the Committee on Territories and examined and then ask the Senate to pass upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been twice read cannot be proceeded with further except by unanimous consent. If there be no objection it will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS, from the third committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, reported that, having met, after full and free conference the committee had been unable to agree.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to its first amendment to the said bill.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer the following amendment to come in under the miscellaneous head, page 14, second item:

For improvements in the Senate wing of the Capitol proposed in the report of the joint select committee of the two Houses upon the improvement of the Halls of Congress, made at the present session, exclusive of an exterior attic, the sum of $113,185 25, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, the said improvements to be under the management and direction of Charles F. Anderson, as architect and engineer upon plans, with specifications and details to be approved by Dr. Thomas Antisell, and executed under his supervision, and all necessary contracts shall be made by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, in conformity with law, and all accounts and expenditures therefor shall be settled and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POWELL. I have an amendment to offer from a majority of the Committee on Printing:

And he further enacted. That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to procure from the surviving publisher of the Annals and Debates of Congress, prior to the year 1837, one copy of the same for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in the present Congress who has not heretofore been supplied therewith, and that said copies be paid for out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at a price per volume not exceeding that heretofore paid by Congress for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I offer an amendment to come in under the miscellaneous head; I will say that it is in pursuance of estimates which I have received from the Department of State:

For the pay of the United States commissioner, and for the pay of the United States surveyor, and for incidental expenses in the execution of the duty assigned to the joint commission appointed under the first article of the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Great Britain, from November 1, 1865, to March 1, 1866, $3,600.

For printing and completion of the final chart showing the places reserved from the common liberty of fishing and their limits, $800.

The estimates are furnished by the Department of State, and the Secretary, in his communication to me, after stating them, concludes as follows:

"I have the honor to recommend that provision be made therefor in the general appropriation bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer the following amendment from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

For services of James G. Clarke, as acting chargé de affaires at Brussels, from June 11, 1857, to September 27, 1858, $6,483.

Mr. CLARK. I raise the point of order that it is a private claim, and cannot be received.

Mr. SUMNER. I meet the point of order by stating that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. Is not that to be decided by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is authorized under the rules to submit the question of order.

Mr. SUMNER. And is that to be decided without comment, without discussion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A question of order is not debatable ordinarily; but unless objection is made, the Chair will hear Senators.

Mr. CLARK. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to say that in moving this amendment I have simply followed the usage of the Senate. I have here a communication from the Department of State calling attention to the case—

Mr. GRIMES. Have we any rules, Mr. President, or not? If we have, I insist on their enforcement upon the Senator from Massachusetts as well as upon others.

Mr. SUMNER. If I am violating any rule, let it be enforced.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand the Chair to have already decided that this question must be determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did so intimate, but that was a misapprehension; the Senator from Massachusetts is in order.

Mr. SUMNER. This is the first time during my experience in the Senate that any such rule has been invoked.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the case; will the Senator state?

Mr. SUMNER. Some years ago, Mr. Clarke, a citizen of the United States, while an unpaid attaché at Brussels, was presented to the Government there as acting chargé d'affaires by our minister, who was about to go away. He continued in that capacity for the time mentioned in the amendment, from June 11, 1857, to September 27, 1858, during which time he was in correspondence with the Department and was recognized as chargé d'affaires. The Secretary of State, writing to me under date of February 24, only a few days ago, says:

"From a reference to the files of the Department it appears that the statements in the memorial, which is herewith returned, are entirely correct; with the exception of a slight inaccuracy, which, in justice to the memorialist, it is deemed proper to mention, namely, that his period of service was extended to the 27th instead of the 3d of September, 1858, the former being the date at which the successor of Mr. Seibels assumed the duties of the legation at Brussels and on which Mr. Clarke relinquished them. The Department has heretofore borne testimony to the faithful and creditable manner in which the duties assigned him by Mr. Seibels were performed by Mr. Clarke during the entire period of his service, and his claim for compensation as now presented would appear to be equitable and entitled to the consideration of Congress."

In a subsequent letter, dated February 28, the Secretary says:

"Pursuant to your oral request I have the honor to inclose a precise statement of the sum necessary to be appropriated for payment of the claim of Mr. James G. Clarke for services as acting chargé d'affaires at Brussels."

Inclosed in this communication is a memorandum of the amount which is specified in the amendment. In moving this on an appropriation bill I but follow the usage of this body. Here is an obligation of the United States toward one of its servants abroad which has not yet been redeemed. It is simply a question of justice.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A question of time.

Mr. SUMNER. Originally a question of justice, and time also is in his favor, because he has been kept out of this money for some time. He ought not to have been. I hope there will be no question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the reception of the amendment under the 30th rule, and the Senate decided to receive the amendment, there being, on a division—ayes 16, noes 12.

Mr. HALE. I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations would state at what time this service occurred.

Mr. SUMNER. From June 11, 1857, to September 27, 1858.

Mr. HALE. I think it will be establishing a very dangerous precedent. If I understood the statement of the Senator this gentleman was an unpaid attaché.

Mr. SUMNER. He was an unpaid attaché when he was presented as chargé.

Mr. HALE. Exactly. I know what that means. When young gentlemen go abroad, it is a great accommodation to them for the minister, or chargé, or diplomatic functionary to take them under his protection as unpaid attachés, that is to say, they do nothing and receive no pay for it, which I think is very well; but it gives social position, and it is a very agreeable thing for a young gentleman abroad. Then when the minister is about to leave, he will present one of these young men at court and let him be an acting chargé, or something of that sort, to do nothing, but to have the name of doing something. He is not appointed by the Government, he is not appointed by the President or the Secretary of State, but he is simply introduced by the retiring minister, and according to this precedent he then becomes a minister so far as the pay is concerned just as much as if he was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I am opposed to letting our ministers abroad have any such power as that. They may have attachés without pay if they please; but if by the mere ceremony of introduction they are to make them ministers to be paid salaries, we shall not know when we have a minister and when we have not and where we have them. Besides, I think the claim is a little stale. It originated in 1857, and this is 1865 if the almanac speaks the truth. I think if this man has let it lie for eight years we may as well let it lie for eight years longer, and at the end of sixteen years it will be time enough to bring it up again.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator entirely misapprehends the character of this claim. He was an unpaid attaché, to be sure, but when he was presented as chargé d'affaires and recognized by the Government here in Washington, then he became entitled to the pay of chargé d'affaires according to the usage of this Government. While he was an unpaid attaché he was perhaps as the Senator represents him; certainly he makes no claim to pay, and that grade, the Senator knows very well, is not known to our law, but the grade of chargé is known to our law, and the minister when he left was bound according to the usage of his position to place his legation in competent hands. He selected this gentleman, who was then at Brussels, for the purpose. The Government here at Washington recognized him in the place, continued in relations with him as chargé d'affaires for the space of time mentioned in the amendment, corresponded with him. The amount is $6,483. They continued in these relations with him from June 11, 1857, to September 27, 1858.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did he not continue to occupy the house of the legation?

Mr. SUMNER. He kept a house for the legation himself, and was at extraordinary expense which as a private citizen he would not have assumed.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts why it is that he did not get his pay before? Why did they not pay him at the time?

Mr. SUMNER. Because they said he did not come under the statute, and that is the very reason the case is presented now.

Mr. CLARK. It is the very case that makes a private claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he thinks it at all likely that an appointee of Franklin Pierce would go through the administration of James Buchanan, with the Treasury plethora, with so much money that they did not know what to do with it, and his claim never be paid, and that now there should be discovered so much due him when we are poor and borrowing money by the million.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator from Michigan knew this gentleman he would not ask the question. The gentleman is as much a patriot as the Senator himself.

Mr. GRIMES. Who is he?

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. Clarke. He is from New Hampshire. He is now in Washington, and has been here the great part of this winter, not with any purpose of forcing this claim, but he has connections in the Army, serving the country loyally and faithfully. He himself is a modest gentleman, and he has only recently been encouraged to present this claim for services.

Mr. GRIMES. Who encouraged him?

Mr. SUMNER. Senators smile; they say they cannot help it.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator remarked that he was encouraged by friends to present this claim, as if a man needed encouragement to present a claim!

Mr. SUMNER. Because he was a modest gentleman. I ask my friend from Iowa, is that any reason why the Government should not pay its debts? I carry you back to the precise question, was there not an obligation on the part of our Government to pay him for these services?

Mr. JOHNSON. If it was due then, it is due now.

Mr. SUMNER. I say it was due then, and therefore it is due now.

Mr. HALE. I am more and more convinced that this claim ought not to be paid. I recollect once being in a court in New Hampshire when criminals were brought up; a fellow by the name of Smith was arraigned, and some one remarked to Judge Smith who was on the bench, "How is it that so many of these rascals that are brought up are called Smith?" "Why," said the judge, "the scoundrels steal an honest name to be tried under; that is all." [Laughter.] This man claiming to be a New Hampshire man seems to me to be very much in the condition of the criminal who stole an honest name to be tried under. The fact that he comes from New Hampshire would be presumptive evidence that the Senator from Massachusetts speaks the truth when he says he is a modest gentleman. [Laughter.] I have no doubt of that. Still, I think that if our Government recognized him as chargé, it would have been the easiest thing in the world for the President to have sent his name to the Senate; and the fact that his name was not sent in, and that he was not paid, shows that he was regarded by the Government as an unpaid attaché, and I hope he will continue so.

Mr. CLARK. I find on inquiry that I know this gentleman very well, and lest injury might be done to him by the remarks that have been made on one hand and another, I take occasion to say that he is really a gentleman of intelligence and of good standing everywhere where he is known.

Mr. SUMNER. Above question in every respect.

Mr. CLARK. I have known him with considerable intimacy for a number of years, and I never in my life heard him say there was any such claim, and I think it is entirely true, as was said by the Senator from Massachusetts, that he has been encouraged by his friends to make it.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from New Hampshire says he knows him well, and he never has heard him speak of this claim. Is not that to his credit?

Mr. CLARK. I think it is, and it should not be urged now.

Mr. SUMNER. Not at all; I take the Senator at his word; it shows this gentleman's modesty, his unobtrusive nature. But then on this matter I have no choice. The petition was presented to the Senate; it was not even presented by me. It was referred to the committee with which I am connected. I then sent it to the Department of State and asked a report upon it from the Department according to the records there, and I have given you the result. According to what appears there, we are his debtors; and the committee directed me to recommend the appropriation.

Mr. WILSON. I rose for the purpose of calling up my report; but Senators around me desire to take a vote on this matter, and therefore I shall give way to allow them to do it; but I wish simply to say before I sit down that I think this gentleman who has spent the winter in Washington has learned the habit of those who are here, and although he thought he had not much of a claim until he came here, he now has a large one. The other day, within a week past, one of our assessors came here with a claim of sixty-eight dollars, of money he had paid out of his own pocket, and he said he thought the Government ought to pay it; but becoming acquainted with certain gentlemen about the internal revenue department, he has within a day or two presented a claim for $1,500; and I suppose this is another similar case.

Mr. CLARK. I can hardly suffer the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts, who I know does not wish to injure anybody, to pass without a little notice. He said that he feared this gentleman, who is the claimant here, had fallen into the habits of Washington by being about here this winter. I desire to say that this gentleman is one of the most patriotic men I have ever met. A son of his sister, who is in France, and is a literary lady of some taste and has been of service to us in this contest, immediately after the breaking out of the rebellion came home from France and enlisted in the Army; and this gentleman has been staying in Washington for months and months, watching that young man, to be near him if he should be injured; and he was injured, very grievously injured, and he was near him to assist him, and took him home to Massachusetts. After he was well enough to return, he returned again to the service, and his uncle stays near him to be of service to him in case of further injury. Nothing can be said against the character of that man, I am sure; and I will not suffer any disparagement to be made against him, if I can prevent it, though I do not think upon the evidence here we ought to pay the claim, or that he is very strenuous in pursuing it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I had great doubts as to whether it was proper to allow this claim to go on this bill, and I voted against its being received, because I thought it was a private claim; but inasmuch as the Senate have decided that it comes within the rule and may be put upon the bill, as I believe it is a just claim I shall vote for it. This gentleman performed the service, and according to the usage of the Government is entitled to the pay.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether there is any recommendation from the Department on the subject?

Mr. SUMNER. I have already read two letters from the Department of State recommending it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We all understand a subject of this magnitude. I hope we shall be allowed to take a vote on it.

Mr. WILSON. I think we can get recommendations for anything here in Washington.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let us have a vote.

Mr. WILSON. No, I will not; I object to this thing altogether. I know that there can be no justice in a claim of this character. Here is a man who served either as a foreign minister, or as a secretary, or in some capacity, eight years ago, to the amount of $6,000, and nothing is done about it until this time, and at this time he comes here with a claim of this character. I do not believe in the justice of it. As regards the recommendations that have been made in favor of it, every day's experience teaches us that too many of the officers connected with the Government at this time have very loose ideas about spending money. I think it is time for us here to arrest this kind of expenditures, or we shall be overwhelmed, as we ought to be overwhelmed, with the judgment of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that anybody is disputing the facts in this case. The Senator from Massachusetts, I suppose, will not deny that this gentleman was presented as a chargé d'affaires of the United States to the Government of Belgium, and that he remained there in that character, in point of fact, during the fourteen months for which we are about to pay him.

Mr. WILSON. Allow me to ask the Senator a question. Is it customary for these kind of officers to fill these places to the amount of $6,000 and let it run along from year to year without asking for it? It is a very strange mode of proceeding.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not come to that. I only want to know if the honorable member denies the fact, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that Mr. Clarke was presented in the capacity of chargé by our minister at that time, was received in that capacity by the Government of Belgium, and remained in that capacity during the whole of the period named; that he rented the house that the legation was in at the time; and that he paid the rent from that time up to the period when he ceased to represent the United States as chargé; that he corresponded with the Government of the United States in that capacity; that he was written to by the United States in that capacity. If that is so, whether he made the claim or not, is it consistent with the honor of the Government that they should have availed themselves, or should now avail themselves, of services of that description, and try to avoid paying what the law supposes such service to be worth, upon the ground that the claim was not before presented? The delay in the claim can only affect it as evidence that the service was not rendered, or that the service was rendered voluntarily. Now, is it consistent with the dignity of the United States that they should come in forma pauperis and try to get clear of this on the ground that this gentleman volunteered to serve the United States in the capacity of its minister? He is as much entitled to it as the gentleman by whom he was presented and who received the pay up to the time; and it seems to me, with due deference to those who differ with me, that it is due to the credit of the Government that this claim should be allowed; and these claims have been allowed time after time.

The delay in presenting the claim may be owing to a variety of circumstances. It may have been owing to the character of the man himself; it may have been owing to his ability to do without it; it may have been owing to the fact that he did not know he was entitled to be paid. He may have presented the claim, and I suppose did, to the Department, and they told him that as the law stood at the time there was no authority in the Department to pay him. But when the Department come forward and tell you the service was rendered and the service should be paid for, I submit to the Senate if it is right to avail itself of the mere lapse of time to get clear of an honest debt.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Maryland says that it may be so and so; it may be that he asked for it and certain answers were given. Is there any evidence that he did ask for it at the end of his service? Is there any evidence produced here to-night that the Administration then in power regarded that they owed him anything? If there is, let us have it.

Mr. McDougall. What does that prove? I own a square in the city of New York, won by my grandfather in the Revolution; but I have not got a foot of it, and never have had, and I have never asked for it. What does that amount to? What does that prove?

Mr. WILSON. I think it proves that you have not got the square. [Laughter.]

Mr. McDougall. No, I have not got the square; but I have a right to it. It has been in abeyance a long time.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. Clarke, in his memorial, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which I now have, sets forth the circumstances under which he became chargé d'affaires. He then goes on, as follows:

"That in consequence of the assurance of Mr. Seibels that the appointment of your memorialist as chargé d'affaires would be sanctioned by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Marcy, an assurance which was confirmed by a private letter to your memorialist written by Mr. Seibels on his arrival in Washington, and after an interview with the Secretary of State, your memorialist became responsible for the rent of the furnished house which had been occupied by the minister as the legation residence; that your memorialist continued to occupy said house and to perform the duties with which he had been charged, transacting all necessary business with the Belgian Government, and corresponding from time to time with the Department of State."

I have also a copy of a letter from the minister at Brussels, addressed to General Cass while he was Secretary of State, from which I will read an extract; and I should like to have the attention of those Senators who have been disposed to cavil at the claim of Mr. Clarke, and especially those who have been disposed to sneer at it. This is addressed to General Cass:

"Upon granting me leave of absence from my post of Brussels, as minister resident of the United States, in 1856, your predecessor instructed me to be careful to leave the property of the legation in safe hands. There being no consul of the United States at Brussels, and our countrymen requiring daily official attention, it seemed to me indispensable that the legation should be kept open for their benefit, if for no other purpose. Fortunately, at the time I had attached to it, and acting as secretary, a gentleman whose education, intelligence, and high character fully commended him to me as a most suitable person to take charge of the seals of the legation for, as I then supposed, but a brief period. This was Mr. James G. Clarke, whom I now commend to your favorable consideration. He is a gentleman of the highest attainments, speaking with the ease, fluency, and accuracy of a native, French, German, and Italian, and in fact most of the continental languages. I have the best evidence before me that he discharged his duties during the time the legation was in his care, a period of two years, with signal success, both as regards the intercourse with the Belgian Government and our own country. Upon my arrival at Washington, in October, 1858, I acquainted Mr. Marcy with the manner in which I had disposed of the legation, and he gave it his sanction, and said that Mr. Clarke should be recognized in the capacity I had left him, that is, chargé d'affaires ad interim. Whether this has been done or not I do not know, but such are the facts, and I so informed Mr. Clarke at the time."

Then the question has been asked whether he claimed compensation, or why he did not claim it. This letter is dated January 17, 1859, and it goes on as follows:

"He now claims compensation of the Government for his services during the period he had charge of the legation and its property; and upon every principle of justice and equity I think him entitled to it; and as I have been instrumental in his employment for public service, I feel an interest that the Department should bring his claim to the favorable notice of Congress, and recommend the necessary compensation."

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations why this man was appointed during this long period of time?

Mr. SUMNER. Because the minister resident was absent on leave, expecting to return, and he was, in a certain sense, merely a locum tenens. What is a chargé d'affaires ad interim? A chargé d'affaires ad interim is simply a person who, for an intermediate period, and not as a permanent officer, holds a particular place.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations tell us whether the minister there also drew his salary during this period of time?

Mr. SUMNER. Of that I know nothing; but the Senator perhaps knows the usages of the Department in that respect. I suppose Mr. Koerner of Illinois, who is at home, draws a salary as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at Madrid, at this moment, while we are also paying Mr. Perry, the secretary of legation, the pay of chargé d'affaires ad interim.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. Koerner has resigned.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not aware that he has resigned. However, I do not wish to be carried off into a general discussion of the salaries of our foreign ministers. Suffice it to say this service was rendered in good faith. It was recognized by the Government at the time as being good service. He never has been paid for it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Let us pay for it.

Mr. SUMNER. I say let us pay for it.

Mr. HARLAN. This is a very extraordinary claim. It would appear from the developments just now made by the chairman of the committee that this Government had an officer under pay during the whole period for which this claim is set up. An agent that was really in this office in point of law, but not in the discharge of the duties of the office, ought to have been dismissed by the Government. This is a proposition to pay two gentlemen for service performed in the same office for the same period of time. As it seems to me, this is not a time in the history of the Government when we can afford to pay for a double set of officers. Such a precedent, I think, would be a very dangerous one to follow.

Mr. SUMNER. It is the precedent we follow every day. It is the precedent we are following now in regard to Mr. Koerner of Illinois, and Mr. Perry, who is now at Madrid. It is the precedent of the Department; it is the precedent of the country.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 9.

Mr. SUMNER. I have one more amendment to move from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to come in as an additional section at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act to carry into effect the provisions of the treaties between the United States and China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1860, shall extend to Egypt; and the consul general at Alexandria shall have the powers provided by section twenty-two of such act for the consul general or consul residing at the capital of a country where there is no minister.

This amendment has been recommended by the Department of State, and is now recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is no money in it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. I beg leave to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That to reimburse the institutions and individuals who advanced the money to pay the Pennsylvania soldiers who were called out by the proclamations of the President of the United States and the Governor of Pennsylvania to repel the invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania by the rebel forces under General Lee in the summer of 1863, and who were in the actual service of the United States, the sum of $700,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated, to be paid to the Governor of Pennsylvania in trust for the above-mentioned purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does that come from a committee?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, sir. I will state that these troops were called out on the pledge of the President that they should be paid. The amounts have been settled and audited and the sum fixed exactly, $671,476 43; and the President, in pursuance of his pledges for that purpose, has indorsed upon the audit the following:

"I fully indorse the within statement and recommendation, and shall be glad if Congress shall see fit to act promptly in the case. A. LINCOLN."

Mr. CLARK. The State of New Hampshire, the other day, had a claim against the United States for a little over half a million dollars, and the Governor of the State was here endeavoring to get from the War Department a settlement of the account. The War Department replied to him that they could not furnish the funds to pay any State now, for the soldiers in the field were suffering, and what money they had must go to pay the soldiers; and the Secretary of War said he would postpone any and every State until they were paid. The Governor then went to the President of the United States and had a conversation with him, and afterward came to me and requested me to go and see the President. I did so; and the President said to me, "This is the question, Mr. CLARK: we owe your State so many hundred thousand dollars, and we owe the soldiers; we have money only to pay one; which will you take?" "Pay the soldiers, Mr. President," said I, "and let my State wait."

Mr. COWAN. I am sorry I cannot imitate the excessive magnanimity of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. It is refreshing indeed, that, coming from that quarter, he can be so excessively liberal at this present speaking. I have only to say that I have not been instructed by the Governor of Pennsylvania, or the Legislature of Pennsylvania, or the patriotic and liberal gentlemen and institutions who advanced this money to the country in that emergency, to be so liberal and large-hearted and large-handed as my honorable friend from New Hampshire. I should be glad if they would permit me to do it.

Mr. CLARK. I was not instructed by the Governor or anybody else. I did it of my own free will, as I wish the Senator would.

Mr. COWAN. I do not choose to take the responsibility of my own free will. Perhaps it is from some defect in my organization, but I would not choose to do that. I think this is a just claim; I think it is one which the faith of the Government is pledged to repay. I do not say but what Pennsylvania can do without the money as well as the State of New Hampshire. I hope she can; and I trust she will never thrust her claim in between the soldiers and their pay. I have no doubt she will withhold as long as anybody else will; but she wants the claim recognized here in such a shape as that it may at some time hereafter be paid. I wish to read the following document, emanating from the War Department, and dated "January 4, 1864," and addressed to "Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives:—"

"SIR: The Department has this day, received returns of the amount required for the payment of the militia called out for the defense of the State of Pennsylvania on the 26th day of June, 1863, against the invasion by the rebel forces under command of General Lee. There being no appropriation out of which these payments could be made at the time they were required, patriotic citizens of Philadelphia advanced the money, and it is proper that they should be reimbursed without delay. I would respectfully recommend, therefore, that an immediate appropriation for that purpose be made. A copy of a letter of the Second Auditor of the Treasury is herewith communicated, showing the amount of the claims audited by him to be $671,476 43. It is supposed that $700,000 will cover the whole amount of these claims."

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"EDWIN M. STANTON,
"Secretary of War."

Upon that is indorsed the recommendation of the President, which I have read, which I think establishes beyond all question that in order to carry out the engagements made by the Executive of this Government, this appropriation ought to be made and paid in this way. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hale, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, and Willey—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Riddle, Stewart, and Wilson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Collamer, Dixon, Foot, Harding, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 472) to provide for the construction of certain wagon roads in the Territories of Idaho, Montana, Dakota, and Nebraska; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) to purchase mail pouches or boxes of Marshall Smith's patent for the postal service, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 702) in relation to preëmption rights in Colorado Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 401) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Samuel Coleman, heir-at-law of William Dean Coleman, deceased.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 558) to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the resolution of the Senate requesting the President of the United States to transmit to the Executives of the several States the amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States respecting the extinction of slavery therein.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 139) of thanks to Major General George H. Thomas and the army under his command.

THANKS TO MAJOR GENERAL THOMAS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The civil appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate take a recess until nine o'clock. It is very evident that we are not going to pass this bill. Everything is being piled upon it so that in the end nobody will be in favor of it.

Mr. CLARK. I have one or two little bills that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have one or two amendments to offer to the bill under consideration.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to act on the conference report that I submitted some time since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that there are several House bills on the desk which will be disposed of by permission of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 139) of thanks to Major General George H. Thomas and the army under his command, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that it is proper, after the Senate have amended the resolution so as to give the thanks of Congress to Admiral Lee, to strike it out. It would be discourteous. I think I would rather let the whole thing go.

Mr. CLARK. What is the question?

Mr. JOHNSON. The House of Representatives passed a resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to General Thomas, and when it came to the Senate, the Senate amended it by including in it a vote of thanks to Admiral Lee. The House disagreed to that amendment. What I suggested was, that if we concur in that disagreement, it may perhaps cast a reflection on Admiral Lee, and I think that would be wrong.

Mr. CONNESS. I will suggest that there is a very great difference between the effect of a vote of thanks, as I understand it, to a general in our Army and an officer in our naval service. As I understand it, a vote of thanks to an officer in the naval service entitles him to receive a grade of promotion; but it is not so with a general in the Army. There is therefore a great impropriety in combining the one with the other. I suggest that we recede from the amendment that we made, and then let the resolution pass in favor of a worthy and distinguished officer. I cannot conceive how by doing that we shall in any way cast a reflection on Admiral Lee. It will be remembered by Senators who have not forgotten the discussion that took place on the subject, or the papers read, that General Thomas testified to the efficient services which Admiral Lee had furnished on the occasion referred to. Of course he did. He was there for that purpose. I merely rose to call attention to this fact.

Mr. CLARK. It may be a little embarrassing to us that Admiral Lee is connected in this way with General Thomas, but I submit to Senators what would Admiral Lee, gallant sailor as he is, wish to have done if he knew the condition of affairs here now; whether he would wish by this delay on his own account that the thanks of the country should not be given to General Thomas.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest that this subject lie over until the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BROWN,] who offered the amendment, may be in the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to offer an amendment to the miscellaneous appropriation bill. I have been trying for four hours to get the ear of the Chair, and I hope he will now receive my motion. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report an amendment to the bill before the Senate, and I ask that it may be acted upon.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the resolution from the House will be laid aside, and the Senate will resume the consideration of House bill No. 786, the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $88,541 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a passage into a harbor of refuge at Frankfort, on Lake Michigan, in the State of Michigan.

This is a very important work, and I trust the amendment will be agreed to. It was the only exception made by the Committee on Commerce during this session, and they were induced to do so on account of the urgency of the case and the importance of the work. The losses during the past summer for the want of this harbor of refuge were four or five times greater than will be the whole expense of making this work. The committee made an exception in this case, and directed me to offer this amendment, which I hope will be adopted.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me that this bill is becoming a "harbor of refuge" for all sorts of amendments. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us pass this bill.

Mr. WILSON. We cannot do it. I have given way hour after hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is too late now, but still I think we had better pass the bill and get rid of it.

Mr. COWAN. We cannot pass it for a long time yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. If anybody wants to offer amendments let them be introduced and put on the bill. I want to try to save enough to carry on the light-houses and take care of the public grounds; and that is all there will be saved of the bill at any rate. Senators might as well put on all their amendments and let us pass the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I will give way and see if we can pass the bill; but I know it is not going through.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to propose the following amendment:

For the erection of fog signals at Point Judith, Rhode Island, Execution Rocks, and Hart Island, New York, $10,000.

The Department desire this appropriation.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have another amendment of the same character:

For the establishment of fog signals at Castle Hill, east side of entrance to Newport, Rhode Island, and at Nayat Point, Rhode Island, $5,000.

I shall detain the Senate but a moment on this proposition. All the commerce of New England and the southern portion of New York with New England, and all the travel, go by way of the Sound in summer and winter; and every winter there are lives lost and property destroyed for the want of these signals. The other day two hundred people narrowly escaped destruction by one of these packets running ashore. Thousands of people pass this point annually, and millions of dollars' worth of property. All the trade of New England, all the commercial business of New England, depend upon this safe transit.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Now I wish to reconsider the vote rejecting the other amendment that I offered. ["Oh, no."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Rhode Island vote with the majority?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I did not; but I hope some gentleman who did will move to reconsider it. I do not think the Senate could have understood it.

Mr. FARWELL. I should like to take some little time to explain this matter if we had time to consider it, but at this stage of the session I shall occupy but a few minutes upon it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. If the Senator from Maine will give way I will make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. FARWELL. I do not propose to detain the Senate. I think I have not been very troublesome this winter. But I would like to say right here and now that it is a very pernicious kind of legislation that you have established here in Washington. They would not tolerate it down in Augusta where I have been in the habit of legislating. [Laughter.] Important measures, measures vital to the interests of the country, measures that need some time for discussion and explanation from gentlemen who understand them fully, are brought in here at five o'clock in the morning of the 4th of March, when this is no Congress at all. I say this is a pernicious system of legislation; and as my time is out I wish to make my closing speech right here; and that is, to say to gentlemen who are reflected or whose terms have not expired that I do hope they will reform this kind of legislation.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. With the permission of the Senator I will offer an amendment upon which he can conclude his speech. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report the following amendment, to carry into effect the fourth article of the treaty with Great Britain:

And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of executing the fourth article of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington on the 9th of August, 1842, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State of Massachusetts the sum of $32,688, and to the State of Maine the sum of $113,908, being at the rate of $1 25 per acre for the amount of the public lands of those two States in the possession of the classes of persons described in said fourth article of said treaty, as ascertained by a joint commission instituted by Massachusetts and Maine in 1843, and by a commission instituted by Maine in 1854; the said money to be paid as soon as the State of Maine shall, by resolutions of the Legislature thereof, agree to quiet, by good and sufficient releases, all the occupants of the public lands of Massachusetts and Maine, whether holding under grants from New Brunswick, or holding by possessory or equitable possessory titles, according to the reports of the aforesaid commissions, so far as they have not been already quieted by such releases; and shall further undertake, at its own expense, to quiet, in like manner, any other possessory rights under said fourth article of said treaty which may hereafter be discovered to exist upon the public lands of said State of Maine: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, at his discretion, make the payments directed by this section in any of the six per cent. securities of the United States which are or may be authorized by law.

Mr. FARWELL. I might just as well finish the speech that I began, but gave way to my friend from Wisconsin, upon this amendment as any other; and it further illustrates just what I had been saying and what I was about to say. Here is a measure of justice long delayed. It is a claim, a good claim, a valid claim against the United States Government by the States of Maine and Massachusetts for land belonging to them which was given up under the Ashburton treaty twenty years ago. We have a long distance to travel from the more settled portions of our State to the British provinces, to the line right where the war took place which led to the treaty by which we surrendered so much of our territory. The Legislature of Maine has chartered a railroad to go up into that country, a road that would be very much needed, especially if there should ever be a collision between this country and Great Britain, for the defense of that frontier. It is absolutely necessary for the defense of that frontier. The State of Maine has, by a resolution of the Legislature, agreed to contribute this claim with some four or five hundred thousand dollars more from the treasury of the State to make this railroad; and I hold that it would be no more than right and just for the General Government to contribute an equal amount from the Treasury as a military necessity for the protection of that frontier. It would be good policy on the part of the General Government to make or to assist in making a railroad up there if it were done directly from the national Treasury; but all that is asked of them and all that will be asked of the General Government is to pay this admitted claim, this just claim, and this road will probably be made, and connect the whole system of railroads in our country with the system of railroads in the British provinces where they have some five or six hundred miles already completed. I will guaranty that there is not a man in the State of Maine who will ever ask the United States Government to contribute anything toward this road if they will only pay this just claim; and there is not a Senator here but what knows it is a just claim. It is a claim that has been admitted. We surrendered up, for the sake of peace, some of the best territory in our State. Now, just put this amendment on this bill, and that is all we ask.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNESS. I have been requested by the Delegate from Nebraska to call attention to an amendment adopted in the early consideration of this bill striking out section four. I move to reconsider the vote by which the section was stricken out; and I ask for the reading of the section.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest to the Senator to wait until the bill is reported to the Senate, and take the question then.

Mr. CONNESS. You may want to act on all the amendments together then.

Mr. CLARK. No; I am going to except some.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the reading of the section; it is a very short one; and I ask the attention of the Senate to it while it is being read.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $20,000, appropriated at the present session of Congress to defray the legislative expenses of the Territory of Nebraska for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1866, shall and may be appropriated for and applied, if the Governor of said Territory shall so elect, to the payment of the territorial militia called into service by the Governor of said Territory to protect the frontier settlements against the depredations of Indians, in the fall and winter of the year 1864; which sum shall be disbursed and paid by the Governor of the Territory, who shall take vouchers therefor; and no other or further sum of money shall be appropriated to defray the legislative expenses for the year aforesaid. And the Governor as aforesaid shall, within one year, make a detailed report of his action hereon to the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth the several sums paid, and the names of the persons to whom paid, under the provisions of this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question is, will the Senate reconsider the vote striking out this section?

Mr. CONNESS. I wish simply to say now, in addition, that they are willing to relinquish a session of their Legislature so as to have the opportunity of applying this appropriation to the payment of their soldiers. I think it ought to be conceded to them. I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know but that the Senate may agree to this motion, and I therefore feel it my duty to take a little time to explain it. This is substantially a proposition to pay to the Governor of that Territory $20,000; to withdraw the distribution of that money from the accounting officers of the Treasury; to do it in an indirect way, and to do that which both Houses have by vote refused to do. It is a proposition to divert the appropriation to pay the expenses of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory to a different purpose, and to allow the money to be paid out by the Governor without rendering anything but simply an account, after he has paid the money, to the Treasury Department. It is a vicious system of legislation, and I trust the Senate will not gratify this Delegate from Nebraska by passing such a proposition. The Committee on Finance read it and objected to it. If an appropriation of $20,000 is indispensably necessary in Nebraska for this purpose, let us vote for it directly, but do not let us do it in this indirect way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to move amendments after the amendments made in committee have been acted upon. The first question will be, will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays. If the Senate concur in those amendments and send the bill back to the House at this period of the session, it will be impossible to pass the bill. I think the better way would be for us to abandon and drop all the amendments to the bill except the amendments that have been reported by the Committee on Finance, and which have been examined. I think Senators had better take the responsibility of doing that. They may have to abandon some amendments in which they are interested; but had we not better disagree to all the amendments that have been made since midnight?

Mr. GRIMES. The whole of them?

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole of the amendments except those which have been reported by the committee, and which have already been acted upon.

Mr. JOHNSON. We cannot do that.

Mr. GRIMES. Some of the amendments that have been adopted are just as necessary as the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance. I agree with the chairman of the committee that others of them are totally unnecessary; but I am unwilling to vote in a lump against or for all of them. I think it a preposterous proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I saw an incident which occurred in the House of Representatives the first session I was a member which I hope never to see reenacted. A bill like this was sent to the House of Representatives in the closing hours of the session, and the House, without reading the amendments, adopted them in gross in one of these night sessions; and there is danger of that very course being pursued here.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not our fault. If we agree to the proposition of the honorable member, it is leaving all legislation to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRIMES. It would be leaving the whole matter to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance that he will have entire charge of this bill in the committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. There may be no committee of conference.

Mr. CONNESS. There is certain to be, and that immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate concur in the amendments made in committee? The Chair will take the question on them altogether unless some Senator asks for a separate vote.

Mr. CLARK. I desire a separate vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. POWELL] in regard to the publishing of certain books for members of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment striking out an appropriation of $1,000 for the Seekonk river.

Mr. POWELL. I ask for a separate vote on the question that has been debated here in regard to trials by courts-martial.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment appropriating a sum of money to the State of Pennsylvania for the payment of troops.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment appropriating $100,000 for the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a separate vote on the amendment moved by the Senator from New Hampshire to strike out an appropriation of $6,000 for the publication of the transactions of the National Academy of Sciences.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a separate vote on the case of Mr. Clarke.

Mr. COWAN. I hope the gentlemen who have charge of amendments here understand this mode of attacking them in detail, and that they will not allow themselves to be flanked in that manner. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments named will be excepted; and the question is, will the Senate concur in the remainder of the amendments?

The residue of the amendments were concurred in.

The first excepted amendment was the amendment offered by Mr. POWELL, to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to procure from the surviving publisher of the Annals and Debates of Congress prior to the year 1837 one copy of the same for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, in the present Congress who has not heretofore been supplied therewith, and that said copies be paid for out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at a price per volume not exceeding that heretofore paid by Congress for the same.

Mr. CLARK. On that question I desire the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I trust this amendment will be concurred in. I think it one of the most valuable provisions in the bill—valuable to every member of the Senate.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cowan, Foster, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Powell, Sprague, Sumner, and Van Winkle—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Farwell, Grimes, Harlan, Henderson, Howard, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was the amendment offered by Mr. COWAN, to add the following as a new section:

To reimburse the institutions and individuals who advanced the money to pay the Pennsylvania soldiers who were called out by proclamation of the President of the United States and the Governor of Pennsylvania to repel the invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania by the rebel forces under General Lee, in the summer of 1863, and who were in actual service of the United States, the sum of $700,000, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated, to be paid to the Governor of Pennsylvania in trust for the above-mentioned purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon that question I desire the yeas and nays, because if that amendment is concurred in I shall have to prepare a similar amendment to the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cowan, Doolittle, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Nye, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was the amendment offered by Mr. GRIMES, to add the following:

For preparing, refitting, and repairing the Naval Academy buildings at Annapolis, Maryland, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. I only asked to have that amendment excepted in order to have the chairman of the committee explain it. A few weeks ago he said it would only cost $10,000 to remove the Academy from Newport to Annapolis, and now he asks for $100,000; and I believe, according to his own estimates, it is to cost $30,000 to build a hospital there to take the place of the hospital that is now in the Naval Academy building. I venture to state that this is only the beginning of an expenditure of $300,000 to erect the necessary buildings there for the Academy.

Mr. GRIMES. I said it would cost not exceeding $10,000 to remove the Academy from Newport to Annapolis. I do not think it will cost that much; but that will be the cost of transporting the library and all the appurtenances that are attached to the Academy.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the Senator told us at the last session that the library never had been removed, but was still at Annapolis; so that that may be taken from the expense of transportation.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no; I never said so. I said the library was first put in one of the case-ments in Fort Adams, and there it was found; it was rotting and decaying; and then it was put somewhere in the city of Newport, and they were unable to secure a room so that it could be opened for the accommodation of the young gentlemen. Let me say in this connection that the buildings and grounds at Annapolis have cost the United States Government between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars. They have been now in the possession of the Army about four years, and the military department have used them as hospitals, and knocked out the partition walls so as to give, as they supposed, ventilation. As a general thing the officers' houses have been kept up, I understand, in very good condition; but the barracks and the dormitories, and so on, are in a very bad condition. This amendment has been proposed at the instance of the Navy Department, and is only intended to appropriate such an amount as may be found necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. If this amendment is only to repair the partition walls of the Naval Academy building, I will suggest to the Senator to have it specified that it is an appropriation of $100,000 for repairing the partition walls of the Naval Academy buildings.

Mr. GRIMES. I said for repairing the partition walls, and various other things. They built a railroad right through the public grounds and made an excavation. That has got to be filled up. If the Senator has been there he will remember that there was a most beautiful esplanade, one of the prettiest I ever saw; and the War Department have laid a railroad track right down through it. That has got to be repaired; and there are a great many other things that are necessary to be done.

Mr. FARWELL. I propose to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That no more appointments of cadets shall be made, and that after the present classes graduate the Academy shall be suspended for twenty years.

I propose in a word to explain this amendment.

We have now over one hundred vessels employed in the Navy, and have had a large number employed for several years, and shall have for several years to come. I intended to offer a similar amendment to this in regard to West Point when the Military Academy appropriation bill was before us. I am aware that West Point and the Naval Academy have educated and furnished most accomplished and gallant officers, who have done great service to the country. I have always taken a great deal of interest in both those Schools, and I wish here to acknowledge the debt of gratitude which the country owes to the men who have graduated at them. But we have now, I believe, both in the Army and in the Navy a class of officers who have been educated in actual war, better than any theory of war; as many as will be needed in the country for many years to come. I believe the country owes it to them, if their services shall be wanted hereafter in the defense of the flag of the country, either upon land or upon water, that those men who have periled their lives in actual war should have the places in preference to young men selected generally without much regard to their fitness, and sent there and educated theoretically at the public expense. It is a known fact that from the vicious system in which these young gentlemen have been appointed much more than half of them have been dismissed from the Academy at the end of the first six months. I offer this amendment because I believe the interests of the country require it. I believe that justice to the young men both in the Navy and Army requires it. But then I have another object in view. I am very sure, as the appointments of all the young gentlemen in this School are made by the members of the House of Representatives, that if we attach this amendment to the bill we may be sure the bill will not pass without a committee of conference. The chairman of the committee thought there would be some trouble about that. I am very confident this amendment will secure such a committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ANTHONY. I excepted an amendment, which the Secretary is looking for, striking out a little appropriation of $1,000 to place some buoys in the Seekonk river. When it was under consideration in committee I stated that it was estimated for by the Department. I was mistaken in its being estimated for this year. It was estimated for two or three years ago, and the appropriation lapsed. It was an appropriation of $500. It was not quite enough. One thousand dollars now is not any more than $500 was then. I see that the chairman is going to allow this little appropriation to pass. I think it is due to me after staying here all night, listening to so many speeches, some of them very long, and some of them not remarkably interesting. I hope all those who have made speeches will agree to this proposition as compensation, and those who have been bored by them will vote with me from sympathy, [laughter,] and if I have both classes I shall obtain a unanimous vote.

Mr. GRIMES. If I could add anything to what the Senator from Rhode Island has so well said, I would unite my influence with his to induce the chairman of the Committee on Finance to consent to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Presiding Officer to put the question on the amendment striking out that appropriation—it is not necessary to read it—and we will disagree to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know where the Seekonk river is. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it in Rhode Island?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COWAN. How long is it? Four hundred yards? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. It is longer than that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think there is any such river. [Laughter.] It is not in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, it is in the State. The amendment is to strike out the appropriation for placing buoys in the Seekonk river.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator recollect where it is in the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. I cannot recollect, because it is not in the printed bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question without having the amendment read, unless it is insisted upon by some member. The question is on concurring in an amendment of the committee striking out an appropriation of $1,000 for placing buoys in the Seekonk river.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators who have had amendments excepted will please to state them, so that the question may be taken upon them.

Mr. POWELL. I desired a separate vote on the amendment striking out the section in the bill forbidding the trial of any persons, except those engaged in the Army or Navy or rebel spies, by military courts; and on that I wish to be heard.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senate understand that amendment. It is the section that provides that only such persons as are in the military or naval service or rebel spies shall be tried by courts-martial or military commissions.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to address the Senate on the section of the bill that was stricken out in committee?

Mr. POWELL. Yes, sir.

MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. WILSON. Before that, I desire to call up the report of the committee of conference on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be taken up if there be no objection. It has already been read and the sections explained. The question is, will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass a little bill from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object until the civil bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be received without the unanimous consent of the Senate, and objection is made.

Mr. BROWN. There is a resolution on the table with a message from the House announcing that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to it. As I moved the amendment in the Senate I desire to take up that resolution in order that the Senate may recede from its amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is in order, I hope we shall proceed with the miscellaneous appropriation bill. If Senators want to kill that bill, let us lay it on the table. I am inclined to vote against it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill before the Senate, being House bill No. 786, the civil appropriation bill, will be proceeded with, unless by unanimous consent it is laid aside. Are there any other amendments, except the one named by the Senator from Kentucky, upon which Senators desire a separate vote?

Mr. STEWART. I desire to offer a short resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. I do not consent to anything until we get a vote on this bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for a vote on concurring in all the other amendments except the one named.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have been voted on.

Mr. GRIMES. After awhile somebody will come in and claim that they were out for a moment and ask for a vote on some of these very amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment excepted by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CONNESS. It is stated that there are a few other amendments unacted upon, and there is a wish that the question should be taken on all the pending amendments but the one named by the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has asked if there was any amendment upon which any Senator wished to vote, and the Chair heard no response.

Mr. CONNESS. They will be considered, then, as adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As concurred in, unless some Senator asks a separate vote on any other amendment not voted upon. The question now is on the amendment indicated by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. POWELL. All I have to say is that the Senate have put everything into this bill that ought not to be put into it, and I want something in it for the public liberties, and I therefore demand the yeas and nays on the amendment. That is my speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to strike out the eighteenth section of the bill, and on that question the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wilkinson, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wiley—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cardile, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to take a vote in the Senate on this Maine question. I will simply say that by the Ashburton treaty Maine surrendered to Great Britain five thousand square miles, or three million two hundred and seven thousand six hundred and eighty acres of land, and below the line by which she was circumscribed the British Government had given claims to settlers to a large amount. This amount is honestly due to those States, Maine and Massachusetts owning the claims together. There is no doubt about it by all persons who ever examined the question. I think it is a claim that ought to be paid, and it ought to have been paid a long time ago. I have no speech to make upon it.

Mr. POWELL. I think there are $30,000,000 due to the State of Kentucky, and we cannot get even a commission to audit them; we cannot even get a law to authorize them to be audited, much less paid. I think we had better first pay some of our modern debts. This is a proposition to pay for debts far beyond the statute of limitations.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest that it is unnecessary to read the amendment. It has been once read. I only desire a vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to have the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have only to say in regard to this claim that it has been up frequently when there was ample time to consider it, and always voted down.

Mr. SUMNER. It was only up once before, and then was recognized to be a good claim.

Mr. GRIMES. Nobody voted for it.

Mr. SUMNER. A great many.

Mr. GRIMES. Very few.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Grimes, Harlan, Johnson, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cardile, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Howe, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNER. I excepted an amendment that was made in committee, and upon which the Senate have not acted, on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] to strike out the appropriation for the publication of the transactions of the National Academy. I wish to have that question acted upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. The vote was taken upon that.

Mr. GRIMES. The vote was taken upon it a second time.

Mr. SUMNER. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Your attention was not directed to it.

Mr. SUMNER. I have inquired at the desk, and there is no record of it.

Mr. GRIMES. There were two or three exceptions made, which were neglected by those who made them, and among them was the Senator from Massachusetts; and I called the attention of the Chair and the Senate to it, and asked what should be done with them, and the Chair said they would be considered as concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asked several times if any Senator wished a separate vote taken on any of the other amendments which were proposed in committee. The Chair heard no response, and then said that the other amendments made in committee would be considered as concurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I excepted the claim of Mr. Clarke. I believe no vote has been taken on that exception.

Mr. SUMNER. The first question is on the amendment about the National Academy of Sciences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the sense of the Senate again on these several amendments. The question now is, will the Senate concur in the vote taken in committee upon the amendment named by the Senator from Massachusetts to strike out the following clause?

For publishing the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences made to Congress, under the act approved March 3, 1863, $6,000.

Mr. SUMNER. That comes from the House; it has already been voted upon there; it has the sanction of the Finance Committee, and I see no reason for striking it out.

The amendment was concurred in; there being, on a division—yeas nineteen, noes not counted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I excepted the claim of Mr. Clarke, and I desire to have a separate vote on that.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senate has already voted upon that twice, and I hope they will adhere to their former decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate concur in the amendment proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to the chargé d'affaires at Brussels?

Mr. CHANDLER. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of line two hundred and eighty-five:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the persons employed by the Committee on the District of Columbia under the joint resolution entitled "A resolution to provide for a revision of the laws of the District of Columbia," approved June 18, 1864, the compensation provided by said resolution, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the authority of said joint resolution is hereby extended for and during the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain it. By a joint resolution of Congress, passed at the last session, the Committee on the District of Columbia were instructed to procure a revision or codification of the laws of this District, and were authorized, to that end, to employ some suitable persons for that purpose. Two gentlemen were selected at the close of the last Congress, and have been engaged on the work, and have proceeded in the work so far as—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I certainly think the Senate understand this matter sufficiently. It is right to pay a clerk for helping to revise the laws of the District.

Mr. MORRILL. That is what it is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is understood, and the Senate will vote for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we have already provided for this commission.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no provision for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We are now paying commissioners to revise the laws of the District.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a proposition to pay them.

Mr. GRIMES. Is there no other appropriation?

Mr. MORRILL. This is the only one.

Mr. WADE. I hope this amendment will be agreed to. The Government is really pledged to this thing already, and it is a small matter, but it will be very valuable to us.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to obtain the sense of the Senate on the following amendment which I offered in committee:

For fog signals at Point Judith, Rhode Island, Execution Rocks, and Hart Island, New York, $10,000.

This is an estimate of the Department. It has been before the committee, and before the Treasury Department, and they want it. If it was possible I would contribute the amount myself, knowing it to be so serviceable to the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We adopted this once, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, it was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It was rejected because it was not explained. It is one of the most important adjuncts of the light-house system that there is; and it is upon one of the most dangerous portions of the coast, where there is the most business done, where there is the most commerce, where the Government receives the most revenue. Why, sir, in my deliberate judgment, seven eighths of the appropriations upon this bill are not to be compared in value or in importance to the country with this one.

Mr. GRIMES. Are there any similar kind of signals along the coast?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Yes, sir; and this is for repairing some, and establishing others absolutely necessary, and believed to be so by the Light-House Board.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now renew my amendment for a harbor of refuge on Lake Michigan:

That the sum of $88,541 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a passage into a harbor of refuge at Frankfort on Lake Michigan, in the State of Michigan.

I will not occupy the time of the Senate; but I deem this proposition of vital importance to the commerce of the lakes. That region is called the grave-yard of the lakes. The losses of property during the last summer were several hundred thousand dollars, and the loss of life was very great, and has been so for years. There are two hundred miles of coast without a single harbor. Here is a lake with a narrow strip of sandbank to be cut through, which will accommodate some four or five hundred vessels of the largest size. The Department estimates the cost of making a perfect harbor of refuge there at $84,000, and upon the estimate of the Department the Committee on Commerce has recommended the establishment of this harbor. I hope the Senate will adopt the recommendation of the committee. I believe it is of more consequence than any other appropriation on the bill. The commerce passing that point amounts to more than five hundred millions per annum. The loss of life and property annually is incalculable. Michigan has but little interest in this matter—not half the interest of Illinois, or Pennsylvania, or Ohio, or any other State—but it is a question of national importance, and I hope the Senate will adopt the appropriation.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes seven, noes not counted.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. POWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26; nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark;

Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, and Van Winkle—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Grimes, Powell, Trumbull, and Wade—5.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Henderson, McDougall, Nye, Pomeroy, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, Willey, Wilson, and Wright—19.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 141) reducing the duty on printing paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. J. F. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. H. L. DAWES of Massachusetts, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling, and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes," asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. T. D. ELIOT of Massachusetts, and Mr. F. C. LE BLOND of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate against any recognition on the part of the United States of the rebel debt or loan under any circumstances.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and agreed to the same.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 812) allowing the further time of five years to those holding lands by entries in the Virginia military district of Ohio, which were made prior to the 1st of January, 1852, to have the same surveyed and patented, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburgh;

A bill (S. No. 380) supplemental to the act approved July 1, 1862, "for the disposal of coal lands and of town property on the public domain;"

A bill (S. No. 472) to provide for the construction of certain wagon roads in the Territories of Idaho, Montana, Dakota, and Nebraska;

A bill (H. R. No. 710) to extend the time for the completion of certain railroads to which land grants have been made in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin;

A bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes and their treatment by the civil and military authorities; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) to purchase mail pouches or boxes of Marshall Smith's patent for the postal service, and for other purposes.

DUTY ON PRINTING PAPER.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 141) reducing the duty on printing paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said resolution disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. HOWE, ANTHONY, and LANE of Kansas.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. GRIMES, CHANDLER, and MORRILL.

LAW OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 657. It is that little bill which was nearly finished a night or two ago in reference to the right to testify in one's own case; providing that a party shall not be allowed to testify against dead men. I believe everybody is in favor of it.

Mr. BROWN. Let us dispose of the bills that require to be enrolled first.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This will not take two minutes. Everybody I believe agrees to it.

Mr. SUMNER. I doubt whether we should proceed with that bill. I doubt the expediency of the change proposed by it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then, sir, I move to postpone all prior orders and take up the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that a motion to go into executive session is now in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. GRIMES. I make that motion. There are a great many appointments on the table that ought to be attended to, and attended to between now and ten o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have tried for two or three weeks to get this bill considered. I have no interest in it, but I have been asked to get it through. I should like to get it through; but I am not going to beg much about it.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senate will not go at present into executive session. There are several little bills that ought to be passed that I have charge of, so that they may be engrossed if they are passed. We can attend to executive business after they are attended to. I think we should attend to those bills first.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are some very important nominations that should be disposed of.

Mr. GRIMES. Some of those appointments are to be contested, to my knowledge, and they are of vast importance.

Mr. CLARK. It may be so, but perhaps not more important than these bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those that I refer to are not contested. They are the appointments of collectors and assessors.

Mr. CLARK. There will be time enough to attend to them between ten and eleven o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. I will make one remark with regard to the necessity of our speeding matters now. This Hall must be cleansed and purified before the proceedings can go on at twelve o'clock. There must be an interval of some two or three hours for the attendants of the building to take care of that.

Mr. WADE. It will want it more afterward than now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. That is another question. I merely make that suggestion because that may influence us with regard to the business we shall enter upon.

Mr. FARWELL. I hope we shall take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not now the question before the Senate. The question before the Senate is the motion to go into executive session.

Mr. FARWELL. Then I hope we will not go into executive session. I do not believe that live men ought to come into court to testify against dead men's estates.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now, I believe my motion is in order. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SUMNER. I interpose no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then if the Senator interposes no objection I presume there will be no opposition to taking it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 657) to amend the third section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1865, and for other purposes," so far as the same relates to witnesses in the courts of the United States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The bill was read yesterday evening, and I will state to the Senate just what was stated by the Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. FOSTER] yesterday evening. This bill passed the House, came to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee have reported an amendment to it. That amendment is in legal effect precisely the House bill; but if we adopt this amendment and amend the bill, it cannot pass the House at this hour, that is certain; and I wish the Senate not to adopt the amendment, but to stand by the House bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I agree with the Senator that the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee is substantially the House bill. It is the House bill, if I may so say, taken into a new draught, perhaps in a little better form; but I doubt the policy of the House bill. I believe that the House bill goes further than the law of evidence as it is now laid down by the best writers and authorities on the subject; and my impression is we had better not interfere with it, but leave the rule as it was declared by Congress at the last session, until at least we have some experience under it, and find that it does not work well. That rule is substantially in harmony with the received rule of evidence according to the best authorities now.

Mr. MORRILL. What is the rule?

Mr. SUMNER. I cannot undertake to state it now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The rule is that a man can swear in any case. The bill simply limits it, that he shall not swear in his own case against a guardian or against an administrator, unless the court specially and affirmatively order it. If the ends of justice require it, the court can allow it; but he will not have the right except by permission of the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to hear the bill as it came from the House read also.

The Secretary read the bill and amendment, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the third section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes," be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided further, That in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court."

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color, nor in civil actions because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried: Provided, That in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court, except in cases arising upon contracts made with the executor, administrator, or guardian of such estate.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNER. Now, I hope the bill will not be passed. I think at this time we ought, so far as we undertake to interfere with the law of evidence, to open it, to broaden it, instead of limiting it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let a man swear against a dead man's estate?

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, we ought to get testimony from every quarter.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken about the practice in relation to evidence in the English courts and the courts of this country. It is in harmony with this bill, and it seems to me to be a monstrous proposition to allow a man to testify when the other party is dead. That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I think there is no need of mutuality in such a case. We want light; we want evidence from every quarter we can get it.

Mr. HOWARD. But we do not want perjury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 62) to remove all disqualification of color in carrying the mails.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 558) to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President.

REPORT FROM A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 401) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory, reported it without amendment.

JOSIAH O. ARMES.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 161, for the relief of Josiah O. Armes. ["Oh, no."] Let us bring it up and get a vote upon it.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will not let me have the floor long enough to pass a bill reported from the same committee. I must go out on a committee of conference.

Mr. CLARK. Let me have a vote and get mine up first.

Mr. GRIMES. That will not do; I object to taking up one bill and then farming out the floor.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, called for the yeas and nays on the motion, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Sumner, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Willey—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harding, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Stewart, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I believe my motion is now in order, to take up House bill No. 161, for the relief of Josiah O. Armes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on an amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to enable the Senator to have a direct vote on the bill I will withdraw that amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Let it come to its passage, and then we will take a direct vote.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HARLAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Nye, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wade, and Willey—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nesmith, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wilson—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Hale, Harding, Henderson, McDougall, Pomeroy, Richardson, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the bill was passed.

AMBROSE MORRISON.

Mr. CLARK. I have one bill further that I wish to report from the Committee on Claims, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it at this time. If after making a statement I cannot have unanimous consent I will lay it aside. It is a bill (H. R. No. 463) for the relief of Ambrose Morrison, of Nashville, Tennessee.

Mr. HOWE. I appeal once more to the Senator from New Hampshire to let me take up my bill.

Mr. CLARK. I think when I come to state what this bill is there will be no objection to it; and if I can do so, I will then give way to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. GRIMES. I object to its being taken up, if the floor is to be farmed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be considered except by unanimous consent, and objection is made.

MERCANTILE MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. HOWE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 456, for the relief of the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company of New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and pay to the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company of New York eight United States notes, not bearing interest, of $1,000 each, in lieu of eight notes of the United States, issued under the act of Congress of February 25, 1862, of the letters, numbers, and dates following: A. 17,097, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; A. 20,421, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; C. 20,251, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; B. 9,962, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; D. 5,820, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; D. 11,900, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; D. 216, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; D. 7,164, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; which were lost or destroyed by the foundering of the steamer Quincy, at sea, on the 13th of December, 1863; but the company is to execute a bond in the penal sum of $16,000, to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury, indemnifying the United States against any loss on account of the issuing of those bills.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is evident that this case is to lead to controversy. It is a private claim, to pay some party for lost bonds. I am very anxious to call up a bill that I have been trying to get an opportunity to call up for several days. It is a House bill, and one of very great importance to the West. I move to postpone this bill and all other orders, and take up House bill No. 322. I will state what that bill is. It is a bill to construct a ship-canal for the passage of Army and Navy vessels from the Mississippi river to Lake Michigan. It is a bill that has passed the House.

Mr. GRIMES. There will be no debate upon that, of course. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not want any debate upon it, except to state the facts about it. If the Senate will take it up and permit me to state what the bill is, I am willing then that a vote should be taken upon it. I hope the Senate will allow it to come up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a privileged motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I do not think that it will take long to dispose of the nominations that ought to be acted upon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that motion will not be agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope the Senator from Ohio will permit me to pass a little bill that I have been trying to get the floor all night to call up, that will lead to no discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state that it is necessary to dispose of the nominations that I have referred to, and the only ones I know of, of assessors and collectors. Their appointments will fall, and their bonds be of no validity, if we do not act upon them now.

Mr. HOWE. There is a bill before the Senate which will lead to no discussion, which passed the House, and has been reported by the Senate Committee on Claims without any amendment; and the Senate is gaining no time by crossing these motions. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his motion and allow a vote to be taken on this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But very little time has been asked for by the Committee on Claims during this session; and the claim now before us—

Mr. CONNESS. We will vote for it if you will let us vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS. All Senators may not feel just that way. Perhaps they do not want to vote for it without knowing something about it. [Laughter.] The claim that the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to call up was examined at the last session, and I had the pleasure of examining it with the Committee on Claims at that time, and I think it is just as clear as light. It is a legal proposition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to go into executive session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I thought that motion had been put, as I see the officers clearing the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot keep men in the galleries if they choose to go. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. But the officers need not turn them out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is by no order of the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust we shall now have a vote on my motion; and I should like to have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nye, Stewart, Trumbull, Wilkinson, and Willey—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Wright—21.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

So the motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. D. C. LITTLEJOHN of New York, Mr. H. WINTER DAVIS of Maryland, and Mr. JAMES S. ROLLINS of New Hampshire, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department;

A bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866; and

A bill (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CLARKE, and Mr. HENDERSON.

R. L. B. CLARKE.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of R. L. B. Clarke.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I now ask the Senate to consider the bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Treasurer of the United States to pay the sum of $1,500 to R. L. B. Clarke, in full for the time and expense incurred by him in contesting the seat of Augustus Hall, from the first district of Iowa, in the Thirty-Fourth Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THANKS TO GENERAL THOMAS.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to take from the table and ask presentation upon a joint resolution returning the thanks of Congress to Major General Thomas and the officers and men under his command, for their gallant and heroic service in Tennessee. This resolution, it will be remembered, was amended in the Senate by additional sections returning the thanks of Congress likewise to those officers and men of our Navy on the western waters coöperating in that brilliant and trying campaign. For some reason, purely technical, as I understand, the House of Representatives has not thought proper to concur in this well-deserved tribute to our seamen. I regret this, sir, very deeply. I regret that those who have deserved so well of their country should be denied such a recognition at our hands upon any technicality or plea whatever. But I am unwilling that the refusal of justice to one branch of the service shall operate to withhold or defeat the merited tribute conceded to another; and I am sure that in this I but reflect the common sentiment of all those whose united valor shed such luster on our arms, and effected so great a deliverance to the heart of the nation from a most formidable invasion. There is no officer of either Army or Navy who would wish that that honor should be withheld from either because not extended to both.

In this view, Mr. President, and having been the mover of the amendment unanimously concurred in by the Senate, I now ask that the Senate recede from its amendment and concur in the joint resolution as it came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) It is moved that the Senate recede from its amendment to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 139) of thanks to Major General Thomas and his army.

The motion was agreed to.

MILEAGE TO CLAIMANTS.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate now take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Before that is done,

I desire to offer a resolution so that it may come up as the unfinished business after the recess. I do not ask for its passage now. I merely desire to present it, so that it may be the unfinished business when we come together again:

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the usual mileage to Elisha Baxter and William M. Fishback, respectively claimants for seats in the Senate from Arkansas, and Charles Smith and R. King Cutler, respectively, as claimants for seats in the Senate from Louisiana at the second session of this Congress.

Mr. FOOT. Were not the claimants from Arkansas paid their mileage at the last session? Mr. LANE, of Kansas. They were paid at the last session; but the House have paid the claimants there again this session.

Mr. FOOT. Have they been here?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAMSEY. Why not pass it now?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I will not ask for its consideration now, but I wish to leave it as the unfinished business.

Mr. BROWN. And I should like to submit an objection to the resolution also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now moved that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon, at seventeen minutes to seven o'clock, on the morning of the 4th of March, the Senate took a recess until ten o'clock.

MORNING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at ten o'clock, a. m., (4th of March.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 785) granting a pension to Captain George W. Knabe;

A bill (H. R. No. 808) for the relief of Ellis Norris, of Barnstable, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. No. 809) for the relief of Anna E. Ward, widow of Lieutenant Joseph D. Ward;

A bill (H. R. No. 810) for the relief of Mary A. Millinger, widow of Christian B. Millinger; and

A bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of Catherine Mock, widow of William H. Mock.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, which were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 62) to remove all disqualification of color in carrying the mails;

A bill (H. R. No. 657) to amend the third section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1865, and for other purposes," so far as the same relates to witnesses in the courts of the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) in relation to certain railroads.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS.

Mr. GRIMES. The message just received from the House of Representatives announced that they had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on House bill No. 667. I was a member of the committee, but did not sign the report. I move that the Senate concur in the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments to said bill.

Z. CHANDLER,
L. M. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. B. WASHBURN,
T. D. ELIOT,
F. C. LE BLOND,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

COINAGE OF THREE-CENT PIECES.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider House bill No. 807, to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary commenced the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the civil appropriation bill, and should like to stop the reading of the bill before the Senate for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive the report if there be no objection.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report from the committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 783) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1866, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to Senate amendments numbered one, five, six, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-four, thirty-six, thirty-seven, forty, forty-two, forty-six, forty-seven, forty-nine, fifty, fifty-one, fifty-two, fifty-three, fifty-four, and fifty-five.

That the House recede from their disagreement to so much of the twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate as proposes to insert words, and agree to the same with an amendment: strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the thirty-ninth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered two, three, four, seven, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, thirty-three, thirty-five, thirty-eight, forty-one, forty-three, forty-four, forty-five, fifty-five, and fifty-six.

The committee further state that they have to report disagreement on the forty-eighth amendment of the Senate, and the committee therefore report that they have been unable to agree.

JOHN SHERMAN,
DANIEL CLARK,
J. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
D. C. LITTLEJOHN,
H. WINTER DAVIS,
J. S. ROLLINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee of conference have agreed upon a report which covers all the points in disagreement between the two Houses except the amendment in regard to military arrests; and I will explain very briefly to those Senators who are here the disposition that has been made of the most important items in this bill. The appropriations for the light-houses, all of them, perhaps, have been agreed to. The proposition to fit up the portion of the building for the Supreme Court has been agreed to. We agree upon everything except the military arrests; and upon that we report a disagreement. I will therefore move that the Senate agree with the report of the committee of conference except as to the forty-eighth amendment, and upon that that the Senate further insist upon its amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman, and I desire an answer to my question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill had better be sent from here to the House first, and then I can answer afterward.

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, but the Senator wants us to concur in this report, and I should like to know whether all the amendments made in the Senate, or a considerable part of them, were conceded to the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Most of them were rejected by the House.

Mr. CONNESS. That is to say, our committee conceded them and abandoned them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. Wherever the House objected to a proposition made last night we abandoned it. We adopted that as a principle.

Mr. SUMNER. Did they object generally, en masse?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; we considered them separately.

Mr. STEWART. What did the committee do with the amendment making an appropriation for geological surveys?

Mr. SHERMAN. We struck it all out. If any other Senator desires information on any other point I am ready to give it to him.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it would be best to ask for a further conference. I think it probable that the House will recede from their amendment, and that will pass the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator moves simply to insist upon the amendment of the Senate, disagreed to by the House, and let it go to the House in that position.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF LADIES.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to be informed in regard to the arrangements that have been made here to-day for the inauguration. There are ladies, members of the families of Senators, who are utterly denied admission to the building—not to the galleries alone, but to any of the reception, rooms, or committee-rooms—and they are exposed to the inclemency of the weather outside of the building. If there is any gentleman here present who is connected with the committee of arrangements, or anybody who can explain by what authority this control is exercised over the building, I should like to be informed of it. There are persons who have admission tickets to the galleries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were notified that the galleries would not be opened until eleven o'clock.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If my honorable friend from Iowa will allow me, I will state to him that Mr. FOSTER of Connecticut, Mr. HENDERSON of Missouri, and myself, were appointed a committee of arrangements on this occasion; and we took the same programme that was adopted four years ago, when Mr. Foor was the chairman of that committee, and have in all respects followed the programme, with this exception, that we have assigned to the ladies of gentlemen who are admitted to the floor of the Senate a place in the gallery upon the right and left of the diplomatic gallery, and other ladies are admitted to other parts of the galleries. The programme has been published in all the newspapers, and it has been published by itself.

Mr. GRIMES. Why keep them out of the building?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Because this was the programme four years ago; and in the judgment of the committee, and in the judgment of the marshal and the Sergeant-at-Arms, it is utterly impossible to have any arrangements at all and reserve any seats for ladies unless the hour be fixed at which the doors shall be opened; for if you open the doors and ladies are permitted to come in and seat themselves there will not be room.

Mr. GRIMES. There were no more tickets issued than there were seats, I presume.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Tickets of admission have been issued to the ladies of the families of Senators and members of the House and members-elect who are entitled to the floor; and as I understand the Sergeant-at-Arms himself called upon those various members and ascertained how many ladies there were in their families, and the tickets were given.

Mr. MORRILL. They are outside now.
Mr. DOOLITTLE. They are here too early. If they came at eleven o'clock they would be admitted, and there would be no trouble.

Mr. GRIMES. All I have to say is, that I regard it as an assumption on the part of those who have control of this matter to shut them out of the building entirely. It may be very well to keep them out of the galleries. As for the precedent, I think that goes for nothing. It did not rain four years ago, and the ladies were not kept out in a shower.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In respect to that, I will simply say that I have not gone into this matter much myself; but I am satisfied that the arrangements are correct.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to go and open the doors and let those ladies in. I myself saw the wives of members of Congress standing outside in the wet, and I do not think that they should be kept there.

Mr. CONNESS. I met a member of the Senate outside who was excluded, and could not come in until he passed in with myself.

Mr. POWELL. It does not matter if there were forty Senators there; but there are ladies standing out there in the rain.

Mr. CONNESS. Exactly; but the Senator does not understand me. I do not know of any reason, after having cards of admission, why they should not be allowed to enter the building. They need not be allowed into the galleries at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the motion that the Senator from Kentucky desires to submit?

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to open the doors and admit the ladies who have tickets.

Mr. CONNESS. Not accompanied by gentlemen, at present. To admit the ladies alone, I understand to be the motion.

Mr. POWELL. If gentlemen come with ladies, I think they should be permitted to enter also.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. When Senators come to make motions and overrule the regular programme that has been established for many years they will find themselves involved in a thousand difficulties. If you open these doors in the morning, without regard to admission, you will find the passage-ways between here and the portico where the inauguration is to take place so crowded that it will be impossible to get there. You must have some rule and arrangement about it. This rule was adopted four years ago; the building was closed in precisely the same way; and gentlemen will remember that the President-elect was brought into the building under a covered way, through a side door, or else he could not have got in here at all.

Mr. MORRILL. It is raining now.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think not.

Mr. STEWART. I have a resolution that I should like to offer.

Mr. CLARK. I insist on my bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from New Hampshire insists on proceeding with his bill, that is the business in order.

Mr. POWELL. I insist on my motion. I really cannot stand here while those ladies are outside in the rain. I think it is absolutely disgraceful to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order while there is a bill before the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw his bill to enable me to make the motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not understand that the Senate is responsible for this business, and as one Senator I am not willing to undertake it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If Senators wish to take the responsibility of interfering with the arrangements that have been made, let them take it. That is all I can say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill before the Senate.

The Secretary continued the reading of House bill No. 807.

Mr. CLARK. I do not know that anybody is listening to the reading of the bill, and I suggest that its further reading be dispensed with. It simply provides for the coinage of three-cent pieces.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the reading be dispensed with, and that all prior orders be postponed until we have the doors of the building opened. I understand some ladies are unwell out there.

Mr. CLARK. We shall get through with this bill in a moment.

Mr. POWELL. I object to anything being done until the doors are opened.

Mr. CLARK. I do not object to that.

Mr. POWELL. I do object to keeping ladies out there in the rain.

Mr. CLARK. I say I do not object to your motion.

The motion to postpone all prior orders was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky now moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to open the doors and admit such ladies as have tickets of admission to the galleries.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to know whether that will include gentlemen who accompany them at present. ["Oh, no."] Very well.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Of course gentlemen with ladies.

Mr. GRIMES. They never have been allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were not included in the Senator's motion as stated by himself.

Mr. POWELL. I supposed that gentlemen escorting ladies would necessarily come in. I never knew them to be excluded in any civilized community.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Chair will again state the question. The Senator moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to open the doors for the admission of such ladies and gentlemen as have tickets of admission.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend that motion by striking out "gentlemen."

Mr. POWELL. Only such gentlemen as have ladies under their escort.

Mr. COLLAMER. I object to that altogether. I know there are ladies enough out there who have tickets to fill all the gallery. Gentlemen never have been admitted.

Mr. POWELL. Let the ladies come in at all events.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Kentucky will state distinctly his motion in his own words, the Chair will put it.

Mr. POWELL. I will accept the motion just as the Chair put it first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to admit such ladies as have tickets to the gallery.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I will suggest that it is impossible for Senators themselves in the present condition of the Capitol to get into the Chamber. I have been trying for the last twenty minutes to get through the barricade.

The motion of Mr. POWELL was agreed to; and in accordance therewith the doors were opened, and the spacious galleries were at once filled by ladies, whose very audible conversation materially retarded the transaction of public business.

COINAGE OF THREE-CENT PIECES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to dispense with the further reading of the bill before the Senate, House bill No. 807, to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, which were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 170) to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 139) of thanks to Major General Thomas, and to the army under his command.

OVERLAND MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to examine the condition of the overland mail service, and the manner of its performance, and to report to the Senate at the next session of Congress: Provided, That no charge shall be made on the Treasury therefor.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the committee be appointed by the Vice President.

The motion was agreed to; and

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. NESMITH, and Mr. CONNESS.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. NICOLAY, his Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 380) supplemental to the act approved July 1, 1864, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property on the public domain;

A bill (S. No. 411) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia;"

A bill (S. No. 2) granting a pension to Ellen M. Whipple, widow of the late Major General Amiel W. Whipple, of the United States Army;

A bill (S. No. 44) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;

A bill (S. No. 62) to remove all disqualifications of color in carrying the mails;

A bill (S. No. 91) to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of lands situated in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 122) for the relief of Mary A. Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker;

A bill (S. No. 171) further to amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862;

A bill (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburg;

A bill (S. No. 390) relating to the postal laws;

A bill (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company;

A bill (S. No. 472) to provide for the construction of certain wagon roads in the Territories of Idaho, Montana, Dakota, and Nebraska;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes and their treatment by the civil and military authorities; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) to purchase mail pouches or boxes of Marshall Smith's patent for the use of the postal service, and for other purposes.

MERCANTILE MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill No. 456.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 456) for the relief of the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company of New York.

Mr. GRIMES. When the consideration of that bill was suspended this morning the Secretary was about to read the report of the committee. I call for the reading of that report.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, on the 18th of February:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred an act (H. R. No. 456) entitled "An act for the relief of the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company of New York," having carefully examined the same, and the evidence therewith submitted, respectfully report:

That on the 21st day of November, 1863, the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company of New York entered into a contract with the firm of J. H. Brower & Co., by which they undertook the assurance of the safe transit of certain United States Treasury notes, (known as legal-tender notes,) amounting to the sum of $8,000, from New York to New Orleans in the United States mails on board the steamer Quincy.

In pursuance of said contract eight of said notes, numbered, dated, and described as follows, namely: one note A. No. 17,097, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note A. No. 20,421, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note C. No. 20,251, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note B. No. 9,962, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note D. No. 5,820, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note D. No. 11,900, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note D. No. 216, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000; one note D. No. 7,164, of 10th March, 1862, for $1,000—were, by said firm of J.

H. Brower & Co. given to Edward Walter, the president of said insurance company, who caused a record of them to be entered on the application of said firm for insurance. Afterward, on the 7th day of December, 1863, Mr. Walter, in the presence of Edward M. De Rose, put three of the notes above described, namely, Nos. 17,097, 20,421, and 20,251, into an envelope, addressed to E. J. Hart & Co., at New Orleans, sealed them up, and gave the package to said De Rose, and it was by him, on said 7th day of December, deposited in the post office of New York.

On the 8th day of December, 1863, Mr. Walter, in the presence of Francis Mallaby, Jr., put five of the above-described notes, to wit, Nos. 3,363, 5,820, 11,900, 216, and 7,164, into an envelope, addressed to E. J. Hart & Co., at New Orleans, sealed them up, and gave the package to said Mallaby, and it was by him, on the said 8th day of December, before two o'clock, p. m., in the post office at New York.

It appears from the deposition of Thomas Clark, of New York city, that he is superintendent of the mails in the New York post office; that on the 8th day of December, 1863, a mail was made up under his direction to be sent to New Orleans by the steamer Quincy; that all letters destined for New Orleans deposited in the post office on the 7th and the 8th days of December, and before two o'clock, p. m., of the latter day, were placed in the mails and dispatched by said steamer.

From the depositions of John McCluskey, assistant engineer, and others on board the steamer Quincy, it appears that that vessel, with all her freight and nearly all of her crew were destroyed by the foundering of that vessel on the morning of the 13th of December, at half past four o'clock, when about abreast of Hatteras light.

It also appears that after the loss of the steamer Quincy had been fully proved the petitioners, in fulfillment of their contract, paid Messrs. Brower & Co. the full amount of the notes, and took from them an assignment of all their interest in this claim.

The committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. GRIMES. I have been unable to hear a word of that report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will be kind enough to be seated and in their places, and order will be observed in the gallery. The Chair has been requested to state by the committee of arrangements that ladies in the galleries are respectfully but earnestly requested to sit as closely in the seats as they conveniently can, in order that all who have tickets may be provided for. There are no seats in the gallery in the front, supposed to be filled, which will not hold additional persons; and the ladies are respectfully requested to observe this request of the committee, and also to observe good order.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I understand this bill involves the payment of a considerable sum of money; and it was impossible to hear one word that was read by the Clerk. I therefore move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. HOWE. I hope the Senator will not press that motion. I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I will withdraw it if I can hear what it is.

Mr. CONNESS. If gentlemen will come nearer to the desk they may understand what is going on, and they can do that much to accommodate each other.

Mr. HOWE. I trust we have not surrendered possession of the Senate Chamber.

Several SENATORS. Oh yes, we have; the ladies have got it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey withdraw his motion?

Mr. TEN EYCK. No, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on laying the bill on the table.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 11, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOWE. I call for the yeas and nays, and let us know how many there are here.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Collamer, Cowan, Font, Foster, Grimes, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, and Wade—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Farwell, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Morrill, Stewart, Wilkinson, Wiley, and Wilson—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Doolittle, Harding, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Kiddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wright—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire at least to have the yeas and nays on the passage of that bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. My objection to the bill is that nobody except the committee who reported it knows anything about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be better order in the galleries, or the rule will be enforced in the galleries as well as on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this bill involves some very serious and very dangerous questions, which I do not think ought to be passed upon by the Senate at this stage of its proceedings. It involves the question of the liability of the United States for lost bonds, and the extent of the proof required in the case of lost bonds. Considering that we have in circulation over two thousand millions of various kinds of credits, this may establish a precedent of dangerous importance; and I trust the honorable Senator from Wisconsin will not press it. I am told that the committee that reported the bill is divided upon it. I know the Senate is divided on the subject. It is a bill proposing to replace bonds lost by an insurance company. It is not a case as strong as many others that have been before the Committee on Finance and before the Committee on Claims. I trust, therefore, that at this stage of the session it will not be pressed to a vote. This company is an organized incorporated company, not suffering for this money. There is no danger that they will die or starve on account of the want of this money. It has already realized a premium for carrying these bonds and the loss they have incurred. Under the circumstances I hope that the matter may be postponed until next December, and if it is not too late, I will submit a motion that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the first Monday of December next.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator understands that that is equivalent to an indefinite postponement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. I am really surprised at the opposition that this bill meets here. If I could suppose that the Senator from Ohio was any more watchful over the public interests than the Committee on Claims, I should feel bound to defer to the wish he has expressed here. The Senator says that the Committee on Claims was divided. I was not aware of the fact. I heard no opposition to the report of this bill. I accept notice of it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman is not for it.

Mr. HOWE. Somehow or other the Senator is better advised as to the opinions of the committee on which I serve than I am. I was not aware that there was any opposition. I know at one time the chairman of the committee doubted, as another member of the committee doubted, about the propriety of paying this claim; but I thought when the bill was reported it was reported with the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I did not approve it.

Mr. HOWE. I stand corrected so far as one member is concerned. If the chairman assents, I stand corrected as to another.

If the Senate will allow me to tell them just what the case is, I think I can do so in a word. Eight thousand of your notes, the notes of the Government of the United States, belonging to the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company of New York, went to the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico one day, with the vessel on which they were being transported, and all the crew but two or three, I do not now recollect the exact number. The simple consequence is this: you may replace those notes as you would if they were the notes of any one of you—and you would do it by the judgment of a court of law; you may replace those notes, and then the insurance company, I believe, has made eighty dollars, taking the expense of getting this claim through, the insurance having been one per cent., or you may refuse to pay this claim, and then you will make $8,000; your notes are gone; they never can be presented to the Treasury for redemption, where you undertake to redeem them; the insurance company is out of pocket $8,000, and you are in funds $8,000. If you think that a fair transaction, that is the very point on which we are at odds. Remember, if it was the note of any individual here, instead of being the note of the Government of the United States, it would be paid by the judgment of a court of law. If it is paid now, it is paid by the judgment of the Congress of the United States. The House has agreed to this bill. I ask a vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. FARWELL. I am very sorry to differ from my friend from Wisconsin; but I know he will not have any feeling about it, as it is only in the discharge of our duty here, which I know he means to discharge faithfully and honestly, and I trust he will give me credit for the same thing. But I must say I have very grave doubts whether the Government of the United States ought to pay this money. I had occasion early in the session to allude to a case somewhat analogous to this. When there was talk about making claim upon the English Government for the great number of our vessels that have been destroyed by the British pirates, I put the question to Senators, to whom would that money belong? The underwriters had paid for them; but would the money belong to them if it should be recovered from the British Government, because they paid for the vessels? Why, sir, they have collected that money out of other customers; and I presume this insurance company has collected vastly more than this sum out of their premiums for insuring bank notes of the United States; for there are vast sums of them going from one place to another, upon which insurance is effected. It will really be a very nice business of insurance if the companies are to have the premium, and the Government is to stand by and pay the loss. That is what it results in. They have got their premium for insuring this money. Suppose it had been flour; suppose it had been gold; would they be here with a claim for us to pay it? They got their premium in bank notes; and it strikes me if this money is lost it is a little piece of good luck to the United States among all the hard luck they have been having. I cannot see that there is an equitable claim against the Government of the United States to refund to these parties either duplicate notes or the value of them. I may be all wrong about it; but this is my opinion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Willey—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Conness, Davis, Dixon, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Stewart, Sumner, Wilson, and Wright—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Doolittle, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wilkinson—17.

So the bill was indefinitely postponed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay the interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864; which was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill from the House for the relief of the personal representatives of Jonas A. Thurston, deceased, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Commander William Reynolds, of the Navy, praying to be restored to the active list, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

ENLISTMENT OF CRIMINALS.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes or as volunteers in the Treasury [Army] or Navy, and to prevent frauds in the District jail in the city of Washington, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage; and I should like to have the bill considered now if there is no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot hear a word of what is going on.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know if it is not possible to have order in the Chambers so that we can hear what we are doing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has made several efforts without reasonable success.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think if the galleries understood that the Senate is transacting business, they certainly would have respect enough for the business of the nation to be quiet, so that we may hear what is being done; and if that cannot be done, I think the galleries ought to be cleared until the Senate has finished its business. It is impossible to tell what the Secretary is reading.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which provides that it shall be unlawful hereafter for any person, with knowledge of the fact, to present or offer to any recruiting agent or officer, or to any other officer of the United States military or naval service, either as a volunteer or substitute for any other person, any person charged with the commission of any criminal offense, or confined or held to bail for trial for such offense within the District of Columbia. It is also to be unlawful for any person in any way or manner to abet, aid, or assist in procuring the offer or acceptance of any person so charged or held for trial, or released on bail and awaiting trial, either as a volunteer or as a substitute for any person drafted or liable to be drafted in the military or naval service of the United States, whether the person so drafted or liable to be drafted shall be a resident of the District of Columbia, or shall reside elsewhere; and any person who shall knowingly offend against the provisions of this section is to be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and upon conviction before a court of competent jurisdiction in the District is to be punished by a fine of not less than $250 and not more than $1,000, and by an imprisonment in the District prison for a term not less than six months nor more than one year.

The second section provides that any officer of the jail of the District of Columbia, or any attaché or employé connected with the jail, who shall demand, or directly or indirectly receive, any compensation or reward or gratuity for any information given in respect to any person confined therein, or awaiting trial or bail, or for any service, assistance, or influence rendered, given, or exerted in any view intent, or purpose, of having such person thus confined or held for trial or bail to await trial, taken, offered, or used either as a volunteer or as a substitute for any other person in the military or naval service, or who shall corruptly receive for any act done by virtue of his office or employment any fee, compensation, reward, or gratuity, is to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in any district court of competent jurisdiction is to be punished by a fine of not less than $250, and be imprisoned in the District prison for a term not less than three months nor more than one year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know what the bill is or what we are voting upon. It is impossible to hear anything. Will the Senator from Maine tell us what it is about?

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain it. There has been a practice prevalent in the jail of this District of enlisting from the jail the criminals and persons confined there charged with crime as substitutes; and the employés in the jail have been implicated in the practice. This is to correct that evil, and to impose a penalty upon such practices. That is the whole of it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILEAGE TO CLAIMANTS.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to take up the unfinished business when we took a recess this morning.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. SUMNER. What is it?

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY F. & J. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 2D Session.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865.

NEW SERIES.....No. 88.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. A resolution to pay mileage to the Senators elected from Arkansas and Louisiana.

Mr. SUMNER. When was that offered?

Mr. SPRAGUE. At seven o'clock this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves to proceed to the consideration of the resolution he has indicated.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. SUMNER objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not competent for Senators to object to the Senator's motion.

Mr. SUMNER. It is a resolution offered to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands it has had its first reading. It is therefore competent for any Senator to object to another reading on the same day.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It is not a joint resolution; it is a resolution of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a resolution which takes money from the contingent fund, requiring three separate readings, like a bill or joint resolution.

EMIL COHEN.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 787, changing the name of Emil Cohen.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes Emil Cohen, of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, from and after its passage, to take and use the surname of Cornely, and that his name hereafter be Emil Cornely; and all acts done and entered into by him under that name are to have the same effect and operation in law as if his name had originally been Emil Cornely, of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, that the Senate take up and concur with the House in the passage of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to authorize the continuation of the Joint Committee on Commerce of the Senate and House of Representatives after the 4th day of March, 1865, to complete their investigations and make their report on the subject of trade with the rebellious States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to inquire whether we can continue members of the House, whose terms expire on the 4th of March, as members of committees of the House. I do not think it is within the power of Congress to continue the term of a member of Congress beyond the constitutional period.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is a sub-committee from the Committee on Commerce in each House. I suppose it is competent for the body to continue the services of those individuals, although they cannot continue them as a committee. The resolution, however, does continue the members of that sub-Committee on Commerce on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIMES. The trouble about that is we do not know, and it is not known to anybody, that any one has been elected to the next House of Representatives, and there certainly has been no Committee on Commerce appointed for the House whose term commences at twelve o'clock to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. It only continues the services of those individuals who have been members of that committee.

Mr. GRIMES. That is not the language of the resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let it be read. I should like to hear it.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Committee on Commerce on the part of the Senate, and the Committee on Commerce on the part of the House, acting as a joint committee in the Thirty-Eighth Congress for the investigation of trade with the rebellious States, by virtue of the resolutions of the House of Representatives and the concurrent resolution of the Senate and House, be continued after the 4th day of March, 1865, for the purpose of closing their investigations and making their report. And the report when completed shall, together with the evidence taken, be filed with the Clerk of the House, and the same be printed. And the chairman of either of the said committees shall have power to issue subpoenas and compel the attendance of witnesses in the same manner as the Speaker of the House or President of the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. It is evident that this Congress has no power to continue any of its committees in session after twelve o'clock to-day. I therefore move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 807) to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 307. I desire to press a vote upon it. I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] is entitled to the floor upon it when it is taken up.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to postpone all prior orders and take up the bill (H. R. No. 401) reported from the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foot in the chair.) There is a pending motion. The Senator from Michigan moves to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 307) to regulate commerce among the several States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe this is what is known as the Camden and Amboy bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to have the Senator from Michigan explain the nature of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a bill regulating commerce among the several States. The Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor upon it, but if he is not here to retain his possession of the floor I ask the Senate to come to a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open for consideration, and upon it the Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor. The bill is in the Senate, and the question is on ordering it to a third reading.

Mr. HALE. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. COLLAMER. I suppose the gentleman from Michigan will not press the bill, as the Senator from Maine, who has the floor upon it, is out of the Chamber for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending to the bill, which is now in order.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That no citizen of the United States shall be excluded from travel upon any railroad or navigable water within the United States on account of or by reason of any State law or municipal ordinance, or of any rule, regulation, or usage of any corporation, company, or person whatever; and all citizens of the United States shall be subject and amenable to the same laws, ordinances, rules, regulations, and usages; and any corporation, company, or person offending against the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction in any court of the United States, be punished by a fine of not less than $500, or by imprisonment not less than six months: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall interfere with any executive order made under the laws of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that amendment will not prevail, as there is hardly time to send the bill back to the other House if it should be amended. The bill is very plain and simple in its provisions as it came from the House. I hope therefore that the amendment will be voted down, and that we shall come to a vote on the bill.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in the third line after the word "States," the words, "nor from any meeting-houses, churches, or hotels." [Laughter.]

Mr. NESMITH. I should like to hear the amendment read as it will stand if amended.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

*Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no citizen of the United States shall be excluded from travel upon any railroad or navigable water within the United States, nor from any meeting-houses, churches, or hotels, on account of or by reason of any State law or municipal ordinance, or of any rule, regulation, or usage of any corporation, company, or person whatever; and all citizens of the United States shall be subject and amenable to the same laws, ordinances, rules, regulations, and usages; and any corporation, company, or person offending against the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction in any court of the United States, be punished by a fine of not less than $500, or by imprisonment not less than six months: *Provided, That nothing herein contained shall interfere with any executive order made under the laws of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. CLARK. I move further to amend the bill by inserting after the words "United States" where they first occur the words "or any other country." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not now in order, not being an amendment to the pending amendment. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as amended.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Farwell, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Henderson, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wiley, Wilson, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Nye, Powell, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, and Trumbull—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Foot, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wilkinson—15.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. I now move that the bill be referred to the committee on the conduct of the war. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope not. I hope we shall now take a vote on the bill. I believe the discussion is through. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Hale, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wright—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Doolittle, Farwell, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wiley—21.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President—

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MORRILL. There is but half an hour left to pass this bill, and I am inclined to think that is not time enough. The Senator from Mass-

Massachusetts seems to exhibit a great deal of impatience for the passage of this bill. He has had ample time for its discussion, and undoubtedly thinks it of sufficient importance to press it upon the consideration of the Senate at this untimely hour. The Senator from Michigan has had his day in court; and the Senate will bear me witness that in season and out of season both he and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts have pressed it upon the consideration of the Senate without effect. Twice the judgment of the Senate has been most distinctly pronounced against this bill; and yet with only twenty-five minutes of this Congress left, the honorable Senators think it an opportune time to press a bill of the highest importance upon the consideration of the Senate, and that, too, when they have both been admonished that the bill is not to pass without discussion on this side. Now, if the Senate want to hear a speech on this subject I am prepared to make one; and I shall probably occupy so much time upon it that there will be very little opportunity of replying on the part of my honorable friend from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. All that I want is a vote.

Mr. MORRILL. He wants a vote. He has had two votes, and I believe, putting the two together, got twelve in all; and still he manifests the same ardor for a vote that he did in the beginning. Now, Mr. President, if I could feel that the Senate were in a condition, seriously, for a speech ["Go on!"] I was never in better condition to make one than at the present moment. [Laughter.] But the subject is almost too large, not for the audience, but for the time. Mr. President, it cannot be the judgment or the desire of the Senate to hear a speech now, and therefore I move the indefinite postponement of this bill; and upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Hale, Henderson, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wiley, and Wright—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Farwell, Foot, Grimes, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Doolittle, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Van Winkle—15.

So the motion was not agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senate to postpone further proceedings on this bill, with a view to submit the ordinary motion that a committee of three be appointed to wait on the President of the United States to inquire whether he has any further communications to make to Congress.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent; and Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. COLLAMER, and Mr. POWELL were appointed the committee.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope we shall now have a vote on the bill to regulate commerce among the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate take a recess for ten minutes, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SUMNER. It requires unanimous consent to entertain the motion, and I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Maine says that the Senator from Michigan has had his day in court. I hope we may get a vote on this bill; and I wish simply to say in reply that we have ran against Camden and Amboy every time we have taken up this bill, and I hope Camden and Amboy will get out of the way now and let us take a vote on it.

Mr. HALE. I hope so. I hope the Raritan will not suffer. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 207) for the relief of Charles F. Anderson.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask if it is in order to take a vote on the bill pending before the Senate, and if there is time before twelve o'clock I will ask to have a vote taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that all other business be suspended except that which is connected with the ceremonies of the day or with the reception of messages.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT (Hon. HANNIBAL HAMLIN) and the Vice President-elect (Hon. ANDREW JOHNSON) entered the Chamber, accompanied by Mr. DOOLITTLE, one of the committee of arrangements. Mr. JOHNSON was conducted to a seat to the right of the chair of the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes or as volunteers in the Treasury [Army] or Navy, and to prevent frauds in the District jail in the city of Washington; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

CONDITION OF THE INDIAN TRIBES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In virtue of a joint resolution of Congress, the Chair has been charged with the duty of designating a committee to make examination into the condition of the Indian tribes of the country and their treatment by the civil authorities, and announces Senator DOOLITTLE, Senator FOSTER, and Senator NESMITH, as that committee on the part of the Senate.

THE INAUGURATION.

For some time the Senate Chamber had been crowded with those distinguished persons to whom admission was accorded as witnesses of the inauguration ceremonies. The Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, a large attendance of ambassadors from foreign Governments, officers of the Army and Navy, with innumerable others, and lastly, the members of the House of Representatives, with their Speaker and Sergeant-at-Arms at their head, entered and were conducted to the seats prepared for them, the Speaker, Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, being seated to the left of the Vice President. Extensive as is the area of the Senate Chamber, it was filled with a distinguished and brilliant assemblage.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators: Amid these exciting scenes that mark the constitutional termination of this Congress, and as our official relations are about to cease, I ask briefly your indulgence.

I assumed the duties of this chair at a period of time unequalled in importance in the history of our country. War of a magnitude unknown in ancient or modern times has devastated the land—measures of deep and vital interest, affecting the very life of the Republic, demanded your investigation and determination; and if, amid these stirring scenes, in this chair, by any act of omission or commission, I have wounded the sensibilities of a single Senator, I take this occasion to ask for your forbearance, with the assurance that it has not been intentional. I know how deeply I am indebted to the Senate. Kindness, and courtesy, and cooperation I have received on all occasions. Whatever of success may have attended my efforts in the discharge of official duties in this position, I know how deeply I am indebted to the Senate for that confidence and cooperation. Permit me to tender to you my heartfelt and undissembled thanks for the kindness which has been bestowed by every Senator on all occasions. I shall bear with me in after life a cherished recollection of the associations that have been here formed and the kindness which has thus been here bestowed; and I can wish my friend and worthy successor no greater felicity than that the same relations shall subsist, as I think they will, between him and yourselves.

Thanking you again for your kindly aid as well as for the resolution commendatory of the manner in which the duties of the Chair have been discharged, it only remains for me to tender to you my sincere wishes for a safe return to your families and your homes, and for your future welfare and prosperity in life, and hoping that the sun of peace now dawning upon us will soon shed its rays upon a united, a happy, and a free people.

Is the Vice President-elect now ready to take and subscribe the oath of office?

The VICE PRESIDENT-elect, (Hon. ANDREW JOHNSON, of Tennessee.) I am. [Then turning to the Senate he said:] Senators: I am here to-day as the chosen Vice President of the United States, and as such, by constitutional provision I am made the presiding officer of this body. I therefore present myself here in obedience to the high behests of the American people to discharge a constitutional duty, and not presumptuously to thrust myself in a position so exalted. May I at this moment—it may not be irrelevant to the occasion—advert to the workings of our institutions under the Constitution which our fathers framed and Washington approved, as exhibited by the position in which I stand before the American Senate, in the sight of the American people? Deem me not vain or arrogant; yet I should be less than man if under such circumstances I were not proud of being an American citizen, for today one who claims no high descent, one who comes from the ranks of the people, stands, by the choice of a free constituency, in the second place in this Government. There may be those to whom such things are not pleasing, but those who have labored for the consummation of a free Government will appreciate and cherish institutions which exclude none however obscure his origin from places of trust and distinction. The people, in short, are the source of all power. You, Senators, you who constitute the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, are but the creatures of the American people; your exaltation is from them; the power of this Government consists in its nearness and approximation to the great mass of the people. You, Mr. Secretary Seward, Mr. Secretary Stanton, the Secretary of the Navy, and the others who are your associates—you know that you have my respect and my confidence—derive not your greatness and your power alone from President Lincoln. Humble as I am, plebeian as I may be deemed, permit me in the presence of this brilliant assemblage to enunciate the truth that courts and cabinets, the President and his advisers, derive their power and their greatness from the people. A President could not exist here forty-eight hours if he were as far removed from the people as the autocrat of Russia is separated from his subjects. Here the popular heart sustains President and Cabinet officers; the popular will gives them all their strength. Such an assertion of the great principles of this Government may be considered out of place, and I will not consume the time of these intelligent and enlightened people much longer; but I could not be insensible to these great truths when I, a plebeian, elected by the people the Vice President of these United States, am here to enter upon the discharge of my duties. For those duties I claim not the aptitude of my respected predecessor. Although I have occupied a seat in both the House of Representatives and the Senate, I am not learned in parliamentary law, and I shall be dependent on the courtesy of those Senators who have become familiar with the rules which are requisite for the good order of the body and the dispatch of its business. I have only studied how I may best advance the interests of my State and of my country, and not the technical rules of order; and if I err I shall appeal to this dignified body of representatives of States for kindness and indulgence.

Before I conclude this brief inaugural address, in the presence of this audience—and I, though a plebeian boy, am authorized by the principles of the Government under which I live to feel proudly conscious that I am a man, and grave dignitaries are but men—before the Supreme Court, the representatives of foreign Governments, Senators, and the people, I desire to proclaim that Tennessee, whose representative I have been, is free. She has bent the tyrant's rod, she has broken the yoke of slavery, and to-day she stands redeemed. She waited not for the exercise of power by Congress; it was her own act, and she is now as loyal, Mr. Attorney General, as is the State from which you come. It is the doctrine of the Federal Constitution that no State can go out of this Union; and moreover Congress cannot eject a State from this Union. Thank God, Tennessee has never been out of the Union! It is true the operations of her government were for a time interrupted; there was an interregnum; but she is still in the Union, and I am her representative. This day she elects her Governor and her Legislature, which will be convened on the first Monday of April, and again her Senators and Representatives will soon mingle with those of her sister States; and who shall gainsay it, for the Constitution requires that to every State shall be guaranteed a republican form of government?

I now am prepared to take the oath of office and renew my allegiance to the Constitution of the United States.

The oaths prescribed by law were then administered to the Vice President-elect by the retiring Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The term prescribed by the Constitution for the termination of this Congress having arrived, by virtue of the authority in me vested I now declare it adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1865.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

READING OF JOURNAL.

The Journal had been partly read, when

Mr. DAWES moved that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object; I think the Journal had better be read. No quorum is yet present.

Mr. DAWES. I desire simply to introduce a resolution which I think will give rise to no objection or discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to allowing the reading of the Journal to be suspended until the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has been introduced and acted on.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reading of the Journal will be suspended, with the understanding that it shall be resumed when the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts shall be disposed of.

There was no objection.

LOUISIANA AND ARKANSAS ELECTION CASES.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Elections the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to M. F. Bonzano, A. P. Field, W. D. Mann, T. M. Wells, and Robert W. Talliaferro, claimants for seats in this House as Representatives from Louisiana, and to T. M. Jacks, T. M. Johnson, and A. A. C. Rogers, claimants for seats in this House as Representatives from Arkansas, each for compensation, expenses, and mileage, the sum of $2,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. How much does this amount to?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot state.

Mr. DAWES. This resolution is the result of a conference between the Committee of Elections and the Committee on Mileage. It does not allow the full amount of mileage by any means; that would amount to a great deal more. It proposes simply to allow to each of the claimants the fixed sum of $2,000. They have been here three months. They came here, not as adventurers, but under what they supposed to be the policy of the General Government. The Committee of Elections, adopting that theory, reported in favor of them all—whether rightly or wrongly no vote of this House has decided.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. At the last session of Congress we fixed, I believe, a sort of rule, by allowing to one gentleman who claimed a seat in this House from Louisiana $1,500. I do not know that I would object to allowing that amount to each of these claimants. But I think I can hardly agree that they shall be paid the very large amount proposed by the resolution. If we make such large payments to men coming here in this way, we do not know when they will stop coming.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to say that gentlemen upon the Committee of Elections, who were opposed to the admission of these men, believed, from all the circumstances of the case, that they had prosecuted their claims in good faith, and from the encouragement held out to them here, had every reason to believe that they would be admitted. They have been here three months prosecuting their claims; and I submit to the House, that whatever theories gentlemen may have with reference to the right of representation here, it is but fair to these men that this resolution should be adopted.

I now call the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me a moment?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a single remark in explanation of the views under which I and other members on this side of the House will act upon this subject.

We propose to support this proposition of the Committee of Elections on the ground that these gentlemen were encouraged to come here; that they came here with an honest expectation of obtaining seats and in an honest effort to restore popular government to their States. I think that, coming as they do, they ought to have some compensation, aside from any question with regard to the rights of their States.

Mr. HALE. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow me to add to his resolution a provision for the payment of R. L. B. Clark, of Iowa, who was a contestant some years ago. The Committee of Claims have reported in favor of paying him, and a bill for that purpose is now on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. That very claim was before the Committee of Elections in a former Congress of which I was a member, and I believe in the justice of that claim. This, however, is based upon different principles, and I desire to have it put to the House in a way that no man will be committed to the policy that brought these men here. I want it to be so put that it cannot be drawn into a precedent.

Mr. HALE. What harm is there in letting my amendment come in?

Mr. DAWES. I am afraid that it would break it down. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE moved to lay the resolution on the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question recurred on the motion to lay on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 55; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. ANCONA and DAWES.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 64.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman to strike out the words "claimants for seats."

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection, if the gentleman thinks that ought to be done.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not want to recognize the idea that anybody on earth thinks that these men are entitled to seats.

Objection was made.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the Journal will now be proceeded with.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that it be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 22; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw my motion.

R. L. B. CLARKE.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to suspend the reading of the Journal until the House acts on the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Objection was made.

Mr. HALE moved to suspend the rules.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid to R. L. B. Clarke, out of the contingent fund of the House, as contestant from the first district of Iowa, in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, the sum of $1,500, for expenses in contesting said election.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. When the House has passed the resolution paying these other men, I do not see how it can refuse to pay Mr. Clarke. It is the only case where a contestant has not been paid when the contest was made in good faith. His case was presented during the Thirty-Fourth Congress, but rejected by a political majority.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me inquire whether the same Committee of Elections who reported against Mr. Clarke did not report in favor of giving him the ordinary pay and mileage of a member of Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe they did. I believe every committee that has acted upon this matter has reported in favor of the payment of the claim.

Mr. HALE. It is to pay him his expenses, and not mileage and per diem.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I should be opposed to payment in any case where the party did not make a contest in good faith and show a prima facie claim to a seat in this House.

Mr. NOBLE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielding to any amendment of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot yield the floor except unconditionally.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to know of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether this is a joint resolution or not.

Mr. HALE. It is not a joint resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If not a joint resolution it will do no good.

Mr. DAWES. This will not come out of the contingent fund, but out of a general appropriation. The claim which the gentleman from Pennsylvania presents is a claim which was contingent to another House, and therefore there should be an appropriation to pay it, if it is paid at all.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman to modify his resolution and make it a joint one.

Mr. HALE. I will not do that, but by permission of the House I will withdraw my resolution and move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of R. L. B. Clarke, and that the same be brought before the House for action.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was before the House.

Mr. NOBLE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. HALE. I cannot; for the amendment the gentleman desires to offer will kill the bill. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the Journal must be resumed, unless it is dispensed with by a vote of the House.

Mr. COX. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Objection was made.

Mr. COX. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War transmitting, in compliance with the act of August 26, 1862, a statement of the expenditures for the appropriation for the contingencies of this Department for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

HUGH M. MARTIN.

Mr. NOBLE. I move to suspend the reading of the Journal to enable me to introduce a resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NOBLE. I introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid to Hugh M. Martin, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, the usual mileage and pay up to the day when he withdrew his contest before the Committee of Elections as a contestant for a seat in the Thirty-Eighth Congress as a Representative from the fourth district of the State of Iowa.

This resolution is introduced in behalf of Hugh M. Martin, who, by the home vote of the fourth congressional district of the State of Iowa, was elected by some nine hundred and odd majority. This election took place prior to any decision against the constitutionality of the soldiers' voting law of that State.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I would inquire of the gentleman whether or not Mr. Martin, the claimant, was not a member of the Legislature which passed that law; and whether, as a member of the Legislature, he did not vote for that law, upon the unconstitutionality of which he afterward contested the election?

Mr. NOBLE. Mr. Martin, I understand, was a member of the lower House of the Legislature of Iowa, and he probably sustained that law; but I will say that up to the time of the passage of this law the constitutionality of the question had not been decided. After Mr. Martin was elected by over nine hundred majority on the home vote of his district it was found that by counting the soldiers' votes, cast out of the State, he was defeated. Thereupon he was advised by his friends that according to the decisions of all the courts which up to that time had adjudicated upon the question the law was unconstitutional. Then he came here and made this contest in good faith. The district court of the State of Iowa, which is next to the court of last resort in that State, decided against the constitutionality of the law; the supreme court of Pennsylvania decided against the constitutionality of a similar law; the courts of Connecticut decided against the constitutionality of a similar law; and the courts of New Hampshire did the same thing.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to say that the decision to which the gentleman refers as being made by the courts of Pennsylvania has been reversed by the people of Pennsylvania.

Mr. NOBLE. I concede that, but it does not alter the question of the good faith with which this man entered into the contest. I concede that by a change of the judges of the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania that decision was reversed. But it had not been reversed when Mr. Martin came here to make his contest. He came in good faith. He remained here until the 1st day of February, contesting this question. On that day he heard for the first time that the question had been adjudicated in the supreme court of Iowa, the State from which he came; and recognizing that decision as binding upon him, he withdrew his contest for a seat, and merely asked that the committee might report in favor of allowing him compensation up to that time.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to know whether, counting the soldiers' vote, there was any doubt about the majority.

Mr. NOBLE. I think not.

Mr. STEVENS. Then he prosecuted his contest here with the view to deprive the soldiers of their votes. That is the whole of it.

Mr. NOBLE. No, sir; not to deprive the soldiers of their votes. As I have said, the district court in the State of Iowa, presided over by a gentleman who was not a political partisan of Mr. Martin, had decided that the law of Iowa in reference to the soldiers' vote was unconstitutional. I ask, then, whether he had not the right to recognize the decision of that court as correct. He did so. He came here, backed by a judicial decision of the highest tribunal of his own State that had adjudicated the question. He made his contest, backed by that decision. When, however, on an appeal to the supreme court that tribunal reversed the decision previously given by the district court, Mr. Martin, recognizing the binding force of that decision, withdrew his contest.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I would like to make a statement of facts in connection with this case.

Mr. NOBLE. I cannot yield to the gentleman for that purpose. If there is any question which he desires to ask I will endeavor to answer it.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. In order that the facts may be presented to the House I wish to ask this question: was not Mr. GRINNELL elected, counting the soldiers' vote, by a majority of some fourteen hundred?

Mr. NOBLE. I cannot answer as to the number of votes.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. This question of the legality of the soldiers' votes depended, as I understand, upon an act of the Legislature of Iowa.

Mr. NOBLE. I have answered substantially the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] I have said that, counting the soldiers' vote, Mr. GRINNELL was clearly elected. I have said that, not counting the soldiers' vote, cast beyond the territorial limits of the State of Iowa, Mr. Martin was elected by a large majority. I have said also that Mr. Martin founded his contest upon a judicial decision. No judicial tribunal in the United States had decided in favor of a similar law to that the constitutionality of which he disputed. He was backed, not only by the highest judicial decision that had been made in his own State, but by the highest in the State of Pennsylvania, the highest in the State of New Hampshire, and the highest in the State of Connecticut. He came here in good faith and made his contest. But when the supreme court of Iowa reversed the decision that had previously been made he withdrew his contest.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. ASHLEY. I desire to know whether the Committee of Elections have passed upon this claim and recommend its payment.

Mr. NOBLE. I understand that the Committee of Elections are ready to report in favor of the measure.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that the committee are not ready.

Mr. NOBLE. I understand that the Committee of Elections were ready to report on this case if it could have been referred to them before.

Mr. DAWES. There has been no hearing before the committee upon the question of compensation, nor indeed upon the merits of the case; for the contestant withdrew his claim before any action had been taken. There has been no hearing before the committee upon the subject.

Mr. NOBLE. I have spoken to different members of the committee, and they have expressed themselves as ready to hear and report upon the case. But it was never in my power to get the resolution referred to them. Hence they have not reported.

I move the previous question.

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

Mr. NOBLE. I cannot yield.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

On agreeing to the motion there were, on a division—ayes 57, noes 41.

Mr. NOBLE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 67, nays 48, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, English, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Goebel, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Woodbridge—67.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Finck, Ganson, Griswold, Hale, Herrick, Philip Johnson, Kernan, Knapp, Lazear, Long, Marcy, Middleton, William H. Miller, Noble, John O'Neill, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H.

Randall, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Thomas, Townsend, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, and Yeaman—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Bailly, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, William G. Brown, Chanler, Clay, Cravens, Creswell, Dawes, Dawson, Dixon, Dumont, Eldridge, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hooper, Hutchins, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbdeisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Law, Le Blond, Loan, Mallory, McAllister, McBride, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, James R. Morris, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Odell, Pendleton, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Shannon, Starr, Upson, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Worthington—67.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

PUBLIC PRINTING PAPER.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. I move to suspend the reading of the Journal to submit a report from the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. I am directed to report back from the Committee on Printing, House joint resolution No. 174, to amend the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution in relation to the public printing," approved June 23, 1860, with a substitute. The substitute provides that the Superintendent of Public Printing shall be authorized to purchase the paper required for the public printing by accepting the sealed proposals of the lowest bidder or bidders for any specific portion or portions or the whole amount of any particular kind of paper required, for either three months, six months, or one year; the minimum portion to be specified by the Superintendent in his advertisement for proposals, and to be as low as in his judgment will most increase competition and be most advantageous to the United States in all other respects. Further, that the proposals and contracts shall be subject to the conditions and requirements of existing law, and any contractor failing to comply with the terms of his contract under this resolution shall be liable to the same extent and in the same manner as provided in like cases in the resolution hereby amended. And it shall be the duty of the Superintendent to report fully in regard to the proposals and contracts for paper in his annual report to Congress, and also in regard to the proposals and contracts for lithographing and engraving.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask whether that has not already been provided for in the appropriation bill.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. The resolution referred to the committee was introduced by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and the substitute I will say has his approval. I understand that it has not been provided in the appropriation bill. The manufacturers of paper cannot bid for the whole amount, because they cannot manufacture the whole amount, and this enables them to bid for any portion of it. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. A. W. CLARK, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That ten thousand extra copies of the preliminary report, and any further report to be hereafter made by the Joint Committee on Commerce of the Senate and the House, together with all the testimony taken and to be taken, be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. A. W. CLARK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. A. W. CLARK also, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Printing the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That three thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Public Expenditures, together with the accompanying testimony in regard to the New York custom-house, be printed for the use of this House.

Mr. A. W. CLARK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the rules be suspended, in order to allow the Committee of Claims fifteen minutes of the time of the House in order finally to dispose of the business now before that committee.

No objection was made.

COLONEL WILLIAM GATES.

Mr. HOLMAN reported, from the Committee of Claims, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Colonel William Gates, United States Army.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Cobb, one of its clerks, announced to the House that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 774) to establish certain post routes, with sundry amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

LOYAL CITIZENS OF LOUDOUN COUNTY.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution for the relief of loyal citizens of Loudoun county, Virginia.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. WEBSTER. I will make a brief statement of the substance of this joint resolution, so as to take away the necessity of reading it at length.

Mr. PIKE. Let the joint resolution be reported.

The Clerk commenced reading the joint resolution. It directs the Quartermaster General to pay certain sums from any moneys appropriated for the use of the Quartermaster General's department to loyal citizens of Loudoun county, Virginia, named in the joint resolution.

Before the reading of the joint resolution was completed,

Mr. WEBSTER said: The remainder of the joint resolution is taken up with names and sums.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think it better be read, so that we may see how much is asked.

Mr. WEBSTER. The total amount is $60,000. There is no other explanation than that given in the first part of the joint resolution. Then it proposes to give certain sums to A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, and so on, for about two hundred names.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As far as I can understand it, this is one of the most objectionable measures that we could be called upon to pass. I will raise the point of order if it involves an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. It is not an appropriation bill under the rules of the House. It provides for paying certain amounts from moneys appropriated for the use of the Quartermaster General's department.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill appropriates for sundry persons in Loudoun county, Virginia, the proceeds of certain property seized and sold for the benefit of the Government. I do not think there can be any advantage from reading over all these items.

Mr. ASHLEY. When was this property taken?

Mr. WEBSTER. This property was taken under an order of General Sheridan to destroy the forage, barns, and mills in Loudoun county, and to carry off the live stock; which was all done in the course of a few days. This joint resolution does not propose to pay at all for the property destroyed; it does not involve that principle. It proposes to pay over to the loyal citizens—not disloyal citizens; they have been very carefully excluded from this resolution—the money which the Government has received from the sale of the live stock taken from these loyal citizens. This live stock was driven off to York, Pennsylvania, and there sold for the benefit of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Where is there any evidence to show the loyalty of the parties provided for here? And is there not a law of Congress which absolutely confiscates the property of these parties?

Mr. WEBSTER. No, sir; and the evidence upon the desk, which I sent up to the Clerk's desk with the joint resolution, is full upon that point, and shows that these are as truly loyal men as any in the country.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There may be some loyal men there. I am told by a friend near me that a great many of these parties are loyal men. Perhaps they are, and it may be that they should be repaid. But I do not know that there is anything here to show that these people are loyal.

Mr. WEBSTER. The proposition is full and ample, and General Devens, who appointed the commissioners to examine into these matters, certifies to their loyalty.

Mr. ASHLEY. That is all I want.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WEBSTER called the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEBSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HASTINGS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported back a bill (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburgh.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does this bill involve an appropriation?

Mr. HALE. It does not. It has been passed by the Senate three several times.

The bill was then read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HALE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope it will not be seconded. All I want to say is that the case has been here eight or ten years. I recollect hearing a discussion in relation to it in the Senate, in which a Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Cameron, argued that there was no merit in the claim, and he said Congress was not bound to indemnify the party.

The SPEAKER. The fifteen minutes allowed to the committee to report has expired.

Mr. HALE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered. It cannot be acted on now.

CHARLES A. PITCHER.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of Charles A. Pitcher.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill being before the House, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUBSTITUTES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes in the Army or Navy, and to prevent frauds at the District jail in the city of Washington, with leave to report at any time, reported back the same, with an amendment.

The first section of the bill provides that from and after the passage of the act, it shall be unlawful for any person, with knowledge of the fact, to present or offer to any recruiting agent of officer, or to any mustering-in officer in the United States military or naval service, either as a volunteer or as a substitute for any other, any person charged with the commission of any criminal offense, and confined or held on bail for the trial of such offense, within the District of Columbia; and that it shall in like manner be unlawful for any person, in any way or manner, to abet, aid, or assist in procuring the offer or acceptance of any person so charged or held for trial, or released on bail and awaiting trial, either as a volunteer or as a substitute for any person drafted or liable to draft in the military or naval service of the United States, whether the person so drafted or liable to draft shall be a resident of the District of Columbia or shall reside elsewhere; and that any person who shall knowingly offend against the foregoing provisions, or either of such provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof before a court of competent jurisdiction in said District, be punished by a fine of not less than $250 and not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment in the District prison for a term not less than six months nor more than one year.

The second section provides that any officer of the District jail of the District of Columbia, or any guard thereof, or any attaché or employé connected with said jail, who shall demand, or directly or indirectly receive, any compensation, fee, reward, or gratuity for any information given in respect to any prisoner confined therein, or awaiting trial upon bail, or for any service, assistance, or influence rendered, given, or exerted, with any view, intent, or purpose of having such person thus charged or held for trial, or held on bail to await trial, taken, offered, or used either as a volunteer or as a substitute for any other in the military or naval service, or who shall corruptly receive, for any act done by virtue of his office or employment, any fee, compensation, reward, or gratuity, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof in any district court of competent jurisdiction, be punished by a fine of not less than $250, and not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment in the District prison for a term not less than three months nor more than one year.

The third section provides that the act shall take effect immediately.

The amendment reported from the committee, which was to strike out the third section, was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended by inserting after the word "substitutes" the words "or volunteers."

LCRETIA M. PERRY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a joint resolution for the relief of Lucretia M. Perry, widow of Nathaniel H. Perry, late a purser in the United States Navy.

The bill directs that there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,644 90 to Lucretia M. Perry, widow of Nathaniel H. Perry, late a purser in the United States Navy, being for money advanced by her in the settlement of the accounts of her late husband.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This bill was sent to the Committee of Claims, and they unanimously decided in its favor; but having no opportunity to make a report the bill was withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have also unanimously recommended it. If any gentleman desires to know the facts I will have the report read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does this bill make an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then I object to its being considered in the House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to suspend the rules to allow the bill to be considered in the House.

The motion was agreed to, and the rules were suspended.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now I think I can state in a moment what I think will satisfy the House that this is a just claim. [Cries of "Oh, no!" "Oh, no!" on all sides.] Very well; I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY MATTERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs the joint resolution of the House (No. 170) with the Senate amendments, and with an amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs to the Senate amendments. The committee had leave to report at any time. The resolution is a resolution declaring and defining the meaning of the law in relation to officers' servants.

The amendment recommended by the committee to the amendment of the Senate was read.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 697) further to provide for the verification of invoices;

An act (H. R. No. 749) providing for the confinement of juvenile offenders against the laws of the United States in houses of refuge;

An act (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions;

An act (H. R. No. 779) to regulate the taking of depositions in certain cases;

An act (H. R. No. 791) granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor;

An act (H. R. No. 764) to incorporate the Continental Hotel Company of the city of Washington;

An act (H. R. No. 758) amendatory of the acts relative to the Attorney General's office, and to fix the compensation of his assistant and clerks;

An act (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Darling;

An act (H. R. No. 565) granting a pension to Rachel Mills, widow of Peter Mills, deceased, late a major in the United States Army; and

An act (H. R. No. 775) for the relief of the occupants of the lands of the ex-mission of San José, in the State of California.

POST ROUTE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels it his duty to lay before the House the Senate amendments to the post route bill. The Chair has examined the bill and finds that all the amendments are confined to post routes.

The Senate amendments were all concurred in.

CABINET OFFICERS IN CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, in accordance with the order of the House last evening the House will now proceed to the consideration of the bill of the House (No. 214) to provide that the heads of Executive Departments may occupy seats on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PENDLETON and Mr. WILSON addressed the House. [Their remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

The bill was then laid aside informally, according to the previous understanding that no action should be taken upon it.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 707) to provide for the publication of the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following communication from the President, with the accompanying document:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1865.

Sir: I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of War, which, with my permission, has been delayed until the present time, to enable the Lieutenant General to furnish his report.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ANCONA. I move that the usual number of extra copies of the message and accompanying document be printed for the use of this House.

The motion went to the Committee on Printing, under the law.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting a statement of the number of clerks, &c., employed in that Department.

Laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF GENERAL McCLELLAN.

Mr. COX. At the request of several officers of the army of the Potomac, I desire to call up a resolution in regard to the printing of the supplemental report of Major General George B. McClellan as to the artillery service.

No objection being made, the resolution was taken up and read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, if not incompatible with the public service, communicate to this House the supplemental report of Major General George B. McClellan, as to the organization and operations of the army of the Potomac, and having special reference to the organization and operations of the artillery service.

The resolution was adopted.

MILITARY MATTERS.

The SPEAKER, when the hour of one o'clock arrived to-day, fixed for the consideration of the special order, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] had the floor upon the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants, with an amendment of the Senate, and amendments to the amendment, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman can move his amendment when we reach that portion of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution now before the House is an illustration of how a small ball in the beginning, rolling back and forth between the two Houses, may at length acquire formidable dimensions. Here was a joint resolution which passed this House regulating the pay of officers' servants, and declaring what the law is, and how it is to be construed in relation to that matter. The joint resolution went to the Senate, and the Senate, despairing of getting through certain measures between the two Houses, during this session, ingrafted upon this joint resolution, as a substitute for the one single section contained therein, an amendment embracing thirteen sections upon a variety of subjects. Those amendments of the Senate have been before the Committee on Military Affairs, have been scrutinized, and I now propose to explain the conclusions of the committee thereon.

As the first amendment of their substitute, the Senate adopt the very joint resolution which we sent to them. It has already been agreed to by the House, and it is unnecessary therefore for me to comment upon that.

In the second section of their amendment the Senate propose that non-commissioned officers and privates in the volunteer service of the United States shall receive the same amount of clothing as non-commissioned officers and privates of the same arm of the regular Army. That section embraces a proposition which I submitted last night as an amendment to an appropriation bill, and which was received favorably by the House. Therefore there can be no objection to having that incorporated in a general military bill.

The third section provides for the distribution of bounty to the children of soldiers who have been killed, to the mother of the soldier, to the father, to the brother, in succession, according to the principles of law. It is merely declaratory of the general law upon this subject. It is precisely what has been recommended in regard to this subject by both the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Military Affairs. I therefore need make no comment upon that provision.

Another section provides for an amendment of the law in this respect: under the provision for soldiers killed or wounded in battle, granting pensions, it has been decided that the words "in battle" do not apply to soldiers killed or wounded on picket duty, or in skirmishing, or when otherwise engaged in the ordinary line of duty as soldiers. This amendment provides that they shall be entitled to the same pension if wounded, or their heirs to obtain the same bounty if they are killed, although not killed or wounded in actual battle. I suppose nobody will object to that.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I would ask whether that amendment covers in its provisions persons in the Navy as well as in the Army? In a bill which was passed by the House some months ago the law regulating pensions was confined to persons in the military service, and those in the naval service were omitted.

Mr. SCHENCK. This is purely a military bill. I have not sought to cross the line into the domain of the gentleman [Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts] who represents the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The fifth section of the amendment of the Senate is of this character: this House and Congress at a former session passed a law that we thought to be sufficient to put upon the same footing, as to pay and allowance of bounty, the colored troops with the white troops. It seems, however, that a construction has been placed upon that provision which excludes from the operation of that law the troops in South Carolina called into the service of the Government by the general commanding. This amendment proposes to place them upon the same footing with the other troops. I am very sure that will not be objected to by anybody.

The sixth section provides for authorizing the President to enlist and organize out of the troops in the service six regiments of volunteer engineers. This corresponds with the action of the House at the last session on the bill which failed in the Senate. That, however, provided for ten and this provides for only six regiments. I presume there will be no objection to that section.

The seventh section, following out the same idea, provides for the present volunteer regiment, consisting of two companies less than the rule of organization would give them.

The eighth section is one which provides against an abuse said to prevail in the Army by keeping up by appointment of officers a greater number than is necessary for regiments reduced below the minimum number. That is only in aid of the existing law.

Then follow the ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth sections of the Senate amendment. These sections are so arranged as to confuse the matter, I think, and we propose to strike them out, although we restore them in a rearranged order.

I turn now to the House amendments. The first is the adoption of one of the Senate sections, only reversing it in its meaning. The Senate have passed a very ingenious section that the officers by brevet in the regular Army shall receive the same pay and allowances as brevet officers of the same rank in the volunteer service, and no more. What is that? Just nothing at all.

This question was before the House on a former occasion on the report of a committee of conference. There had crept into an appropriation bill or a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary a provision that brevet officers of the regular and volunteer Army should neither of them receive the pay, even when performing the duties, of the brevet rank of regular assignment. The House decided, after full discussion of the subject, not to sustain the report. We reverse the matter; instead of bringing the officers of the regular Army down to the volunteers, and depriving both of brevet pay, we lift the volunteer officers up to the regular Army officers, as the law in reference to the latter has existed since 1818, giving them brevet pay when performing the duty. We dispose of the whole matter, adopting the principle that brevet rank may carry along with it pay, but only in such cases where by special order an officer is assigned to a command corresponding with the brevet rank, and under that order is actually performing the duties. This being consistent with the former action of the House, I presume it will be agreed to.

Section ten is a provision on which there has been some question. It is a provision from the Military Committee, but one of the sections stricken out in order to be rearranged. It provides that whenever the head of any bureau in the War Department accepts any promotion or appointment to a higher rank, whether absolute or by brevet, than is appointed by law for the head of such bureau, then and in that case he shall be deemed as having vacated the position of head of such bureau, and shall be subject to detail for field or other duty as other officers. Inasmuch as the law has fixed the rank of those who are appointed to the head of the ordnance department, of the subsistence department, of the quartermaster's department, and so on, this provides that if they accept higher rank they shall vacate those positions and be liable to field and other duty corresponding with their new rank. My own opinion is it is a wholesome provision; that the Senate did well in calling the attention of Congress to a proposition of that kind, and in embodying it in a bill. The objection made to it is that it takes by surprise one particular officer. General Meigs, the head of the quartermaster's department, is brigadier general as chief of that department, but he has been brevetted as major general. This would vacate his office as brigadier general, if he had to leave the department, as he only holds that as chief of the department. It would subject him to be ordered to the field, or to other duties such as the necessities of the service or the opinion of his superior officer might require. The objection is that the provision is retroactive on that officer and takes him by surprise. As there has been some feeling manifested since the committee of the Senate acted upon the subject, and since the matter has been referred to the House Committee on Military Affairs, who have agreed to that proposition of the Senate, before I call the previous question I propose to permit any gentleman who desires to do so to move to strike out that provision.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will move to strike out the twelfth section of the Senate bill, which contains the provision referred to.

Mr. SCHENCK. That motion may be considered as made, and gentlemen may have a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be reserved, and a vote taken on it at the proper time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I decline to yield for that purpose.

Mr. PIKE. I want to appeal to the gentleman in reference to one of the amendments of the Senate, which cannot be approved by him.

Mr. SCHENCK. Not at present. This brings me now to the next section proposed by the committee, and that is, that the President be authorized to transfer officers of the Army of the United States from the line to the general staff, and from the general staff to the line; or from one staff corps of the general staff to another and different staff corps; or from one arm of the service to another; or from the volunteer service to the regular Army, but upon condition that the officer, on being so transferred, shall only take such rank in the staff or corps in which he is placed as he held by commission in the staff or line before transfer.

Now, if this section is permitted to remain in the bill it will provide, perhaps, for this very case of General Meigs; because, although he might be required to leave the War Department if he holds on to this appointment as brevet major general, yet he would have the right to claim to be transferred from the staff to the line, or from one arm of the service to another, retaining the rank from which he is transferred.

This provision in reference to authorizing transfers to be made by the President is held to be a wholesome one. In proof that the House agree with me in that, I refer to the fact that the House has already incorporated in a bill which it has sent to the Senate a provision precisely like this. The difficulty with that, however, is that the Senate not yet having acted on it, it is likely to fail. And hence it was introduced here. It is a section intended to enable the War Department to infuse new life into some of the bureaus of that Department. Gentlemen all know that there are men there who have been, as I have often had occasion to remark, so long in port that barnacles have formed upon them—officers who are moss-grown—and it is deemed absolutely essential to lodge the power somewhere to transfer from a bureau to the field, or from the field to a bureau, or from the Engineer corps to another corps, according as it is found that one officer is better qualified for one or another duty in a different arm of the service.

The Secretary of War, in corroboration of the propriety of passing some measure of this kind, remarked to me that it so happened that if he wanted to put General Grant himself at the head of the Military Academy he could not do it. Why? Because it is one of those close corporations by which it is understood that the West Point Academy belongs to the engineer department, and that he could not put anybody there who did not belong to the Engineer corps. I only refer to this by way of illustrating the propriety of giving the power of making these transfers, in order thereby to increase the efficiency of all arms of the service.

The next is a provision in regard to double rations. That provision has also been passed upon by the House. It was added as an amendment to an appropriation bill last evening, and I can explain it in a few words. It is not to pass any new law, but to declare what the law is. The law, since 1842, has confined the privilege of these increased rations to the commanders of military departments. It has been properly construed that the commander of a division, embracing several military departments, ought to have at least as much as his subordinates, and that we give to the commander of armies actually in the field. We merely repeat the language of 1842 and say that it is intended that these persons shall have these double rations, and that any general order that may have been made in favor of staff officers, or any one else other than those provided for by law, is illegal and void.

This matter was brought to the attention of the committee by the fact that we had referred to us an answer to a resolution showing that General Halleck had been drawing double rations since he was made chief of staff of General Grant, by order of the War Department. Since then he has been receiving double rations, as we think under a misapprehension of the law, and in violation of the provisions of the law itself. A staff officer has no command. Here, then, is an officer having no command pronounced by special order to be entitled to these double rations. The effect is, that in addition to commutation for fuel and quarters here in the city of Washington, General Halleck, who has no command, is drawing $2,196 more than General Sherman, who commands the army in South Carolina. I should be very glad if all these officers were more liberally paid than they are now; but surely it is proper that we should not permit a construction to be put upon a law that it does not bear, and that, indeed, is directly contrary to the very letter of it.

The next section proposed by the committee is that the bounty to the heirs of volunteers called into the military service shall be extended to all volunteers, whether they enlisted for three years, two, or one. It does not provide for pensions where persons are merely wounded or disabled by sickness, but where a man has been actually killed in the service before his time has expired, extends the same bounty to his surviving heirs as if he had enlisted for a longer period.

The remaining provisions of the amendment are in substance the bill in relation to enrollment which has been passed upon by the House, and which has gone to the Senate. We are informed by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate that it is not likely to be reached and acted upon there.

We have therefore gone over the various sections of that bill and made two or three amendments, which the committee of the Senate insisted on, and which have already been passed upon by the Senate more than once. We have also added some new sections to the bill, which have already passed the House.

Mr. THAYER. What is the nature of those two new sections?

Mr. SCHENCK. I am just about to tell the gentleman. The first provides that where any revised enrollment in any congressional or enrollment district has been obtained or made prior to any actual drawing of names the quota of such district shall be proportioned to such revision instead of being based on the enrollment made before revision. That is one of the provisions on which the Senate insists. The next section is that no person owing military service shall be exempt from liability to perform the same on account of furnishing a substitute for the Navy unless the substitute is presented in person to the board of enrollment by which the principal is enrolled, and is accepted by the said board of enrollment. That is, I believe, the section to which my friend from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] objects; and it may be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. PIKE. The whole effect of it is to give a monopoly to the large cities on the sea-coast.

Mr. SCHENCK. The next section is, that hereafter no officer in the military or naval service of the United States shall be dismissed except on the finding of a court-martial convened according to law; and it repeals section seventeen of an act entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1862. My colleague, to whom this section was particularly referred, [Mr. GARFIELD], desires to explain it, and I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. The section which we propose to repeal is the seventeenth section of the act of July 17, 1862. It was enacted by the last Congress in consequence of the number of traitors who were in the Army at the beginning of the war. The President was empowered and requested to dismiss such officers without the intervention of a court-martial. It was an act demanded by public necessity, though in opposition to immemorial usage and military laws. The necessity for it has manifestly ceased to exist to any considerable extent. I desire to make a brief statement of the history of congressional legislation on this subject, and state the main considerations for and against the proposed measure. I do this in view of a doctrine lately announced in a pamphlet published by the Bureau of Military Justice, entitled "A Digest of the Opinions of the Judge Advocate General of the Army," and which I cannot but regard a novel and dangerous one. This doctrine has assumed an official form, and is stated on the 45th page of the pamphlet referred to under the head of "summary dismissal," as follows:

"From the foundation of the Government the President has been in the habit of summarily dismissing officers in the land and naval service. The power to do so seems to inhere in him under the Constitution, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy." * * * "The power of summary dismissal by the President does not depend for its authority upon the act of Congress, (section 17, chapter 200, act of July 17, 1862), the act being simply declaratory of the right which has been exercised by the President since the earliest history of the Government."

In the examination of this subject I shall notice some of the safeguards that have been thrown round the officer and the private soldier to protect him from arbitrary and illegal treatment.

1. September 20, 1776.

1. Trials to be held between eight, a. m. and three, p. m. (Art. 7.)

2. No sentence of a general court-martial shall be put in execution till after report shall be made of the whole proceeding to Congress, or to the General or Commander-in-Chief of the forces of the United States, and their or his direction be signified thereon. (Mil. Laws, 1863, sec. 14, art. 8, page 73.)

3. No commissioned officer shall be cashiered or dismissed from the service except by an order from Congress or the sentence of a general court-martial. (Ib., art. 13.)

4. No officer or soldier who shall be put in arrest or imprisonment, shall continue in his confinement more than eight days, or till such time as a court-martial can be conveniently assembled. (Ib., art. 16.)

5. Every officer to whom prisoners shall be committed, shall report in twenty-four hours the names and crimes of officers imprisoned, on pain of court-martial.

6. Any officer or soldier who thinks himself wronged by commanding officer may complain, first to commanding officer, second, commanding general, third, Congress.

II. The above law was modified, but not essentially changed, by resolutions of Congress of May 27, and June 18, 1777.

III. May 31, 1786.

1. No officer shall be tried but by a general court-martial, nor by officers of inferior rank if it can be avoided. (Art. 11, p. 80.)

2. No change in the law of arrest or dismissal. (Art. 13-16, p. 80-1.)

3. Here, as before, revising officer can mitigate but not aggravate a sentence; for example, General Hull, doomed to die, was only dismissed.

IV. April 16, 1806.

1. Articles of War were established, borrowed mainly from British military law. They are still in force, and contain the same provisions concerning arrest and dismissal as were laid down in former acts. (Art. 75-9, p. 189.)

V. January 31, 1823.

1. President of the United States was authorized to dismiss a military officer for embezzlement of public funds. (Sec. 4, p. 316.)

VI. July 17, 1862.

1. An officer arrested shall be furnished with charges within eight days, and ten days thereafter shall be tried, unless necessities of service prevent; and thirty days thereafter shall be tried or arrest shall cease. If charges are not furnished within eight days, arrest shall cease. (Sec. 11, p. 527-8) By section seventeen of the same act the President may dismiss officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine corps for good of public service. This was the first instance in our legislative history in which this general power was vested in the President. It was done for the special purpose of ridding the Army of traitors and sympathizers with rebellion. The power of the President to remove officers appointed by him and the Senate was fully discussed and settled affirmatively by First Congress, in 1789, only so far as it related to heads of Departments.

That power has always been considered a dangerous one. (See Federalist, No. 77, also Cong. Deb., 1789, quoted by DeHart, p. 229.)

2. No sufficient reason appears why this power should apply to military officers, because it does to heads of Departments, who are the personal staff of the President.

3. This power has never been judicially recognized. (Kent's Com., vol. 1, p. 290.)

4. President Adams, in 1828, practically admitted he could not dismiss military officers without trial; other Presidents have thus dismissed; but prior to 1861 have always, on request, restored the officer for sake of trial, when trial was asked for.

5. The Constitution provides that "the Congress shall have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." This power was exercised fully, April 16, 1806, when Congress enacted "Rules and Articles of War." These define every act which Congress considered a military offense, and prescribe punishment therefor by military courts. Congress for the first time in 1823 authorized the President to dismiss an officer for one class of crimes, and only one, without trial.

6. Prior to July 17, 1862, writers on military law recognized but three ways by which an officer could be discharged, namely, by resignation, by being honorably mustered out, by being dismissed in accordance with the sentence of a court-martial.

The words used in officers' commissions, "during the pleasure of the President," have been taken as a proof of the President's power to dismiss the holder of the commission without trial. The form of commission is borrowed from the British form, and was first introduced into this country June 17, 1775, by a committee of the Revolutionary Congress, who presented a draft of commission for General Washington. The form adopted was in these words, "during the pleasure of the Continental Congress." There has never been a word of legislation on the subject since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. The only change made was to insert the word "President" in place of the words "Continental Congress." The form of commission, therefore, not being a matter of law, has no force or significance in relation to the power of dismissal. Not only the practice of our own Government, but the opinions of the most eminent publicists, are strongly in favor of guarding with the utmost care the rights and reputation of officers in the Army and Navy. The old law maxim is most wise and just: "Miseria est servitus ubi jus est aut vagum aut incognitum."

Vattel says:

"The Government [with us the legislative department] ought precisely to determine the functions, duties, and rights of military men—soldiers, officers, chiefs of corps, generals."

If it be a sacred right of the citizen to be secure from punishment or disgrace by any officer of the Government without a trial in accordance with the laws of his country, it is a no less sacred right of the soldier that he shall be secure from a like evil except in accordance with the laws of war. Nothing but the overmastering necessity for the most summary measures to purify the Army from traitors for the salvation of the Republic could have justified the last Congress in conferring upon the President the power of summary dismissal. Under the supreme right of self-preservation they were no doubt justified; and in illustration of the urgency of the case attention is directed to the unusual language of the law of July 17, 1862:

"That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and requested to dismiss and discharge from the military service," &c.

The dangers of 1861 and 1862 are now passed; the Congress and the people can trust both the Army and the Navy; and it is high time that the old safeguard around the American soldier should be restored.

The section now proposed was passed by the House last winter, almost unanimously, but met its fate in the Senate, after being referred to the War Department and returned with an elaborate argument against it, prepared by the Judge Advocate General of the Army. The main feature of the bill against which that officer's arguments were directed was that which allowed all officers summarily dismissed a trial, and, if acquitted, a restoration to the service. There are two singular statements in the Judge Advocate's paper to which I will refer. They were not made in immediate connection, but effectually answer each other, namely:

"The number of dismissals which have taken place since the beginning of the war is not large, all the circumstances of the service considered."

Toward the close of his paper, in summing up the objections to the bill, he says:

"The Government could not investigate through courts-martial the hundreds of cases which this bill would bring up for trial without such a draft upon the officers of the Army needed for active field service as must greatly impair the efficiency of the campaign now about to open in every part of the theater of war."

It is notorious that the number of summary dismissals has been very great, and is increasing. The files of general orders of the Army of the Cumberland show that in the space of ten months of the year 1863 one hundred and thirty commissioned officers of the Army were dismissed without trial by authority granted to its commander by the President. Such was the extent of the practice in a small segment of our Army, and there is no evidence that it is becoming any less. I believe, sir, the passage of this section will be hailed by the Army as a measure to protect them against the thousand intrigues which may so easily be conducted, under the forms of military administration, by an officer against his subordinate, and which may result in fixing an indelible stain upon the name and honor of a brave and worthy man. These dismissals are made, in the great majority of cases, on the recommendation of officers subordinate to the officer exercising dismissing power, and in almost every instance the dismissed party, no matter how guilty, is able to awaken sympathy in his favor from the fact that his case has been decided on ex parte statements.

In the suggestions I have cast no reflections upon the President or any of his military subordinates. Congress has authorized and requested him to use this summary power. The responsibility is here with us. The great purpose of this grant of power has been accomplished. To continue it longer is to undermine the independence and manliness of the officers of our Army and Navy. We should give them the strong assurance of law that they shall be heard when assailed—that their position in the service of the Republic is based, not on the caprice of any man, but on the enduring foundation of law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now come, Mr. Speaker, to the further sections just adopted for the bill as it passed this House. We have given up to the Senate one of the sections, which is section two of the bill as it passed the House, for the mustering out of persons enlisted for the unexpired term of regiments. We found that there was an impossibility of agreement between the Senate and House on this subject. It has been, in fact, something like a preliminary committee of conference. The Committee on Military Affairs was very reluctant to yield and leave that off the amendments proposed to the bill. We did not do so until we found that there was no possibility of passing it, and until we found that the Senate was so impressed by the representations made by the War Department, as to the injury that this would inflict on the Army, that we consented to yield the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Ohio will allow me this single suggestion. The House is pretty unanimous in favor of the section. I trust the gentleman will allow it to be offered as an amendment so that it may go to a committee of conference.

Mr. SCHENCK. If it be the pleasure of the House I will give the gentleman from Indiana that opportunity.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in every case where any regiment, battalion, or company has been mustered out of the service of the United States by reason of the expiration of the term for which such organization had been accepted, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause immediately to be mustered out all those non-commissioned officers and privates who, during the years 1862 and 1863 were enlisted with the assurance and understanding that they were to serve only for the unexpired term of any such organization; and in cases where regiments, battalions, and companies have not yet been mustered out, then such non-commissioned officers and privates as are above described he shall cause to be mustered out whenever the term of such organization shall expire: Provided, That before any such enlisted man is mustered out he shall sign a statement under oath that he enlisted with the distinct assurance and understanding that he engaged to serve only for the unexpired term of the organization into which he was mustered, such statement to be verified by the recruiting officer by whom he was enlisted, or by some commissioned officer having actual and personal knowledge of the facts in the case.

Mr. SCHENCK. The House was unanimous on this subject in favor of the measure; and the Senate was about as unanimous against it. We have left out the sixth and seventh sections. One of them concludes the Government, no matter what may be the fraud in any case, where a substitute is received and mustered in. The provision is retained, however, that if the principal himself has been a party to any fraud practiced on the Government he shall be held responsible. That was a matter of discussion here the other day.

The Senate also insisted upon our leaving out the provision allowing to provost marshals commutation for quarters and fuel, and their actual expenses for stationery, office rent, &c. That, however, the committee were not willing to yield. They have, however, given up the ninth section, a provision that there shall be appointed for each of the States an assistant provost marshal general, with the rank of lieutenant colonel. With these exceptions the whole bill is precisely the enrollment bill as it passed this House.

In reference to the bill relative to officers' servants, which has grown to such formidable size, embracing now thirty-three sections, we have thought it appropriate to recommend a change of the title, so as to call it "An act in relation to various military matters, and to amend the law for enrolling and calling out the national forces."

Mr. ODELL. I desire to make an explanation in vindication of myself, in view of the statement of the chairman of the Military Committee with reference to the twelfth section. I understood that gentleman to say that the committee had agreed to that section.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do say so.

Mr. ODELL. I do not propose to gainsay that; but I will simply say that some members of the committee acted under a misapprehension.

Mr. SCHENCK. I believe the gentleman was not present when the committee acted on the subject.

Mr. ODELL. Yes, sir, I was. I do not gainsay what the gentleman has said; I simply say that I did not understand the effect of the provision.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have said that since the committee made their decision such representations have been made in regard to the purpose and effect of that provision as place the question in a different light.

Mr. ODELL. I did not understand that this provision struck at a particular officer, and one of merit.

Mr. SCHENCK. Nor did I; nor do I now know that it does. But it seems to have that effect.

Mr. ODELL. I refer to General Meigs, the head of the quartermaster's department, to whom the country is much indebted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to explain the reason of the motion which I made to strike out the twelfth section, which has been inserted by the Senate. That section provides that any head of a bureau of the War Department who shall receive a rank greater than that prescribed for the head of that bureau shall vacate his position as the head of that bureau. I do not know any officer whom this will strike except General Meigs, the very worthy head of the Quartermaster's Bureau. He has been brevetted a major general. The law prescribes that the head of that bureau shall be a brigadier general. Last summer, when this city was menaced by the rebels, General Meigs organized from the quartermaster's department some three thousand troops, and took them out into the trenches in defense of Washington. While thus engaged he received this brevet of major general. It was very well earned and very appropriately conferred. The effect of this twelfth section would be to turn General Meigs out of the quartermaster's department and assign him to some other duty. I think that this sort of personal legislation ought not to be indulged in. I have therefore moved to strike out that section. I think that the country cannot afford at the present time to dispense with the valuable services of the present head of the quartermaster's department. I hope, therefore, that the House will strike out this amendment of the Senate, and leave General Meigs where he is.

Mr. SCHENCK demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The motion of Mr. FARNSWORTH to strike out the twelfth section was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 739) regulating the fees of custom-house officers on the northern, north-eastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 780) to extend the provisions of the first section of an act for the government of persons engaged in certain fisheries, approved June 19, 1813;

An act (H. R. No. 775) for the relief of the occupants of the lands of the ex-mission of San José, in the State of California;

An act (H. R. No. 745) granting land to the State of Michigan to aid in building a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior;

An act (H. R. No. 459) to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory; and

An act (H. R. No. 485) for the relief of the trustees of the mission church of the Wyandotte Indians.

Also, that the Senate had passed an act (H. R. No. 774) to establish certain post roads, with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which they requested the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 43) to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill H. R. No. 682, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaties with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1866.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 764) to incorporate the Continental Hotel Company of the city of Washington;

An act (H. R. No. 779) to regulate the taking of depositions in certain cases;

An act (H. R. No. 758) amendatory of the acts relative to the Attorney General's office, and to fix the compensation of his assistant and clerks;

An act (H. R. No. 756) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions;

An act (H. R. No. 775) for the relief of the occupants of the lands of the ex-mission of San José, in the State of California;

An act (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Darling;

An act (H. R. No. 565) for the relief of Rachel Mills;

An act (H. R. No. 791) granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor;

An act (H. R. No. 697) further to provide for the verification of invoices; and

An act (H. R. No. 749) providing for the confinement of juvenile offenders against the laws of the United States in houses of refuge.

MILITARY MATTERS—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of joint resolution H. R. No. 170, declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants.

The next question was on the motion to strike out the sixteenth section.

Mr. PIKE. I do not propose to discuss this question. The Committee on Military Affairs agree with me that this section is unjust to districts remote from the seaboard, and that its whole effect is to benefit a few seaport towns where the sailors congregate.

The motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, to amend the amendment of the Senate by adding a new section.

Mr. HOLMAN. This question is one of great public importance, and therefore, for the purpose of indicating the sentiment of the House on the subject, I desire to call the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust the gentleman will not do that. The House has never even divided on the question. It is nearly unanimous.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the yeas and nays will be taken. It will consume but a few moments.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 31, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Arnold, Ashtley, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Law, Lazear, Loan, Marcy, McAllister, McClurg, Middleton, William H. Miller, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Perry, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyt, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Scott, Smith, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Townsend, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yeaman—91.

NAYS—Messrs. John D. Baldwin, Boutwell, Brandegee, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Driggs, Gooch, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Marvin, McBride, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spaulding, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Williams, and Wilder—31.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Anderson, Blaine, Blair, William G. Brown, Chanler, Clay, Creswell, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, English, Farnsworth, Frank, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Herrick, Jenckes, William Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knapp, Knox, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Long, Longear, Mallory, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Starr, Sweat, Thomas, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Windom, Winfield, and Benjamin Wood—60.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 780) to extend the provisions of the first section of an act for the government of persons in certain fisheries, approved June 19, 1813;

An act (H. R. No. 745) granting land to the State of Michigan to aid in building a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior;

An act (H. R. No. 567) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Leppien;

An act (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Thomas Bootle; and

An act (H. R. No. 605) to increase the pay of midshipmen and others.

MILITARY MATTERS—AGAIN.

The question then recurred on Mr. THAYER's motion to strike out the following:

That in every case where a substitute is furnished to take the place of an enrolled or drafted man, and it is shown by evidence that shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of War that such substitute was, at the time of his enlistment, known by the party furnishing him to be non compos mentis or in a condition of intoxication, or under conviction or indictment for any offense of the grade of felony at the common law, or to have been guilty of a previous act of desertion unsatisfied by pardon or punishment, or, by reason of any existing infirmity or ailment, physically incapable of performing the ordinary duties of a soldier in actual service in the ranks, or minor between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years, without the consent of his parent or guardian, or a minor under the age of sixteen years, it shall be the duty of the Provost Marshal General, on advice of the fact, to report the same to the provost marshal of the proper district; and if such person so enlisted and incapable shall have been, since the passage of this act, mustered into the service as a substitute for a person liable to draft and not actually drafted, the name of the person so liable who furnished such substitute shall be again placed on the list, and he shall be subject to draft thereafter as though no such substitute had been furnished by him; and if such substitute so enlisted and incapable as aforesaid shall have been, since the passage of this act, mustered into the service as a substitute for a person actually drafted, then it shall be the duty of the Provost Marshal General to direct the provost marshal of the district immediately to notify the person who furnished such substitute that he is held to service in the place of such substitute, and he shall stand in the same relation and be subject to the same liability as before the furnishing of such substitute: Provided, That no such decision shall be made by the Secretary of War unless made on notice to the party within thirty days after the substitute shall have been mustered into service.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 70, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Beaman, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Long, Marcy, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, Pruyt, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Shannon, John B. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Thomas, Townsend, Tracy, Webster, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Yeaman—58.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Ashtley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eliot, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, King, Littlejohn, Loan, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Smith, Spaulding, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Arnold, Baily, Blair, Bliss, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Harrington, William Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Longear, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Daniel Morris, Nelson, Noble, Patterson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Smithers, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweet, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—54.

So the section was not stricken out.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the vote by which the House refused to strike out the section be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurring on the substitute proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs to three sections of the Senate amendment, as before explained, it was put, and the substitute was adopted.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the vote by which the amendment as amended was adopted be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DUTIES ON FOREIGN IMPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senate has returned to the House the bill of the House (No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties on foreign imports, with amendments.

I move that the House non-concur in all the Senate amendments, and ask a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. STEVENS, Mr. COX, and Mr. GRISWOLD, as such committee on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 739) to regulate the fees of custom-house officers on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. SCHENCK. The committee of conference on the bill of the House to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to the two Houses a bill as a substitute for that which was referred to them. The report has already been acted on in the Senate and agreed to by that body. I ask that the report be read, and upon its adoption I demand the previous question.

The report was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. It is that the report does not come within the scope of the conference committee. It does not report the proceedings of the Senate, or an agreement by the committee on an amendment to the Senate's amendment to the House bill, but it reports an entire substitute for both the original bill and the substitute adopted by the Senate, and it establishes a department unprovided for by either of the other bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language, or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the conference committee, and they can take either one of them, or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. BROOKS. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 89, nays 35, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Cox, Henry Winter

Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Driggs, Eckley, Elliot, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Hale, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knapp, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Spaulding, Stevens, Strouse, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—89.

NAYS—Messrs. Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Brooks, Coffroth, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Harding, Herrick, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Marcy, Middleton, William H. Miller, Nelson, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Rogers, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Townsend, Chilton A. White, Winfield, and Yeaman—35.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Blair, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Cravens, Creswell, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hutchins, William Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knox, Law, Lazear, Long, Mallory, McAllister, McBride, McDowell, McIntoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Morrison, Noble, Odell, Patterson, Price, Radford, Robinson, J. Randall, Robinson, Smith, Smithers, Starr, William G. Steele, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—58.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SCHENCK. From the reading of the report, I apprehend that the House understand what it is. I therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. COX. I move to lay the report on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 52, nays 77, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Bliss, Brooks, Coffroth, Cox, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Long, Marey, McAllister, McKinney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Voorhees, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, and Yeaman—52.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Elliot, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Spaulding, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—77.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Boyd, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Cravens, Creswell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Hooper, Hutchins, Jenckes, William Johnson, Julian, King, Lazear, Mallory, McDowell, McIntoe, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, Noble, Perry, Pomeroy, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Smith, Smithers, Starr, William G. Steele, Stevens, Sweet, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Worthington—53.

So the House refused to lay the report of the conference committee on the table.

The question recurring on agreeing to the report, and it was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

USE OF THE HALL.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Whereas, there are many thousands of our soldiers in the hospitals in and around the city of Washington who have faced the enemy of our common country on many hard-fought battle-fields, and who are now recruiting their health from sickness and from wounds; and whereas, during their sojourn here for the purpose before indicated, they have, in order to protect themselves from the common foe of humanity, and particularly of the Army, associated themselves together in a total abstinence organization called Sons of Temperance; and whereas, these soldiers and others, thus organized, desire to hold a public meeting for the encouragement of their members and the advancement of their cause: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Hall of the House of Representatives be, and the same is hereby, granted to said organization for a public meeting on the evening of Tuesday, the 7th instant.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The House has adopted a resolution that this Hall shall not be used for the purpose of any public meeting during the recess.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I object to the resolution.

Mr. PRICE. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to offer the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The House made an order, and reconsidered and laid it on the table, that the Hall should not be used for any such purpose during the recess.

The rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

PUBLIC COAL LANDS.

Mr. HIGBY, from the Committee on Public Lands, asked leave to report back an act (S. No. 380) supplemental to the act approved 1st July, 1864, for the disposition of coal lands and of town property on the public domain.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN objected.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to suspend the rules, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

QUARTERMASTERS' CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting an abstract of certain contracts made by the quartermaster's department; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Mr. SWEAT. I move to postpone all special orders, and that the House proceed to the consideration of unfinished business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. COX. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 37, nays 89, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, Boyd, Brandegee, Cox, Dawson, Edgerton, Eldridge, Griswold, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Kalbfleisch, Knapp, Law, LeBlond, Marey, Marvin, McKinney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Pendleton, Perry, Alexander H. Rice, Ross, Scott, Sweet, Thomas, Townsend, Voorhees, Webster, Winfield, John, and Yeaman—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Broomall, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Elliot, Farnsworth, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Knox, Lazear, Littlejohn, Loan, Long, Longyear, McBride, McClurg, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Sloan, Stevens, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—89.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Boutwell, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Gooch, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Holman, Hooper, Ingersoll, Jenckes, William Johnson, Julian, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McIntoe, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Price, Radford, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Shannon, Smith, Smithers, Spaulding, Starr, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Upson, Wadsworth, Ward, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—56.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

The hour of half past four o'clock, p. m., having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock, p. m.

PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote in relation to Senate bill No. 382, to provide for the better organization of the Navy.

I will state that I propose to move to strike out the objectionable portions of the bill; in other words, all after the second section.

The question was taken; and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now move to strike out all after the second section of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 30, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RICE, of Massachusetts, and Dawson, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 36; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 55, nays 42, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Ashley, Beaman, Blaine, Boyd, Cobb, Cole, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, English, Finck, Ganson, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Le Blond, Loan, Long, McClurg, Middleton, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Pendleton, Perham, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Stiles, Strouse, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Wilson, and Winfield—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Dawes, Deming, Driggs, Eliot, Garfield, Grinnell, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Law, Longyear, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, Amos Myers, Charles O'Neill, Pike, Alexander H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Spalding, John B. Steele, Thayer, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburn, Wilder, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Arnold, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanter, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Frank, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Hooper, Hubbard, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, King, Knapp, Knox, Lazear, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Patterson, Perry, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Radford, John H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, Starr, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweet, Townsend, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Chilton A. White, Williams, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—85.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COINAGE OF THREE-CENT PIECES.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on a Uniform System of Coinage and Weights and Measures, reported a bill to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 774) to establish certain post roads;

An act (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution in relation to the public printing," approved June 23, 1860.

CHARLES F. ANDERSON.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of bill of the Senate No. 307, for the relief of Charles F. Anderson. I will state that the bill has twice passed the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the report in the case will be read, and that the right to reject be reserved until it is read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to the bill.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 37, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGERSOLL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. INGERSOLL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL, and STEELE of New York, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 41.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

E. WOODWARD AND G. CHORPENNING.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for leave to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs a joint resolution for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpenning, of Pennsylvania, against which I think nothing can be said, while if Congress will pass it will save the parties from absolute want.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. NELSON. There is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I reserve the right to object until it is read.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to state the foundation of this claim reported from the Indian Committee. It will take less time than the reading of the report.

No objection was made.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, Messrs. Chorpenning & Woodward were contractors for carrying the mails from Salt Lake City to California; they were the pioneers on that route. It is provided by an act of Congress that men within the Indian Territory, suffering damage in consequence of hostile acts of the Indians, and losing property by the Indians, if they do not take vengeance in their own hands, but as quiet citizens pursue the line of their duty and nothing more, then the United States Government will guaranty and protect them against loss.

These men sent out their teams, and in a number of instances every person that accompanied the trains were killed. Determined as these men seemed to be at all times to execute their contracts, Mr. Woodward set out in person with the train to carry the mail from Salt Lake City to California. The train was again attacked by the Indians, and every one was sacrificed in the performance of their duty except Mr. Woodward, who was severely, and, as it proved, fatally wounded. Mr. Woodward, wounded as he was, rode one hundred and fifty miles, when, faint and weak, and no longer able to continue his way, he tied his mule and lay down to rest, and that was his final rest upon this earth.

This bill merely asks the House to allow to be paid to him the amount which he actually lost in property, the amount of money to be paid to his widow and her children, and to Mr. Chorpenning, his surviving partner. It is not a speculative claim. It is one that has been reported upon favorably by four or five Committees on Indian Affairs, and not reported against by any committee. It will save from want and suffering the family of Mr. Woodward.

I now move to suspend the rules in order that I may report this joint resolution and put it upon its passage.

Upon the question of suspending the rules, the House divided, and there were—ayes 50, noes 42.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. NELSON] will give me his attention for a few moments, I desire to say one word in regard to this claim.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object. The joint resolution is not before the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of its clerks, announced to the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon a bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending 30th June, 1866.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments on which they have insisted.

The bill was taken up.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

DOCTOR MACGOWAN.

Mr. WHALEY, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported upon certain memorials from States and agricultural societies relating to the proposed expedition of Dr. MacGowan; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMEN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up that bill; and upon that motion I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELIOT and ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 36.

So the rules were suspended, two thirds having voted in the affirmative.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT. I now call the previous question upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. GANSON. I would ask where this bank or association is to be located?

Mr. ELIOT. In Washington city.

Mr. GANSON. It is not so stated in the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. That is an error. Then I ask unanimous consent to insert after the words "body-corporate" the words "in Washington city, District of Columbia."

No objection was made, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GANSON. I think there should be among the incorporators the name of some person in this District.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to amend by inserting the name of Salmon P. Chase among the trustees.

No objection was made, and the amendment was accordingly agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TITLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (S. No. 91) entitled "An act to quiet titles in favor of parties in actual possession of lands situate in the District of Columbia," and moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GANSON. Is this bill designed to meet some individual case, or is it general in its provisions?

Mr. KERNAN. This bill was not intended by the Committee on the Judiciary to meet any particular case. It was recommended by a committee of lawyers of this District. Since it was recommended I addressed inquiries to several gentlemen whom I knew to be men of character, and they have stated, in response, that the bill was prepared merely to quiet titles which are good in fact, but in reference to which there are defects on the record.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was read the third time.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KERNAN] what class of cases this bill is intended to cover.

Mr. KERNAN. Cases where deeds have been acknowledged irregularly, sometimes before improper persons.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Is it limited to cases of that description?

Mr. KERNAN. No, sir. It also provides for cases where women have made acknowledgments which are defective. It also applies to cases where acknowledgments have been made for corporations by their attorneys.

I may remark that I am myself disposed to be suspicious with reference to bills of this kind. Under the direction of the committee I made examination and inquiry with regard to the propriety of this measure. I consulted Hon. Reverdy Johnson, Mr. Carlisle, Mr. Gillette of New York, and various other gentlemen familiar with titles, and they pronounced the bill entirely proper.

The bill was passed.

MARY A. BAKER.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill (S. No. 122) entitled "An act for the relief of Mary A. Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker," and moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read. It provides for granting to Mary A. Baker a pension of fifty dollars per month, from the 21st day of October, 1861, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF GENERAL H. G. BERRY.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, also reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill (S. No. 44) entitled "An act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry," and moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN M. WHIPPLE.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, also reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill (S. No. 2) entitled "An act granting a pension to Ellen M. Whipple, widow of the late Major General Amiel W. Whipple," and moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of bill S. No. 310, entitled "An act for the promotion of commerce and the improvement of navigation."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope that the gentleman will not press that motion. The bill simply provides for the purchase of some old maps and charts.

Mr. ELIOT. It is a very good bill, and it contemplates the purchase of no old maps or charts.

The motion was not agreed to.

COMMUNICATION WITH NEW MEXICO, ETC.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, reported from the Committee on Territories House joint resolution to facilitate communication with the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 24.

So (more than two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The question recurred on the substitute, and it was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled House bill No. 547, for the relief of Jean M. Lander, widow of F. W. Lander, deceased; when the Speaker signed the same.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending the 30th June, 1866, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the House do agree to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, eighth, ninth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth amendments of the Senate.

2. That the Senate recede from their tenth amendment.

3. That the House agree to the sixth amendment of the Senate with the following amendments: strike out the words "insurance and" where they first occur in said amendment, and add after the word "cents" wherever it occurs, the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary."

To the seventh amendment of the Senate with the following amendment: strike out the words "this amount to supply a deficiency in."

To the seventeenth amendment of the Senate with the following amendments: insert in the eleventh line of said amendment after the word "Mississippi," the words "bands of Chippewas;" at the end of the thirteenth paragraph relating to the Chippewas, insert the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary;" in the first line of the fifteenth paragraph strike out the words "eleven hundred;" in the fourth line of the same paragraph, after the word "at" insert the words "a rate not exceeding;" at the end of the same paragraph insert the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary;" in the third line of the sixteenth paragraph after the word "at" insert the words "a rate not exceeding;" and at the end of the same paragraph add the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary;" in the third, fourth, and fifth lines of the seventeenth paragraph strike out the following words: "being four hundred and thirty-five thousand six hundred pounds of pork and flour in packages," and insert in lieu thereof the words "at a rate not exceeding;" and at the end of the same paragraph add the words "or so much thereof as shall be necessary."

To the section relating to the payment in coin, with an amendment so that it will read as follows: "And he is further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay in coin such of the annuities as by the terms of any treaty of the United States with any Indian tribe are required to be paid in coin."

To the section relating to the Stockbridge-Munsee tribe of Indians with the following amendment: insert after the words "subject to all duties" the words "and liabilities to taxation," and by adding to the title, "and for other purposes."

J. R. DOOLITTLE,
JAMES HARLAN,
JOHN CONNESS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. KASSON,
JOHN R. MCBRIDE,
C. A. ELDRIDGE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that last night the amendments of the Senate were not in point of fact read to the House, owing to the short time left for action, and I ask, therefore, the attention of the House, that its better judgment may be passed upon the action the conferees have seen it their duty to take on the amendments of the Senate.

The first amendment of the Senate proposes a small sum, between four and five thousand dollars, for the Omaha band of Indians, to continue their saw-mill and appurtenances in operation, the same amount formerly provided by treaty; but the last installment under the treaty having expired, to prevent its going to ruin, and for the care a white man alone can give, the appropriation is made for this year.

The second amendment appropriates about six thousand dollars to the Indians therein named, being a balance of the proceeds of the sale of trust lands belonging to these Indians sold by order of Congress by an Indian agent, who paid over to the United States all the proceeds except these six thousand dollars, which he retains in his hands still, on some claim of having a counter claim against the Government. The liability of the Government is admitted, but they have neglected to prosecute him to get the funds from his hands. The provision of law is ample, and it is the duty of the executive officers to prosecute.

The third amendment is simply a correction of figures, and reduces "eight" to "three" as the amount of interest on certain Indian funds.

The fourth appropriates some eight hundred dollars of a balance due some claimants for property taken from the Rogue River Indians. The amount was settled by a commission several years ago, the award fixed and reported, but it has only been paid in part. The portion remaining unpaid was always tied on to an appropriation for war damages, which was always rejected. It is proposed to adjust the claim now.

The fifth amendment provides a large amount, some sixty-four thousand dollars, to cover an amount paid for Indian annuities to replace annuity goods consumed by fire in their transit across the plains, and on a steamer. These goods were all insured; and the same amendment provides that the insurance money, when collected, shall be paid into the Treasury.

The sixth amendment is to pay for the insurance and transportation of annuities to the Flat-heads, under treaty stipulations.

The seventh amendment provides for installments omitted in the bill of the House, and called for by the treaty of 1863, with the Red Lake and Pembina Chippewas.

The eighth amendment also provides for an amount due a band of western Shoshonees. The appropriation was called for by treaty, and was omitted in the bill of the House.

The ninth amendment restores the appropriation for milk and beef cattle for the California Indians as originally proposed by the House, and being the same amount as that paid last year and for years before.

The tenth amendment strikes out $60,000 appropriated by the Senate to satisfy the claims of settlers upon reservations in California.

The eleventh amendment restores the appropriation for Oregon and Washington for subsistence and removal of Indians, in order to prevent disturbance on the part of the Indians.

The twelfth is a mere verbal correction.

The thirteenth is a proviso authorizing the expenditure of a part of the appropriation for the California Indians, for purchasing wool and other raw materials for the Indians to manufacture. It is not a new appropriation.

The fourteenth prescribes the Indian reservation in Arizona by drawing a line between two points, and confines the Indians within the reservation. It also appropriates $12,900 for a deficiency in the expenditure for the Indians of Arizona. This amount was paid by the Indian agent in Arizona at a time when the Indians were about to break out into war. It was appropriated upon the spot in order to satisfy them and prevent an outbreak. It had that effect. At that time the present member from Arizona was in the Territory. The transaction was immediately reported to the Indian department and the act was approved by them.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the bill (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay the interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

Also, that the Senate had disagreed to the House amendments to the Senate amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants.

OFFICERS' SERVANTS.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Senate having disagreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) declaring and defining the meaning of the law in regard to officers' servants, I move that the House insist upon the amendments of the House disagreed to by the Senate, and ask a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. GARFIELD, Mr. ODELL, and Mr. SCOFFIELD as such committee upon the part of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. KASSON. The fifteenth amendment provides for the formation of a new treaty with the Blackfeet Indians in order to induce them to abandon their reservation south of the Missouri river. That reservation covers a large part of the country destined probably to be the principal route to the Territories of Montana and Idaho. It is a valuable mineral region which it is considered desirable to secure to the white man at as early a period as it can be done. The appropriation is only $15,000.

The sixteenth amendment is an appropriation to pay the Yankton-Sioux for property taken from them by our troops, and for the formation of a new treaty with the hostile Sioux. The appropriation for the Yankton-Sioux is to pay for property taken directly from them during the passage of our troops through their country, and for the shocking wrongs committed upon them. It is to replace to them the cattle, produce, and other property of which they were robbed.

The seventeenth amendment, and the last one of the Senate, arises mainly out of a new treaty approved by the Senate during the present session with the Chippewas of Mississippi, the Pillagers, and the Lake Winnebagoish Indians. The amendment appropriates the amount called for by that treaty.

These constitute the principal part of that class of amendments; but the Senate have further made an additional appropriation to which I wish to call the attention of the House.

Just before the outbreak of the rebellion there had been an arrangement made by law, or by treaty, with the Choctaws, for the payment of $500,000 to them on account, and without a formal settlement of the claims they had against the United States. Of that amount thus appropriated $250,000 was to be paid in money, and $250,000 in bonds of the United States. This was in 1860. At that time, as is well known, they of the South who were preparing for the rebellion had the control, to a great extent, of the Government in Washington. They got hold of the $250,000 in money and used it with the Indians to induce them to cooperate with them in their rebellion against the United States. That sum, therefore, went out of the Treasury. The $250,000 in bonds could not be printed in time, and was not issued from the Treasury. The law, however, remained in force. The Senate proposes now to add to this bill that this $250,000, instead of being issued in bonds, shall be paid in money for the benefit of those Indians who have remained loyal to the United States and who are now sought to be concentrated in Kansas, or in the Indian Territory near Kansas. There are sixteen thousand of these Indians in terrible destitution, having been driven by the combined forces of the white rebels and of the Indian rebels from their lands and territories. They are on the point of starvation. The testimony on that point certainly appeals to every member of both branches of Congress, and shows that they should be provided for, either by an explicit appropriation from the Treasury of the United States, or by the diversion of this $250,000 in bonds, substituting money for it, and paying it for the care and protection of these Indians. I believe that explains that amendment.

The Senate has also added a section to the bill authorizing the Secretary of War, for the balance of this fiscal year, to provide from the quartermaster's and commissary departments sufficient to keep these Indians from present suffering. The information given to the Senate is that the $250,000 will barely cover the amount already expended and be sufficient to carry them until the appropriation for the next fiscal year takes effect.

Now, unless there are some further questions to be asked, I will, in order to enable the clerks to get to work on this bill, either now, or after further action, move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the report of the conference committee was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF LADIES.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move that the rules be suspended in order that the doors may be opened for the admission of ladies of the families of members. They are not able to get seats in the galleries.

Mr. GANSON. I suggest that all ladies be admitted.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

The rules were suspended, and ladies were admitted to seats on the floor.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees; when the Speaker signed the same.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. PENDLETON asked unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, directed to execute the resolutions of the House of July 4, 1864, for the payment of certain allowances therein named to the officers, clerks, and other employés of the House, and the reporters of the Congressional Globe, including the employés of the Congressional Library, applying thereto so much of the addition made to the contingent fund of the House in the bill for legislative and other expenses, approved March 2, 1865, as may be required for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to offer the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for tellers on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. PIKE called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The rules were suspended, (more than two thirds voting therefor,) and the resolution was introduced.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 43, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Craven, Dawson, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Farnsworth, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Herick, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Longyear, Marcy, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, Middleton, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Shannon, Smith, Smithers, Spalding, John B. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Thayer, Townsend, Van Valkenburgh, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilder, Winfield, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yeaman—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Dawes, Deming, Finck, Grinnell, Hale, Harding, Higby, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Littlejohn, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Sloan, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, and William B. Washburn—43.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blair, Brooks, Broomall, William G. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Coke, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hotchkiss, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Knox, Lazear, Mallory, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, William H. Miller, Norton, Patterson, Pruyn, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Scofield, Starr, William G. Steele, Thomas, Tracy, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Wilson, Windom, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—51.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL obtained the floor.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to allow me to offer a resolution which is necessary for the payment of one of the officers of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield for that purpose. Mr. KASSON. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the compensation of the stenographer appointed under the resolution of January 5, 1863, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. LOAN. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I move to suspend the rules. This officer has to be paid in some way.

The question was taken; and two thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise for the purpose of making a report from the committee of conference on the internal revenue bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope we shall have order in the House while the gentleman explains the report on the most important bill of the session.

Mr. MORRILL. As the report is long, perhaps I had better make an explanation of it; and if gentlemen desire to ask any questions I will answer so far as I can. If any gentleman afterward desires the reading of the report it can be read. If that course meets the acquiescence of the House I will proceed at once to make an explanation of the doings of the committee of conference.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will waive the call for the reading of the report at present.

Mr. MORRILL. Upon the amendment of the House creating ten revenue agents instead of five the Senate receded. We understand that one of these revenue agents has caused to be paid to the Government more than half a million dollars, and rather than consent to diminish the number it might be better to have them increased. The Senate also recedes from the amendment in relation to clerk hire. Their proposition to give seventy cents for every one hundred names returned to this purpose would have allowed clerk hire to every assessment district throughout the United States—not allowing enough where it is most needed, and allowing something where nothing at all is required.

On the subject of crude rock-oil or petroleum a compromise was made by allowing the duty to be fixed at one dollar per barrel, the Senate receding from their proposition to allow a drawback. There is consequently to be no drawback.

There was a proviso to the clause in relation to license for peddlers, providing that foreigners among us who refuse to be naturalized and enrolled shall not be licensed. The Senate had stricken that out, but the conferees have agreed to let it stand as proposed by the House.

In relation to the question of books the Senate had stricken out the whole provision in relation to the exemption of school-books inserted by the House, and finally the whole amendment in relation to that subject was abandoned by the House conferees, believing that it is a time when we should obtain all the revenue we can, from this or any other legitimate source.

In relation to cigars, the proposition of the Senate to create two prices and two grades was abandoned, and a new proposition, as a compromise, was inserted, levying the duty on cigars at ten dollars per thousand instead of sixty cents per pound. It is believed that this will be more satisfactory when applied to all kinds of cigars than it would be if levied upon the weight, and that it will be executed with greater facility. One rate of duty is indispensable; also, in the judgment of cigar-makers, as well as experts, if we are to collect the revenue without fraud or evasion.

In relation to the one hundred and third section of the present internal revenue law, the clause which will be best remembered as having been introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin, was rejected by the Senate and abandoned by the conferees, the subject having been treated in the tariff bill, by which tonnage duties were levied upon our shipping. As the clause now stands, the tax will be as it has been heretofore, two and a half per cent. on the gross receipts of railroads and of vessels not subject to tonnage duties.

In relation to the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Nevada, allowing logs and certain articles to be transported without any tax, that was abandoned, and in lieu thereof the amendment is now confined solely to silver ore, it having been found that all the ores of Lake Superior, as well as elsewhere—lead, copper, and iron—would have been transported to all parts of the country free if the former proposition had remained in the bill.

In relation to the income tax, the law as it stood last year was finally agreed upon by the conferees, so far as it regards the sale of real estate. Sales of real estate which have been purchased and sold within the year are to be taxed upon the gains or profits realized upon such real estate. Otherwise, the provisions touching the income tax stand as they passed the House.

In relation to stamps, the proposition which was submitted and adopted on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] has been left undisturbed. The proposition to change somewhat the stamp duties upon loans was abandoned by the House conferees, and the stamp duties in relation thereto remain as they have been heretofore.

The tax upon cotton, I regret to say, was stricken out by the Senate. The conferees of the House, after a prolonged conference, were unable to obtain any proposition to lay a tax upon cotton without a drawback was allowed on the raw material, or with a drawback upon manufactures of cotton for exportation. If a drawback should be allowed on the raw material, the revenue would derive little benefit from the tax, and if no drawback were to be allowed on the manufactures exported, that trade would be at once destroyed.

In relation to the tax upon banks, the only change that was made in the proposition as introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] was to extend the time from January to July, giving six months more of time for the banks to wind up.

Mr. BROOKS. I would ask the gentleman if there was any change made in regard to brokers.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senate had a proposition on that subject which we did not adopt.

Mr. BROOKS. Did the Senate put it in?

Mr. MORRILL. I so understand it; but at any rate it was stricken out. There was another proposition in relation to the circulation of State banks; that when it shall be reduced below five per cent, it shall be free from taxation. If there are any other questions which gentlemen desire to ask me in relation to other parts of the bill, I will answer them as far as I can.

Mr. GANSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] how the tax upon gross receipts of vessels stands, as recommended by the committee of conference.

Mr. MORRILL. Those that are subject to tonnage duties are exempt from any charge upon their gross receipts.

Mr. GANSON. What class does that provision embrace?

Mr. MORRILL. The vast majority of all that we have.

Mr. GANSON. Does that embrace canal-boats?

Mr. MORRILL. I think it does.

Mr. KERNAN. I would ask how the conference report leaves the tax on sales.

Mr. MORRILL. That was an amendment made by the Senate, having been rejected by the House, and being abandoned by the Senate conferees it could not properly be insisted upon by us.

Mr. A. MYERS. I understood the gentleman to say that the tax upon crude petroleum is fixed at one dollar per barrel, with no drawback.

Mr. MORRILL. That is so.

Mr. A. MYERS. I think that was a very sensible committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Did the conference committee agree to the amendment of the Senate in regard to taxes upon sales?

Mr. MORRILL. I have already stated that that was an amendment made by the Senate and when the proposition was before the House, it was rejected by the House. But being abandoned by the majority of the Senate conferees, of course the committee of conference could not retain it.

Mr. BROOKS. I would ask what was done with the Senate amendment respecting commissioners to be appointed to examine during the recess into the whole subject of taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. It was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what was done in regard to savings banks?

Mr. MORRILL. They are to be taxed one half of one per cent. per annum upon their deposits.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. I would ask what has been done by the conference committee in regard to property crossing the Canadian railroads from one part of the United States to another part of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL. The proposition of the Senate was acceded to by the committee on the part of the House, by which freight or passenger tickets, fares of persons and property starting from one point in the United States for another point in the United States, and passing through a foreign territory, will be required to pay the same rate of taxation as would be paid if they should pass altogether through the United States.

Mr. ANCONA. I would ask if the conference committee agreed to the amendment of the Senate in regard to malt liquors.

Mr. MORRILL. There was no amendment by the Senate in regard to malt liquors; therefore that subject was untouched. The tax remains at one dollar per barrel.

Mr. KERNAN. Do I understand correctly the report of the conference committee to agree to a tax of one half per cent. per annum upon deposits in savings banks where they are not banks loaning money?

Mr. MORRILL. I so understand it.

Mr. KERNAN. From what time?

Mr. MORRILL. My recollection is that the tax takes effect after the 1st of May next.

Mr. KERNAN. On all savings banks?

Mr. MORRILL. I think so; I may be mistaken, and it may be from and after the 1st of April.

Mr. BROOKS. There are two sections of the bill as amended which I should like to hear read; one with reference to the tax on banks, and the other for the appointment of commissioners to examine into the system of taxation during the recess.

The Clerk read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three persons, to inquire and report at the earliest practicable moment upon the subject of raising by taxation such revenue as may be necessary in order to supply the wants of the Government, having regard to and including the sources from which such revenue should be drawn, and the best and most efficient mode of raising the same, and to report the form of a bill; and that such commission have power to inquire into the efficiency of the present and past methods of collecting the internal revenue, and to take testimony, in such manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and such commissioners shall receive for their services $300 a month for the time necessarily employed, and their necessary traveling expenses.

The Clerk also read the following:

That section one hundred and ten be amended by striking out, after the words "and redemption thereof," the words "nor to any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning the same on interest for the benefit of the depositors only, and which do no other business of banking."

Mr. MORRILL demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 57, not voting 37; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Bailey, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman, Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Frank, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Buley, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Ashel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorehead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Spaulding, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Worthington, and Yeaman—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finch, Ganson, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, H. H. Holman, Hulburt, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalfleisch, Kernan, Knapp, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marcy, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Rogers, Ross, John B. Steele, Siles, Srouse, Stuart, Sweat, Towns, Ward, Chilton A. White, Winfield, and Woodbridge—57.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blair, William G. Brown, Clay, Henry Winter Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Gooch, Grider, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Julian, Knox, Law, Lazear, Long, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, Odell, Patterson, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Scofield, Scott, Starr, William G. Steele, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—37.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. NICOLAY, his Private Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution in relation to the public printing," approved June 23, 1860;

An act (H. R. No. 791) granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor;

An act (H. R. No. 774) to establish certain post roads;

An act (H. R. No. 763) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 1, 1862," and to amend an act amendatory thereof, approved July 2, 1864;

An act (H. R. No. 697) further to provide for the verification of invoices;

An act (H. R. No. 556) granting a pension to Ezekiel Darling; and

An act (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Jean M. Lander, widow of F. W. Lander, deceased.

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. COX. I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House be, and they are hereby, tendered to Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX for the dignified, able, and courteous discharge of the duties of Speaker during the present Congress.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, (Mr. DAWES being in the chair as Speaker pro tempore), in this unexampled and historic time, when our country is excited by the conflict which has called us to extraordinary legislation, when the passions and throes of a great nation have found more or less of their reflection in this Hall, it has been a difficult duty which has been discharged by the Speaker. To moderate these passions, restrain the urgency, clamor, and heat of debate, and to give dignity and independence to this popular, I may say almost tumultuous, assembly, has been devolved upon the distinguished gentleman from Indiana. He has, by his courtesy, kindness, and fairness, won our personal esteem and the public regard. I propose, without formality and with earnestness, to tender to him our thanks and good will. I trust, sir, that in the future the same moderation and benignity may radiate in this House which has radiated from the Chair during the present Congress. We shall part here with unusual good feeling. I wish this feeling could pervade our whole people. In the language of the Bible, and in this presence, I would all-reverently pray that "all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking be put away from you, with all malice," and that we should "be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Mr. DAWSON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, the labors of this Congress are nearly concluded, and we are about to leave these Halls. Before separating to return to our homes I agree with my friend from Ohio that it is eminently proper to render to the Speaker some acknowledgment for his habitual kindness and courtesy as the Presiding Officer of this House. At no time so critical in the history of the country have the Representatives of the people been assembled to legislate on our national concerns. Coming together in the midst of a civil war, sanguinary and exasperated beyond parallel, it was hardly to be expected that the Presiding Officer of this House, however well poised his mental and moral constitution, could be entirely free from personal bias in his official action.

I believe, sir, I but express a general sentiment when I say that the House and the Speaker have well maintained the proprieties of the place. This has not been a bitter Congress. The intercourse of members upon this floor has been kindly and genial; and the Speaker in his official action toward political friends and foes, has uniformly observed the same high urbanity, frankness, and liberality. When the Representatives of the people can meet and discuss their differences in a spirit of self-abnegation, and with moderation and candor, it assuredly affords much matter of mutual congratulation. In a body such as this, representatives of many shades of clashing opinions, unanimity would in vain be looked for; and on some points we have honestly and widely differed touching the preservation of our common country and its free institutions. It is much, however, if in our differences we can lay aside our asperities and sacrifice all personal feelings in the effort to maintain individual and party sentiments.

I trust, sir, that in returning to our constituencies, once more to commingle with and form a part of the people, we will carry with us the same kindly feelings, and lose no occasion by example and precept to inculcate that charity and forbearance, that moderation and candor, which we have seen exhibited here with such favorable results.

Would, sir, that we could also indulge the hope that ere another Congress shall assemble within these Halls the noise of the battle shall have ceased, and the messenger of peace revisited our stricken country, to exert again its benign influences, under which infancy and age may rest under the shelter of home, and vigorous manhood may resume those pursuits which ennoble humanity and scatter blessings over the land.

I believe I can say that the Speaker will bear into his retirement the friendly regards of his associates, and their hearty wishes for his personal welfare and happiness.

Mr. COX. I call for the previous question. The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. HOOPER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill of the House (No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," which has just been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up. The amendment of the Senate, which was read, was to strike out section two of the bill, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That section one of said act be so amended as to authorize, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the employment of one chief of the division of currency, one chief of the division on organization of banks, one chief of the division of general correspondence and statistics, and one chief of the division of redemption, with an annual salary of $2,200 each; and that the annual salary of the Deputy Comptroller shall be $3,000.

Mr. HOOPER. I move that the House concur in the amendment, and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution of the Senate (No. 118) authorizing surveys to be made with a view to the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara.

Mr. GANSON. I object.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to make that motion.

Mr. KERNAN. As this route has already been surveyed by an engineer at the expense of the Federal Government, and a report made, why should we appropriate $10,000 more to make another survey?

Mr. SPALDING. I call for tellers on my motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LITTLEJOHN and GANSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 46.

So the rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEVENS. The other day, during the discussion on the miscellaneous appropriation bill, I made some remarks in regard to the manner of letting out the contract on the Washington aqueduct, and mentioned the name of the engineer under whom it was done. I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, who desires me to say—which I do cheerfully—that he assumes the responsibility both of the payments made out of the appropriation of last session and also of the letting out of the contract. I am very glad to be able to put it upon the right shoulders.

I desire to say further that when we were discussing the matter in reference to importing images and other statutory I mentioned the name of a firm in New York as an importer of those articles. I have been reminded that that fact took place some thirty years ago, and not by any firm now in existence in New York.

PRINTING THE TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury twenty thousand copies of the act amending the internal revenue laws be printed as amended, with all the amendments incorporated into the text so far as the same may be practicable, and with the new sections thereto annexed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend the resolution by adding the words "and an index."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Printing.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866, reported that the committee, having met, after full and free conference had agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses that the Senate recede from their fourth amendment; that the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the second and third amendments of the Senate; that the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same; and that as to the first amendment of the Senate, striking out the proviso at the end of the bill, the committee were unable to agree.

The report was signed by Messrs. WILSON, HOLMAN, and DAVIS of New York, managers on the part of the House; and by Messrs. TRUMBULL, FARWELL, and POWELL, managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. This report is precisely the same as that submitted by the former committee of conference, except as to the first amendment of the Senate, which was to strike out the proviso adopted by the House prohibiting the payment of any money appropriated by this bill to railroad companies who had received grants of land, for the transportation of troops and property belonging to the United States. Upon that proposition, as the report states, the conferees of the two Houses were unable to agree. But they have agreed as to all the other differences between the two Houses. Therefore, inasmuch as the House has acted upon the question involved in this report, and have confirmed the report of the committee by a very large majority, I will call the previous question upon the adoption of the report. After the report has been disposed of, I desire to make a motion in relation to the disagreement remaining between the two Houses.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now desire to submit a motion in relation to the remaining disagreement between the two Houses upon this bill. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be used for the purpose of paying the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the transportation of property or troops of the United States.

I desire to say in relation to this motion that the conferees—at least a majority of the conferees on the part of the House—felt themselves instructed by what they understood to be not only the uniform but the very emphatic action of the House in regard to it. We therefore concluded that it was best to submit this question to the House, first having disposed of all the other disagreeing votes, in order that the bill might not be incumbered by any more than this one provision, upon which there was disagreement.

And now, unless some gentleman desires to say something upon the subject, I propose to ask the previous question on my motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly; I will yield to my colleague upon the conference committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I have no personal interest, Mr. Speaker, in the question which has arisen upon the report of the committee of conference on which I had the honor to act.

But I have an interest in demanding the exercise of justice by my Government as well toward corporations as individuals, and I stand here now to demand justice for the corporation which has been assailed and traduced upon this floor.

The honorable gentleman of the committee of conference who preceded me [Mr. WILSON] stated that there had been a very emphatic expression of the House against the proposition to allow to the Illinois Central Railroad Company any compensation for the transportation over their road of any troops or munitions of war for the Government; but let me say to him that no full and fair expression of the intelligent judgment of the House was permitted by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] who, after a bitter and vindictive attack upon the corporation, moved the previous question, so as to shut out debate and prevent a judgment upon the facts of the case.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to discuss this question upon its merits. I wish to look a little at the other side of it, and not to be misled by appeals to our passions, based upon resentment or prejudice. I do not believe that the action proposed by the House in their former vote would be right, equitable, or honest; or that it would be supported by the judgment of any fair-minded or just man in the country when the real facts and merits of the question shall be understood.

It has been asserted by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] I need not say upon the ground of personal prejudice or feelings, that the Illinois Central Railroad Company is a corrupt and pampered corporation. He says that it received from this Government a valuable gratuity, and that it is bound to perform, under the conditions of the grant which it accepted, that very service for which it now asks compensation at the hands of Congress.

Now I admit that the gratuity of this Government to the State of Illinois in behalf of the Illinois Central railroad was a munificent one. But let me tell the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] that this Government has made millions, ay, untold millions, by the construction of that road. We gave lands which could not be sold for twenty-five cents an acre to aid in the construction of the road on the line running from the northern to the southern portion of that State. In that grant we provided that the alternate sections reserved to the Government should be sold for $2 50 per acre, and not for less. And now, instead of getting twenty-five cents per acre for its lands, the Government received $2 50 an acre for every acre it sold after this grant on this line, thus making all the land which was worth but twenty-five cents an acre to the Government worth at least $1 25 per acre.

More than this, sir; the construction of this road has developed the country, added to its wealth, to its productiveness, to its settlement, and to its capacity, in this hour of national trial and of pressing indebtedness, to bear its full proportion of national and State taxation. I suggest to the honorable gentleman [Mr. WASHBURN] to contrast the condition of his State when the grant of lands to secure the construction of this road was made by the Federal Government with its condition to-day.

The State of Illinois has grown rich, immensely rich, by reason of this gratuity of the Government, through which she was enabled to construct this great railway from her northern limit to her southern boundary. She has converted an immense wilderness into fertile fields, and a desert into countless towns and villages. This corporation, which the honorable gentleman [Mr. WASHBURN] calls an odious monopoly, has actually returned to the people of the United States, to the Federal Government, fivefold for every dollar which the Government has granted it. I will not then stand here silent when any gentleman, swollen with personal prejudice, undertakes to register the judgment of this House against this company. I will defend the right; I will demand justice.

The honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] presents his bill of indictment against the Illinois Central Railroad Company, and urges against it the heinous crime of being a foreign corporation; and by way of explanation he alleges that its bonds and stock are largely held by British subjects and men who are hostile to this country.

I admit that the capital employed in the construction of this great improvement was largely foreign and British capital, and that British subjects to-day are extensive owners of its stock and its bonds. But I deny that the eminent gentlemen abroad who have thus contributed to the development of our western States are the enemies of our country. Cobden and Bright are not names to be thus arrayed in hostility to our free Government and institutions.

This charge comes with no air of grace from the Representative of a State which owes its wealth, its productiveness, its power, to the beneficent influence of capital from Europe, which constructed the canals of Illinois, which built its extended system of railway communication, and which was invested there only because our own capitalists of New York and New England, by their influence and coöperation, gave credit to western enterprise.

No State owes to foreign capital a weightier debt of gratitude than the State of Illinois, which, in the absence of this power, thus wantonly assailed, would to-day remain a desert, and my honorable friend from the Galena district [Mr. WASHBURN] would not have been a Representative upon this floor, because there would have been nobody there to be represented.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree to the proposition which has been asserted here, that the Illinois Central Railroad Company has failed fully and honorably to meet the obligations imposed upon it by the acceptance of the grant given by the Government to aid it.

In my judgment it has done for the nation and the State all that it promised to do—all that it was bound to do by law.

And when I speak of the law I am not to be told that I am to be bound by what Congress says is the law; not by declaratory statutes; nor by anything except the adjudication by the constitutional tribunals of the law of any question arising upon a statute of Congress. Congress may make a law, but it can neither interpret it judicially nor execute it physically. It has passed laws which, under and in violation of the Constitution, had not the force of law in any court of equity or conscience under heaven, and thus would it be with any legislation which, in derogation of rights determined by the original grant, shall attempt to deprive this corporation of a fair remuneration for the service rendered to the Government.

History affords sometimes a fair construction to legislative enactments.

In 1822 the Government first gave to the State of Illinois a grant of land to aid in the construction of a canal from Chicago to the Illinois river, substantially on the line now occupied by the Illinois Central railroad for a long distance. This grant, let me say, was for a canal to be constructed by the State as an avenue of commercial communication for the public, but on which no one pretended or supposed that the State would ever construct or own one single boat for the purpose of general transportation. It was an avenue to be open to such vessels as should be placed upon it for commercial purposes by private companies or private citizens; and in respect to all boats or vessels thus employed the State reserved and held the right to impose tolls.

In this grant the Federal Government provided that the canal to be constructed should be a highway of the United States for the transportation of troops and munitions of war, without toll or other charge thereon. Did this mean that the State should furnish the canal-boats or other conveniences for the carriage of troops and munitions? By no means; nobody dreamed of such a construction. It meant only that the Government should have the easement, and that no tolls or charges should be made on such boats or vessels as the Government should charter or furnish for the transportation of troops and munitions.

The canal was not built, as contemplated by the grant of 1822; and in 1826, I think it was, the Federal Government authorized the appropriation of these lands for the purpose of constructing a railroad instead of a canal; and in that grant, the same, and only the same privileges are reserved to the Government as they would have been entitled to if the canal had been constructed instead of the railroad.

It is evident to me that this was a reservation of an easement or right of passage, free of tolls or other charge for the easement, and not upon transportation over the easement.

The mails would of course seek the expeditious line of a railway rather than the tedious transportation of a canal, and for this reason: the act authorizing the change of construction from a canal to a railroad provides that there shall be paid over the railroad, when constructed, for the transportation of the mails, such compensation as shall be allowed by law.

In times of peace no troops or munitions of war would seek for transportation over the line; the Government would have no cars, no agents, no other instrumentalities for this purpose; but the mails must still be carried, and the railroad company could easily furnish the facility for transportation. The transportation would be over a free road-bed, but not on the cars of the Government, and therefore compensation was to be paid as Congress should decide to be just. Certainly, if the transportation of vast armies, and the immense aggregate of munitions, was to be without charge, no allusion whatever would have been made to the payment of mail transportation, which, in comparison with the other, was entirely insignificant.

As matter of history, the canal was not built as contemplated; the railroad was not constructed in lieu thereof, as authorized; and in 1839 Congress bestowed upon the State of Illinois the three million acres of public land which have given rise to so much of development at home and to so much of criticism here. And yet in this same grant the same terms of reservation and privilege are contained as are found in the act of 1822 authorizing a canal, over which it was never pretended that anything more than an easement was granted.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company;

An act (S. No. 44) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;

An act (S. No. 122) for the relief of Mary A.

Baker, widow of Brigadier General Edward D. Baker;

An act (S. No. 2) granting a pension to Ellen M. Whipple, widow of the late Major General A. W. Whipple, of the United States Army;

An act (S. No. 171) further to amend an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862;

An act (S. No. 411) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia;" and

An act relating to the postal laws.

APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. It has, Mr. Speaker, been asserted time and again that this corporation is, by the terms of the grant to it, the effect of which I have stated, bound to furnish not only road-bed and track, but cars, locomotive power, fuel, engineers, and men, and all other facilities for the transportation of all the troops and military stores which may be offered by the Government for transportation.

I submit in all fairness, in all candor, in all equity, that such a construction is a gross denial of justice. Years and years ago, when this grant was given and accepted, and when Congress imposed the condition of transporting troops and munitions of war in time of war, neither the party imposing nor the party accepting the condition had in view any such condition of things as now exists or as has existed since 1861. Each acted in respect to the requisitions made upon the resources of the country in the wars which were a part of the history of the country—wars which called for a few thousand men and the transport of a limited amount of stores and munitions. The contract is now sought to be applied to conditions and circumstances not existing, not anticipated by either contracting party at the time of the contract, not in the mind of either, affecting the understanding, will, or judgment of the parties.

Mr. PIKE. Did not the parties to this contract contemplate the existence of war?

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. Yes, of such wars as we had known and in which we had participated; but not of a rebellion which had disturbed the quiet and pursuits of the whole country; which had called almost every able-bodied man to the field, and had tasked the capacity of every railroad for the transportation of thousands of troops and an incalculable amount of warlike munitions and material.

The demand upon the Illinois Central railroad has, I am assured, been so great as to exhaust at times all its rolling stock and incapacitate it from doing any portion of the ordinary business of the country through which it passes; not only has it taken all the rolling stock for the uses of the Government, but the War Department have found it necessary to seize upon the rolling stock of other roads and place it upon the line of this abused corporation.

The Chicago and Northwestern railway has thus been visited with a heavy hand, and the Chicago, Iowa, and Nebraska railroad, of which I happen to be a director, has, I am told, one hundred of its cars now used by the Government upon the Illinois Central. For six weeks together the cars laden with Army stores transported over the road for the Government have filled up fifteen miles of side tracks and turn-outs, because the Government could find no means of shipping the immense accumulation from the terminus of the road nor any room for their storage.

It is idle, it is childish, to say that any such service was ever contemplated by the party making or the party receiving the grant, and a court of equity, in my judgment, would hold that the contract must be interpreted in reference to things existing, contemplated, and understood at its execution by both parties, and not in reference to conditions and exigencies not contemplated or dreamed of by either.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to this House whether we can justly, fairly, or equitably, refuse this company a remuneration for the essential service which it has rendered to the country—a service entirely beyond anything ever contemplated, and requiring for its performance an amount of equipment and power largely in excess of anything demanded for the performance of the business incident to its line in time of peace. Every other road, every other land-grant road, has been paid. Why should this road alone suffer for our injustice?

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 2D Session.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1865.

Mr. SLOAN. Has this railroad company ever transported any freight for the Government free of charge?

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I do not know that it has; and according to my view of the case it was not bound to do so. The grant created an easement over the line for public transportation, free of tolls on the easement, but subject to charge for the motive power and vehicles for the transportation.

This is the construction which at all times before this has been placed upon it by the Departments of the Government and their legal advisers. It is the just view of the case now, and Congress can never, whatever its action may be, legislate away the inherent equities of the Illinois Central Railroad Company to just compensation.

It is no argument to say that this corporation has made money on its whole business. The honorable member from Illinois tells us that the receipts of the company have been enormous. He unfortunately neglected to say that their expenses were enormous also, approaching fearfully to the entire income.

The expenses of all railroads in these times are increasing rapidly on their gross receipts, and I learn that for the last six or twelve months the running expenses of the New York Central were eighty per cent. of the gross earnings. The Government allows to the Illinois Central railroad but sixty-six and two thirds per cent. of the ordinary prices for transportation, reserving thirty-three and one third for the use of the easement on road-bed. It receives less for its service by one third than other railroads. It seems to me the height of injustice to say that this Government will not allow it a remuneration for this service.

Mr. Speaker, I have occupied the floor by the courtesy of the honorable member from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] and although there are points to which I desired to allude in connection with the question before the House, I can no longer claim the indulgence of my friend, [Mr. WILSON,] but yield to him that he may, if he desires, call the previous question.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. NICOLAY, his Private Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 707) to provide for the publication of the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees; and

An act (H. R. No. 738) to regulate the fees of custom-house officers on the northern, north-eastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I suppose that the House very well understands the provisions of the charter of the Illinois Central Railroad Company under which the Government retained an easement over the road for the transportation of troops and munitions of war free of charge. When this war broke out, and it became necessary for the Government to transport large bodies of troops and vast quantities of munitions of war and supplies over the Illinois Central railroad, the question was raised and presented to the War Department whether that company was entitled to pay for such transportation. The President, the Secretary of War, and the Attorney General of the United States, to whom this question was submitted, came to the deliberate conclusion that, inasmuch as the company furnish the rolling stock, the men to run the engines and the cars, &c., it was entitled to pay for the transportation of troops and munitions of war. It is now proposed to appeal from the decision of the President, the Secretary of War, and the law officer of the Government, to the House of Representatives.

It will be recollected, too, by gentlemen who have examined the charter of this company, that Congress provided, in the act granting these lands to the Illinois Central Railroad Company, that for the transportation of the mails of the United States the company should receive such compensation as should be provided by law. Now, can it be supposed for one moment that while the act reserved to the company the right to receive pay for the transportation of the mails of the Government, it was intended that they should never receive any pay for the transportation of these immense quantities of supplies and munitions of war, and these vast bodies of troops, the transportation of which has at times monopolized all the rolling stock upon that road? Why, sir, such a proposition, it strikes me, is absurd upon its face.

The decision arrived at by the Attorney General and the Secretary of War, and the contract made by them with this company, was that the company should receive two thirds of its ordinary tariff for like transportation. Thus the Government reserves thirty-three and one third per cent. for the use of the road; and any man who knows anything about railroads will tell you that thirty-three and one third per cent. is a very large estimate for the use of a railroad.

I am very sorry to differ with my colleague from the Galena district [Mr. WASHBURN] who lives at the northern terminus of this road. I do not ordinarily differ with him upon questions of this character. It seems to me that he must have some feeling of personal spite against this company. I should judge from his ad captandum remarks about its charges for way travel that he must be influenced by some feeling of private malice. Sir, what bearing have such considerations upon this great question between the Government of the United States and the Illinois Central Railroad Company? He says that this is a rich company. That may be true; but, sir, this question is to be decided on the principles of justice, not by the consideration as to whether this is a prosperous and a rich company. If a man grows rich, and does it honestly, is that any reason why we should rob him? Are you to rob a railroad because it is prosperous?

The State of Illinois has grown prosperous and rich through this railroad company, as has already been stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] This railroad has developed every section of that State. It has opened to settlement, by a rich and flourishing population, the vast regions of the State of Illinois which were before nothing but a vast and deserted prairie. The State of Illinois has prospered by the prosperity of this railroad. The whole Government partakes and participates in this prosperity. Your grant to that railroad company was predicated upon the ground that it would enhance the value of the alternate sections reserved for the Government, and they were put up to twenty shillings instead of ten. Every acre of these lands has been sold long ago for double the price that the Government had been receiving, and that money has gone into the coffers of the Government. It has received upon the lands that it had reserved the full value of the lands that it had reserved and the lands that it had granted. I say to the House that it would be money in the pockets of the railroad company if they had purchased the lands and built the road.

This railroad pays seven per cent. on its gross earnings to the State of Illinois; it pays its taxes to the General Government; the whole country is prospering and growing rich in consequence of this railroad company. I hope this House will refuse to agree to this proposed amendment of the committee, or rather of the committee on the part of the House. I hope that the House will recede from their amendment. I am satisfied from a careful examination of the matter from first to last that it is the just and proper thing, that it is the equitable and legal thing, for us to do.

Mr. WILSON resumed the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would not have troubled the House with a single remark on this question had it not been for the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] I have observed here that whenever you touch a railroad, you touch my friend like a torpedo, and he goes off; he explodes. He has repeated to-night what has so often been said before. If a gentleman interposes here to save the money of the people in the Treasury, his influence is sought to be impaired by attributing reasons and motives which have no foundation in fact. However this may apply to individuals, I do not know how it can apply to a corporation like the Illinois Central Railroad Company, which has no soul.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] alludes to my having some grievance. I have no grievance except the grievance of having $1,500,000 taken from the Treasury and put into the pockets of this foreign railroad corporation, against law and against right.

The question is here to-night whether this House is to stultify itself. It has unanimously more than once decided that this company had no right to make this "grab" upon the Treasury. We decided it the other night on the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Not unanimously. Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It decided unanimously in adopting at the last Congress the report of the gentleman from Indiana, (Mr. Porter,) which in express terms took the ground taken at this Congress. If my colleague had been as well posted as I am on this question he would have known what I said to be true.

Sir, I say that it is a question whether we are to stultify ourselves; whether, after having decided unanimously that this company should not be paid, within three weeks we will vote to pay this money to them.

The people must look with amazement at the power of this railroad company in Congress, when it can come here and in three weeks reverse all our action and say to the country the Army bill shall not pass if it shall be prevented from obtaining this gratuity, which our constituents, now groaning under taxation, must pay. No, sir, the Army bill is to be delayed in its passage to provide for the Illinois Central Railroad Company. The bronzed and brave veterans, who have carried the eagles of the Republic over half the nation in triumph and glory, cannot be paid by this Army bill until we shall pay tribute to these British bondholders.

Sir, I do not wish to take up the time of the House. I cannot believe, and will not believe until I see the vote recorded, that we are prepared now to reverse all that we have said on the record and vote this amount of money into the hands of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, when our soldiers are not paid and when their families at home are suffering. I said the other day when I spoke on this question that I would not argue the legal point because the House had precluded me on that subject, and I showed further that so far as the equities of the case were concerned the company had no equity; and now, thanking the gentleman from Iowa, I will detain the House no longer.

Mr. WILSON resumed the floor.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I am satisfied the House do not desire that I yield any further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state whether he yields the floor or not.

Mr. WILSON. Well, I think I ought to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, and I will do so.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I shall not detain the House long by any remarks I propose to make. My colleague from the Galena district seems to be somewhat excited on this subject. I do not propose to answer all the points he has made in his argument, but simply to refer to them. His first position is that we are defeating the Army bill by insisting that this railroad ought to be paid for transporting the troops and Government property over their line, and second that by so paying the Central Railroad Company we are aiding the rebels in Canada to make raids upon our people. Now I have no answer to make to such arguments as that; they are mere appeals to men's prejudices. I must be permitted, however, to say a word in relation to the allusions which he makes on every occasion to the foreign bondholders who control the Central railroad stock. In answer to that I have simply to say that foreign capitalists, when we were poor and unable to build this railroad, stepped in and supplied the means to make the track, to put the rails upon it, and to furnish the rolling stock. They did it expecting of course to be remunerated for their expenditure, and I have no quarrel with them, nor ought my colleague to have, inasmuch as they came to our assistance when our people were unable to raise a dollar for carrying on this work.

But, sir, I arose more for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the character of the amendment which it is now proposed to put into this bill. The Illinois Central railroad being a land-grant railroad is to receive nothing for transporting the Government troops over their line, while other land-grant railroads are. Why this discrimination between this road and other roads? Why not apply this rule to all other roads that have received land grants and have gone into operation and are engaged in business? There is but one answer you can make, and that is that the Illinois Central road is a rich corporation and can bear it. Well, I am not prepared to say whether they can bear it or not. I know they have expended vast amounts of money. I know that the road-bed cost a large amount of money; and it cost a large amount to put upon it the rolling stock and to build the depots. They invested $12,000,000 in rolling stock alone. After having done that it is proposed that we shall use their road and their rolling stock without a cent of compensation from the Government.

Mr. WILSON. The action of this branch of Congress upon this question has been too consistently uniform during the Thirty-Seventh as well as the Thirty-Eighth Congress, for me to attempt to argue the question in dispute in the House at this time. I shall not therefore do it. During the Thirty-Seventh Congress this question was presented by one if not two of the Missouri railroads which had received grants of land upon the same terms as those of the Illinois Central road. Congress, in both Houses, declined at that time to agree to the construction which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] seeks now to have this House adopt. They expressly refused to recognize that construction. On three other occasions during that Congress this House affirmed and reaffirmed that position, and on two occasions during this Congress this House has done the same thing. I therefore shall not occupy the time of the House in endeavoring to show that our action should continue in that direction.

There is one thing further that I desire every member to be apprised of, and that is this, that the Illinois Central Railroad Company has never carried the troops or property of the United States, either in time of peace or time of war, without charging therefor. They have always charged and received compensation. And inasmuch as the reduction of rates has been referred to, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the various railroad companies of the United States, as I am informed by gentlemen who are well versed in railroad matters, agreed last winter to deduct thirty-three and a third per cent. in favor of the Government. Roads which never received any land grants, or any other gratuity whatever from the Government, deduct the same amount that is now said to be such a magnificent concession upon the part of this Illinois Central Railroad Company.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. The gentleman makes the allegation that other roads have agreed to carry for the Government at a reduction of thirty-three and a third per cent. from their regular prices. I undertake to say that the Government have deducted from the Illinois Central Railroad Company thirty-three and a third per cent. from the prices which they have paid to every other road.

Mr. WILSON. By an order issued from the War Department in 1861, that was true. But I am informed that the companies to which I have referred, during the last winter took this action in a convention held by the representatives of the various railroad companies of the country, by which they proposed to deduct thirty-three and a third per cent. from their charges in favor of the Government. This company never has done it in time of peace or in time of war.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I would ask the gentleman if the Illinois Central railroad prior to the rebellion transported materials for the Government, and charged, and received pay therefor.

Mr. WILSON. They did, and they received compensation therefor.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Was that prior or subsequent to the rebellion?

Mr. WILSON. It was prior to the rebellion, and during a time of peace.

But I do not wish to weary the patience of the House, and I therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The first question was on agreeing to Mr. Wilson's motion to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, as follows:

Insert:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be used for the purpose of paying the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the transportation of the property or troops of the United States.

There being, on a division—ayes 46, noes 46, Mr. WILSON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 61, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Ashley, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, James S. Brown, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, English, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Hale, Harding, Herrick, Higby, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Orlando Kellogg, Marcy, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilson, and Windom—79.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Arnold, Bliss, Blow, Brooks, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Grinnell, Griswold, Charles M. Harris, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knapp, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Long, Longyear, Mallory, McAllister, William H. Miller, Morrill, James H. Morris, Morrison, Noble, Odell, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ross, Scott, Shannon, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Ward, William B. Washburn, Wheeler, Winfield, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yaman—61.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blair, William G. Brown, Chanler, Clay, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Donnelly, Dumont, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Hutchins, Julian, Kelley, Knox, Law, Lazear, Loan, McDowell, Melndoe, McKimney, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Patterson, Radford, Robinson, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweat, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Webster, Whaley, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—42.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the Senate amendment as amended, and it was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment as amended was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 703) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof;" when the Speaker signed the same.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the special committee on invalid pensions, appointed December 20, 1864, made a report, which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

QUESTION OF ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I rise to a question of order. It is now midnight, and I insist that the opinion of Thomas H. Benton on this subject is correct and sound, that whenever the time limited for the existence of Congress has arrived Congress has no further power to legislate, Congress cannot, by its mere failure to adjourn, be continued beyond the time fixed by law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The existence of this Congress will expire, by constitutional limitation, at twelve o'clock on the 4th of March.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House do now take a recess for one hour.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend by taking a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I would agree to that amendment if I thought it would carry, and if it would not interrupt public business.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that no motion will be made to take a recess until after the miscellaneous appropriation bill shall be returned from the Senate and acted on. When that bill is returned and acted on I think the House may take a recess.

Mr. MALLORY. I withdraw my amendment. The question was taken on Mr. RANDALL's motion, and it was rejected.

NAVAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. GRISWOLD asked unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs a joint resolution in relation to naval contracts for the supply of provisions or materials.

Mr. SCOFIELD objected.

MINNESOTA LAND GRANTS.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the Senate amendment to the act (H. R. No. 761) extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the rules be suspended.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WINDOM and COFFROTH were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 31.

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 37, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Ashley, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Hale, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knapp, Le Blond, Longyear, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, James H. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Norton, Odell, Orth, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Perry, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Scott, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Ward, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Worthington—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, John D. Baldwin, Chanler, Cobb, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Finck, Grider, Holman, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kelley, Long, Mallory, Marcy, Middleton, William H. Miller, Morrill, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Samuel J. Randall, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Elihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Winfield, and Woodbridge—37.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Blair, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Clay, Henry Winter Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, Griswold, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Hutchins, Jenckes, Julian, Knox, Law, Lazear, Littlejohn, Loan, McDowell, Melndoe, McKimney, Pike, Prynne, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Shannon, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Townsend, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Webster, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—51.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended; and the amendment was taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN called for the reading of the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read. It was in the nature of a substitute for the bill of the House, and provides for granting to the State of Minnesota ten alternate sections of public land per mile within twenty miles of the line of railroads for which previous grants had been made, &c.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The question was upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the amendment of the Senate; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of its clerks, announced to the House that the Senate insisted upon their amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department, and agree to the conference asked by the House; and that the Senate have appointed Messrs. MORGAN, SPRAGUE, and POWELL on the part of the Senate.

TRADE WITH REBELLIOUS STATES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Speaker's table the Senate amendments to the House bill repealing the eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864, in regard to the cotton trade.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate.

The question was taken, and the rules were suspended.

The amendments of the Senate were as follows: Add to the first section the words "of the agents of the Government."

Add to the bill the following additional sections:
Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all cotton seized by the military or naval authorities, or surrendered to said authorities, shall be delivered to the officers of the Treasury, and vouchers shall be given to the owner of such cotton, entitling such owner or claimant personally to receive payment for such cotton at the end of the war, less taxes and expenses, in bonds of the United States, bearing six per cent. interest, redeemable in twenty years.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall pass, alter, publish, or sell, or attempt to pass, alter, publish, or sell, any note, token, device, scrip, bond, or other evidence of debt of the so-called Confederate States, or any one of them, issued since the 1st of January, 1861, he or they shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, and by imprisonment and confinement at hard labor not exceeding ten years, at the discretion of the court, according to the aggravation of the offense.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the amendments of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HASTINGS.

Mr. HALE. I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the bill (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburgh, to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was taken up, and the question was upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that a motion was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to lay this bill on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I withdraw my motion.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

LUCIEN ANDERSON.

Mr. SMITH, from the select committee in the case of Hon. LUCIEN ANDERSON, made a report, with accompanying testimony, which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also the following resolution:

Resolved, That the charges of bribery, corruption, and malfeasance in office, against Hon. LUCIEN ANDERSON, a member of this House, are not sustained by the proof in the case.

Mr. SMITH. I will say that this report is signed by every member of the committee except the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. STUART], who was not present at any of its meetings, and desired me to say that he did not sign the report because he did not know anything about it. I now move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] to withdraw his call for the previous question until I can ask him a question in relation to the action of this committee.

Mr. SMITH. I will withdraw for a question.

Mr. MALLORY. I want to have read at the Clerk's desk a paper which I now hold in my hand, being the statement of Colonel Brown, of the State of Kentucky, in the service of the United States; and to inquire of the gentleman—

Mr. SMITH. I did not withdraw to have any paper read.

Mr. MALLORY. I want to base my question on that paper, and to ask why that paper was not received by the committee.

Mr. SMITH. My colleague [Mr. MALLORY] asked me to allow him to propound a question, and I withdrew the call for the previous question for that purpose only; instead of asking a question he sends a paper to the Clerk's desk to be read. I must resume the floor, and insist upon the previous question.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman intend to suppress any evidence?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir, I do not. The deposition of Colonel Brown has been taken, and is among the evidence reported from the committee. The previous question was seconded.

The question was upon ordering the main question.

Upon this question there were, on a division—yeas 65, noes 9; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER appointed Messrs. SMITH and MALLORY to act as tellers.

Mr. MALLORY. I prefer to be excused from acting as teller.

Mr. SMITH. As my colleague [Mr. MALLORY] has declined to act as teller, I would also decline acting.

The SPEAKER appointed Messrs. BROOMALL, and O'NEILL of Ohio, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 68, noes 2; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the 31st rule.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"Every member who shall be in the House when the question is put shall give his vote unless the House shall excuse him. All motions to excuse a member from voting shall be made before the House divides, or before the call of the yeas and nays is commenced."

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests gentlemen who have not voted to conform to the rules which they themselves have made and required the Chair to enforce.

The tellers continued the count; and reported—noes eighteen; no quorum yet voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again appeals to gentlemen to obey the rule. The rule states specifically that members who desire to be excused from voting must be excused before the House divides. If members do not obey the rules they bring them into contempt.

Mr. BROOKS. The difficulty is that we do not know how to vote; we have no knowledge of the evidence.

Mr. ASHLEY. Does that excuse the gentleman from New York for violating the rules?

Mr. BROOKS. Well, enforce the rules. It is nothing new for members to decline to vote. I have known it to be done a hundred times.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If there is not a quorum I move a call of the House.

The tellers, having continued the count, reported—yeas 67, noes 26.

So the main question was ordered.

The question recurred on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PRUYN. If it is in order now, I desire to ask to be excused from voting, and on that question I wish to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. MALLORY. I demand the reading of the evidence on which the report is based. How can I vote upon the report of a committee without knowing what is the evidence?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. PRUYN. I think it unfair on the part of gentlemen on the other side not to permit that document to be read.

The question on excusing Mr. PRUYN from voting was decided in the negative.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed in part to the report of the committee of conference on bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, had insisted on its first amendment proposed to be amended by the House, asked a new committee of conference, and had appointed Messrs. HARRIS, HOWE, and WILLEY, to be managers of such conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House insist, and appoint a new committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

LUCIEN ANDERSON—AGAIN.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] a question.

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH. I cannot agree to answer any question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does the gentleman refuse to answer a question? Then he dodges.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the whole subject be laid on the table.

Mr. C. A. WHITE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 5, nays 83, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Denison, Ingersoll, and William Johnson—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Baile, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Eldridge, Eliot, Frank, Goelet, Grinnell, Hale, Higby, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John B. Hubbard, Hulburd, Philip Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, King, Longyear, Marcy, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Charles O'Neill, Perham, Perry, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, John B. Steele, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wadley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilker, Wilson, Windom, and Worthington—83.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Brundage, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, English, Fairusworth, Fluck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Griswold, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hutchins, Jencks, Julian, Kahlfeisch, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, Knapp, Knox, Law, Leazar, Le Bond, Littlejohn, Loan, Leaz, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, Melndoe, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pendleton, Pike, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Scott, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Townsend, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—94.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted.
Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.
The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, William G. Brown, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, Garfield, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hutchins, Julian, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Knapp, Knox, Law, Lazear, Littlejohn, Loan, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, Morrill, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Wadsworth, Webster, Whaley, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has now answered.

Mr. WILSON moved that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.
Mr. LEBLOND, by unanimous consent, withdrew his motion to lay on the table.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 29, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, James S. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Hale, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel P. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—79.

NAVS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Chamler, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Grider, Herrick, William Johnson, Kaibfleisch, Knapp, Mallory, Murry, McKinney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Noble, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Stiles, Strouse, Sweat, Townsend, and Ward—29.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blaine, Blair, Bottwell, Brooks, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Daves, Dawson, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Griswold, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hotelkiss, Hutchins, Jencks, Philip Johnson, Julian, Keran, King, Knox, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Long, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, Morrison, Orth, Perry, Pike, Price, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Spalding, Starr, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stuart, Thomas, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Webster, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—75.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the call of the roll,
Mr. MALLORY, (when his name was called.) I ask leave to be excused from voting, and I wish to state briefly to the House the reasons.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in the chair.) The rule expressly declares that all motions to be excused from voting must be made before the call of the roll is commenced.

Mr. MALLORY. May I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll is being called and the proceeding cannot be interrupted.

At the conclusion of the call, but before the result was announced,

Mr. MALLORY said: I again ask to be excused from voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order now to ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. MALLORY. I appeal to the House to be excused from voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is acting under the previous question, and no debate is in order.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing of that kind is in order now.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The result has not yet been announced.

The result was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. SMITH. I move to reconsider the vote last taken; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and the result was being announced, when—

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a point of order. It is that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Brown] distinctly, and in the hearing of the whole House, made the motion to reconsider before any other gentleman rose.

The SPEAKER. It is well known to the House that the mover of a resolution has the right to make the motion before anybody else.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I rise to a point of order. It is that the Speaker did not, so as to be heard by the House, state the proposition made by the gentleman who proposed to reconsider and lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated the proposition very distinctly, and took the vote upon it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. After the yeas and nays are ordered it is too late to withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order to withdraw the motion at any time before action is taken upon it.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill of the House (No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties on foreign importations, reported that the committee, having met, after a full and free conference had agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses that the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered one, two, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, and fourteen, and agree to the same; that the Senate recede from their amendments numbered three, five and a half, twelve, and thirteen; that the House recede from their disagreement to the fourth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "on iron bars for railroads or inclined planes ten cents per hundred pounds;" that the House recede from their disagreement to the fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out "two and a half cents" and insert in lieu thereof "one cent."

The report was signed by Messrs. STEVENS, Cox, and GRISWOLD, managers on the part of the House; and by Messrs. CLARK, HENDRICKS, and FARWELL, managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS. There were but two amendments in which the House was particularly interested; one was in reference to the duty on railroad iron. The House had fixed that at fifteen cents per hundred pounds. The Senate struck it out. We believed it would be impossible to carry the bill unless we modified what the House had done in that respect. We therefore modified it by reducing the duty to ten cents per hundred pounds.

The Senate also added an amendment imposing a duty of two and a half cents per pound on wrought-iron tubes. That was reduced to one cent per pound.

I think these are the only material amendments. I do not suppose there is any necessity for saying anything further, and therefore I call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the report on the table.

There being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 76, Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House refused to lay the report on the table. The report was then agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 761) extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the States of Minnesota and Iowa, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

CONSOLIDATION OF INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. ASHLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the Senate bill to provide for the consolidation of Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory.

Mr. SHANNON. I object.

MILITARY MATTERS.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on joint resolution No. 170, and the several amendments thereto, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House joint resolution No. 170, and the several amendments thereto, having met, after full and free conference do agree and recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the Senate recede from the ninth section of its amendment.
2. That the House recede from its disagreement to the tenth section of the Senate amendment.
3. That the Senate recede from the eleventh section of its amendment.
4. That the Senate recede from the twelfth and thirteenth sections of its amendment.
5. That the House recede from the ninth section of its amendment.
6. That the House recede from its tenth amendment.
7. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the eleventh amendment of the House.
8. That the committee agree upon the following substitute for the twelfth section of the House amendment: "And be it further enacted, That the bounty of $100 provided by present laws to be paid to the heirs of volunteers killed in battle shall be extended to the widow, if living, or, if she be dead, to the children, of any volunteer who shall have been or may be killed in the service, whether he shall have enlisted for two years or a less period of time."
9. That the committee agree upon the following substitute for the thirteenth section of the House amendment: "And be it further resolved, That in case any officer of the military or naval service who may be hereafter dismissed by authority of the President shall make an application in writing for a trial, setting forth under oath that he has been wrongfully and unjustly dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the public service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he was dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not award dismissal, or death, as the punishment of such officer the order of dismissal shall be void; and if the court-martial aforesaid shall not be convened for the trial of such officer within six months from the presentation of his application for trial, the sentence of dismissal shall be void."
10. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth sections of the House amendment.
11. That the House recede from the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth sections of its amendment.
12. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, thirtieth, and thirty-first sections of the House amendment.
13. That the House recede from the thirty-second section of its amendment.
14. That the committee agree to the following title to the joint resolution: "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes."

HENRY WILSON,

J. M. HOWARD,

C. R. BUCKALEW,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. GARFIELD,

M. F. ODELL,

G. W. SCOFIELD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the previous question on the report, and pending that I will state very briefly what its substance is. The history of this legislation is this: The House passed, a few days ago, a joint resolution defining the pay of officers' servants. That joint resolution went to the Senate, and in its place a bill of thirteen sections was substituted. The House took that bill of thirteen sections, adopted the first eight, cut off the remaining five, and added twenty-three sections of its own. The bill thus amended, having thirty-one sections, went over to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to the House amendments, and a committee of conference was appointed.

There were thirty points of difference between the two Houses. On these thirty points the House receded from six; the Senate receded from twenty-two; and in place of the two others substitutes were agreed on by the committee. I will only mention the points on which the House receded and the two modified sections as being of interest to us.

First, in reference to bounties. The House section was modified so that bounties should be paid to the heirs of soldiers who were killed in battle, though they had not served two years; and such bounties should only go to their widow, or, if there be no widow, to their children, but shall not go to the legal heirs generally. The Senate refused to agree with the House amendment repealing section seventeen of the act of July 17, 1862, authorizing the President summarily to dismiss officers from the Army, Navy, or Marine corps. But the managers of the conference on the part of the House proposed a substitute for the repealing section, by which the power of dismissal is limited and regulated. The President may still dismiss an officer, but he is required, on application setting forth under oath that the dismissal was unjust, to order a trial of the officer by court-martial on the charges on which he was dismissed. If such trial is not had within six months after the application is made, the dismissal is made void. It will probably result from this amendment that no officer will be dismissed unless upon such charges, believed to be such, as would warrant a court-martial in doing the same. The managers on the part of the House believed that this section will in the main remedy the evil complained of.

In the next place the section of the House amendment to provide for the transfer of officers from one corps to another, from one arm of the service to another, and from the volunteer service to the regular service, the House recede from.

The motion in regard to declaring foreigners liable to draft, the House recede from, it being of doubtful constitutionality.

The section in regard to increasing the pay of provost marshals and enrolling officers the House recede from.

The section in regard to substitute brokers being authorized by the Secretary of War, the House recede from, believing that in other sections of the bill the country is sufficiently protected from the evils of the substitute broker system.

The last section of the bill, in regard to mustering out enlisted men who went into the service to fill up old regiments, we receded from, not, however, until we were satisfied that the Senate could not be induced to recede from their position, although adhering might involve the failure of the whole bill. The managers on the part of the Senate said that the Secretary of War had informed them that if this provision were adopted it would take forty-five thousand men immediately from the field, and thus very much impair the efficiency of the Army on the eve of a great campaign. In view of all the circumstances, the committee recommend that the House recede from that amendment. The House has put itself upon record in regard to that question, and has done all it can to show its position upon this subject. The House will bear witness that I have done all in my power, and have persisted almost to an unreasonable degree, in securing the passage of this measure. But I hope the House will not do anything to impede or jeopardize the passage of this bill, and I am satisfied that it will fail if we longer persist in demanding the adoption of this section.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not adopt this report striking out the section in reference to discharging the recruits from old regiments who went into the service with the promise that they should be discharged from service with the regiment. I hope that section will not be stricken out.

Mr. GRINNELL. I have a duty to discharge to my people which I have had no opportunity to—

Mr. GARFIELD. It is too late to make up the record now. I call the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will my colleague withdraw that motion for a moment?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will do so, certainly.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to make but a single remark on behalf of the Military Committee. The committee earnestly desire to have these men mustered out of service; and so with regard to the other matters. But it is a question of agreeing to this report upon the committee of conference or losing the whole bill. I wish the House to understand that in this bill is pretty much the whole military legislation of the session; everything relating to the enrollment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say that twenty-eight of the points of difference have been receded from by the Senate and conceded to the House, and I venture to say that it very rarely happens, where so many differences were involved, that one House gets so large a portion. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The question was upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 57, not voting 54; as follows:—

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, King, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McAllister, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Rice, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—71.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cravens, Dawson, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Farnsworth, Finck, Grinnell, Hale, Charles M. Harris, Herriek, Holman, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Francis W. Kellogg, Knapp, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McKinney, William H. Miller, James K. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Norton, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Tracy, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, and Chilton A. White—57.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blaine, Blair, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Clay, Cox, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Eden, Frank, Ganson, Grider, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Hooper, Hutchins, William Johnson, Julian, Kernan, Knox, Law, Lazear, Loan, McBride, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, Daniel Morris, Pruyn, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweat, Thayer, Thomas, Townsend, Wadsworth, Webster, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—54.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the motion.

REMISSION OF ABSENTEES' FINES.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That all fines and fees imposed by the House on members for being absent without leave during the recent call of the House be, and the same are hereby, remitted.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

LEGISLATURE OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Territories Senate bill entitled "An act amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory." This bill simply allows the Legislature to meet biennially, instead of annually, by which the Government will save some thousands of dollars.

There was no objection; and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of H. A. Brigham; also in the case of Major Love. Leave was granted.

WAGON ROADS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I move to take from the Speaker's table bill S. No. 472, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain wagon roads in the Territories of Idaho, Montana, Dakota, and Nebraska."

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time. The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN MICHIGAN AND WISCONSIN.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate amendments to bill H. R. No. 710, entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of certain railroads to which land grants have been made in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin."

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering Senate amendments to this bill.

On agreeing to the motion there were, on a division—ayes 58, noes 32.

Mr. SLOAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Sloan and HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SLOAN demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDITION OF INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. WINDOM. I rise to a privileged question. I present the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its first and second amendments.

That the Senate concur in the third amendment of the House.

JAMES R. DOOLITTLE,
B. GRATZ BROWN,
JAMES HARLAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM WINDOM,
PHILIP JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. WINDOM. I will take but a moment to explain these amendments. The Senate passed a resolution appointing a committee to investigate our Indian affairs. The House amended that so as to provide for a commission. The House recedes from that amendment. The second amendment provided for extending the investigation to Indian superintendents and agents, and in that the Senate concur. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, moved that the report be laid on the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARCLAY'S DIGEST.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, (in view of the numerous and material amendments made to the rules at the present Congress.) That John M. Barclay be authorized to furnish a new edition of his Digest for the use of the House of Representatives at the next Congress, to embrace such amendments, and decisions of questions of order, &c., to the close of the present Congress; the same to be furnished in the same manner and on the same terms as heretofore; and that the surplus copies of said Digest, Rules, and Manual now on hand in the Clerk's office be furnished to members of the present House for distribution.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. BROWN.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted a report in the case of John P. Brown; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF COAL LANDS, ETC.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 380, supplemental to an act approved July 1, 1864, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property on the public domain.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Would it be in order to move that we dispose of the balance of the public lands? If it would I think that gentleman should make that motion.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. At the rate at which we have been proceeding, I do not think there will, after this session, be any public lands left to dispose of.

Mr. COX. I am opposed to the bill, and should like to give some reasons why it should not pass.

Mr. HIGBY moved to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. COLE, of California. I ask to offer an amendment. The bill ought not to pass in its present form. I wish to amend by excluding San Francisco from the operation of the bill.

Mr. HIGBY. I cannot yield for that purpose. Mr. COLE, of California. Under the bill as it now is a single person may claim a hundred or a thousand acres in a town or city and hold it if he has so much in possession. I protest against the bill as it is, and hope the previous question will not be sustained.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, moved that the bill be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. HIGBY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAVIS of New York, and HIGBY, were appointed.

Mr. SHANNON. The Commissioner of Public Lands is in favor of this bill, and so is the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COLE, of California. If he has made such recommendation where is it? Let it be read.

The House was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 60.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COLE, of California, demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 34.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. BRUCE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution which is concurred in by the Committee of Elections. It is simply for the purpose of correcting an error that occurred last session.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives pay out of the contingent fund to John P. Bruce, contestant of the right of BENJAMIN F. LOAN to a seat in the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the seventh congressional district of Missouri, the salary of a member of Congress, without mileage, from the 4th of March, 1863, to the 7th of December, 1863.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. I object. Mr. VOORHEES. It was supposed that this was done last session; but it was not done. This resolution was concurred in by the Committee of Elections after the matter was inquired into, and it was considered as a matter of actual justice.

Mr. UPSON. So far as I know, the Committee of Elections have not concurred in the resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. It was concurred in by a majority of the committee.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. I object to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. All I have to say is, that I present it from the Committee of Elections, and I call upon the chairman of the committee to sustain me in what I have stated.

Mr. FRANK. This whole matter was settled at the last session of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. The gentleman is mistaken. The resolution is not for the purpose of getting more money for the contestant than he ought to have.

Mr. SCHENCK. The resolution, I understand, is not before the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the gentleman allow me a word? I do not want to be placed in the attitude of reporting a resolution from the committee which does not emanate from them. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPSON] says he does not concur in this resolution. That may be so; yet it may be the act of the Committee of Elections.

Mr. UPSON. I stated that so far as I knew the Committee of Elections have not concurred in that resolution. So far as I know, the committee have never acted upon it at all.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I will state that while I do not understand that there has been any formal action of the committee, yet I do understand that a majority of the committee have assented to the resolution as reported, and upon the ground that former Congresses have established a precedent by which they have given not only full pay, but have given persons contesting seats compensation for their expenses in getting up testimony.

Mr. UPSON. Does the gentleman understand that the resolution has been considered in the committee at all?

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I do not understand that there was any formal meeting of the committee on it, but that the individual members assented to it.

Mr. UPSON. I heard a report that such was the case, and I went around to the members of the committee, and every one of them disavowed it.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is well known that I have been absent almost the entire session, and it is well known that it has been on account of painful circumstances connected with my family. Now, I may be wrong in this matter, but I have been informed upon what I considered reliable testimony that a majority of the committee have concurred in the correctness of this report. If that is not so I am wrong. I am not able, of course, to make any point with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPSON] based on my own knowledge. I think the resolution does simple justice, and simply what the House intended to do last session. They intended to give this contestant the pay of a member of Congress, and no mileage. They have gone heretofore so far as to give a contestant the salary of a member and mileage and the expenses incurred in contesting; and I have numerous cases at hand showing that fact. This proposition is to pay the salary while contesting, and no mileage.

Mr. UPSON. I must raise a point of order. There is no resolution before the House, and this debate is not in order.

Mr. FRANK. If I understand this matter this contestant received compensation at the rate of $3,000 a year from the time the session commenced until he left the House. Not only that, but he received, I think, about a thousand dollars mileage, the same as the members of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I will say that at the last session this matter was referred to the Committee of Elections, under the rule, and when it came into my hands the committee were called together for the purpose of hearing the contestant within two or three weeks after the matter was referred. I do not recollect the exact date. But I was not able to get a quorum of the committee, and the gentleman proposed to present his claim to those of the committee that were present, and he did so. He did not satisfy those of the committee present, and he asked the privilege of presenting his claim to the other members of the committee as best he could in the last days of the session. What he did with the other members of the committee I do not know. I only know as to the views of those who were present. He informed me, after seeing the other members of the committee, that he had the consent of a majority of the committee to present it to the House.

Now, I will tell the House just what he claims. When the contest was decided, the committee introduced a resolution giving him his mileage and the ordinary compensation from the commencement of the session until the day the case was disposed of; and that he was allowed and paid. He thinks that he ought to have compensation from the 4th of March down to the beginning of the session. For that time he received no compensation. The resolution reported by the Committee of Elections was the same as reported by the committee on all other cases. His claim is that he was put to a good deal of expense in the contest, and that it is but right he should have the compensation for the vacation that preceded. That is the claim which he presented to the committee at this session.

Mr. SCHENCK. If I understand the proposition, it is this: this gentleman, not having been elected, wants his pay to relate back to the time when he would have been elected if he had been. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. The resolution reported by the committee was adopted, and he was paid his mileage and compensation from the first of the session to the day the case was decided.

Mr. UPSON. The chairman of the committee says that I was informed by the contestant that a majority of the committee assented to this resolution. I ask him if he was not subsequently informed that the members of the committee were seen, and that a majority of them disavowed any such thing.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Michigan informed me so afterward.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I was informed that a majority of the committee had concurred.

Mr. VOORHEES. In response to a suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] I desire to say that I have numerous precedents, extending over many years, which justify this claim, where the House has uniformly paid contestants in accordance with the principle claimed here. I have precedent after precedent where pay was made, with mileage, and even where the House has paid for the expenses of the contestant. The House can do just as it deems right about it, and I will be content. But as objection has been made, I will be constrained to move the previous question, to test the question.

Mr. SMITHERS. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether, at the hearing of the resolution to which he has referred, every member of the committee who was present was not unanimous against the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I believe that is correct.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I wish to say that I was there, and I never heard of that circumstance before.

Mr. VOORHEES. Do I understand the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be that there was a majority of the committee against the resolution?

Mr. DAWES. No, sir. I say we did not get a quorum of the committee. The gentleman presented his case to those who were there. The gentleman from Delaware inquired what was the conclusion of that minority. It was that they all thought that the rule laid down last session was a proper one.

Mr. VOORHEES. Well, of course that is not the action of the committee.

Mr. SMITHERS. There never was any other action of the committee.

The question being on the motion to suspend the rules, it was not agreed to, two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

DISQUALIFICATION OF DESERTERS.

Mr. ALLISON asked leave to report from the Committee on Public Lands a bill (H. R.

No. 604.) to prevent deserters and others therein named from acquiring public lands under the preemption and homestead laws.

Mr. LE BLOND objected.

Mr. ALLISON moved to suspend the rules.

The motion was not agreed to, two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

SAMUEL COLEMAN.

Mr. ODELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported by unanimous consent a joint resolution for the relief of Samuel Coleman, heir-at-law of William Dean Coleman, deceased, which was read a first and second time.

The question being on its third reading,

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I should like to have an explanation of the joint resolution from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ODELL. The facts of the case are simply these. This man was in the service of the United States but was not mustered in. He was killed in the battle of Corinth. The Government owes his father, a poor man living in my district, about six hundred dollars. I have examined the case and have been at the War Department in reference to it. It has the recommendation of Generals Rosecrans and Stanley, on whose staff this officer was killed.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ODELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORADO TERRITORY.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask leave to report from the Committee on Public Lands a bill (H. R. No. 702) in relation to preemption rights in Colorado Territory.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. DRIGGS. I move to suspend the rules so as to enable the committee to report the bill for action at this time. It proposes nothing but the application of the preemption law to the Territory of Colorado.

The motion was agreed to, and the rules were suspended.

The bill was reported from the committee, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

STOCKBRIDGE, WISCONSIN.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 558) to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAIL POUCHES.

Mr. COLE, of California. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) to purchase mail pouches and boxes, of Marshall Smith's patent, for the postal service, and for other purposes.

This is for the purpose of allowing the Postmaster General to use an invention of Mr. Smith, boxes and pouches, in place of the old leathern bags, for carrying the mail. By using this invention, postmasters and post agents will be enabled to assort the letters and have them ready for delivery earlier at the stations where they are to be delivered. It has been recommended by the Post Office Committee of the Senate and by the Post Office Committee of the House. I think it can meet with no objection.

No objection was made.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLE, of California, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

REMISSION OF FEES AND FINES.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That all fines and fees imposed by the House on members for being absent without leave during the recent call of the House be, and the same are hereby, remitted.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon a bill (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department.

I will, with the leave of the House, explain this subject. This bill is for the reorganization of the subsistence department. It provides that commissaries of subsistence shall have increased rank temporarily, as their responsibility is increased by being assigned to duty at principal depots, to armies in the field, military departments and divisions. The matter of dispute between the two Houses was this: the bill as passed by the House provided that these assignments should be made only from commissaries of the volunteer forces. The Senate amended the bill so as to require that two thirds of them only should be taken from the volunteers. There are twenty-nine officers in the regular subsistence department, those who are considered attached to the regular Army, while there are five hundred and fourteen officers of subsistence among the volunteers.

The question has been compromised by the committee of conference, so that the assignment shall be made in proportion to the numbers respectively in service in each force. This will give the increased rank to the volunteers in the proportion of about seventeen to one in the regular subsistence department. To this compromise we ask the House to agree, as the Senate has already done.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. Has there been any amendment made to this bill in which both Houses have concurred?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir. There was an amendment made by the Senate to which the House disagreed, and upon which the Senate insisted. The House insisted upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and asked for a committee of conference, to which the Senate agreed. The proviso to which I have referred was the only subject considered by the committee of conference.

I move the adoption of the report, and call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

ENROLLMENT OF NATIONAL FORCES.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 408) entitled "An act in addition to the several acts for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," and that the bill be laid on the table. The House has already acted upon another bill on this subject.

The motion was agreed to.

THANKS TO MAJOR GENERAL THOMAS.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate amendment to joint resolution H. R. No. 139, giving a vote of thanks to Major General Thomas, have directed me to report it back with a recommendation that the House do not agree to that amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was not agreed to.

DEBORAH JONES.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Deborah Jones, that they may be sent to the Pension Office.

Leave was granted.

REPORT ON FLAX AND HEMP.

Mr. A. W. CLARK, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That thirty thousand extra copies of the report of the commission on flax and hemp be printed for the use of the members of this House, and five thousand copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

AMENDATORY INTERNAL REVENUE ACT.

Mr. A. W. CLARK also reported from the Committee on Printing the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, twenty thousand copies of the act amending the internal revenue laws, including an index, be printed as amended, with all the amendments incorporated into the text, so far as practicable, and with the new sections thereto annexed, with an index and marginal notes.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1863.

Mr. A. W. CLARK also reported from the Committee on Printing the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Department of Agriculture, five thousand extra copies of the Agricultural Report for 1863.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What need is there for printing these five thousand extra copies?

Mr. A. W. CLARK. The Commissioner of Agriculture, at this early day, finds himself entirely without any of these reports.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. So do we.

Mr. A. W. CLARK. The Commissioner of Agriculture asks for this extra number that he may supply the correspondents who are constantly calling upon him for copies of this document.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "Department of Agriculture," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "members of this House;" so that the clause will read, "for the use of the members of this House."

Mr. A. W. CLARK. If that amendment should be made, I trust that the resolution will be rejected, because a sufficient number of copies are already provided for the members of this House.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. A. W. CLARK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted on their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 653) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866."

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on joint resolution S. No. 389, directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities.

VIRGINIA MILITARY DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on Public Lands, House bill No. 812, which has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, entitled "An act allowing the further time of five years to those holding lands by entries in the Virginia military district of Ohio, which were made prior to the 1st of January, 1852, to have the same surveyed and patented." I move that it be now considered.

There was no objection, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

D. FITZGERALD AND J. BALL.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Patents a bill (S.

No. 244) entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel Fitzgerald and Jonathan Ball."

Mr. DAWES. I object.

Mr. JENCKES. I move to suspend the rules. The motion was not agreed to.

E. W. BARBER.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House pay to E. W. Barber, assistant reading clerk, out of the contingent fund of the House, such sum as may be necessary to give him the full amount of his present annual compensation from the commencement of the first session of the present Congress.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, (at five minutes to four o'clock a. m.) I move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels it to be his duty to state that if the House takes a recess now two of the appropriation bills will probably be lost.

The motion was disagreed to.

DISBURSING CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BROOMALL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the salary of the chief or disbursing clerk of the House of Representatives be, and the same is hereby, increased to $3,000 per annum, and that of the assistant disbursing clerk to $2,500 per annum, beginning with the present Congress.

Objection was made.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing that resolution.

Mr. GRINNELL. I do not yield for that purpose.

CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerks of committees of this House, not receiving an annual salary, shall be allowed a sum per diem for the time actually employed, commencing with the present session of Congress, equal to that allowed to clerks of committees of the Senate.

Mr. FRANK objected.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. GRINNELL moved to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved to take a recess for one hour.

The motion was disagreed to.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The House proceeded to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

The first business was Senate concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States to transmit to the Executives of the several States the amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States, respecting the extinction of slavery therein.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 38.

So the resolution was concurred in.

REBEL DEBT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate concurrent resolution against any recognition of the rebel debt or loan under any circumstances.

The resolution was concurred in.

DUTY ON PRINTING PAPER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was House joint resolution No. 141, reducing the duty on printing paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to concur in the Senate amendment, and demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line four strike out "three" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" so that it will read, "there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of fifteen per cent. ad valorem."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 64.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 67, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, Cobb, Cole, Driggs, Eden, Eliot, English, Garfield, Grinnell, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kernan, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Morrison, Norton, Odell, Orth, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, John B. Steele, Stuart, Townsend, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, and Wilder—53.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Bliss, Boutwell, Broomall, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Edgerton, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Ganson, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, William Johnson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Le Blond, Long, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, McKinney, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Noble, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Pike, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scott, Smithers, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Thayer, Tracy, Voorhees, William B. Washburn, Chilton A. White, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—67.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Anderson, Blaine, Blair, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Clay, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hooper, Hutchins, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knapp, Knox, Law, Lazear, Littlejohn, Loan, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, Nelson, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweat, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Ward, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—62.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Upon that motion I call the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 63, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Baily, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Higby, John H. Hubbard, Jenckes, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Shannon, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Woodbridge, and Worthington—46.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Ancona, Arnold, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Cobb, Cravens, Dixon, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grinnell, Charles M. Harris, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Kernan, Le Blond, Long, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, McKinney, James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Price, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Elihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—63.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Cole, Cox, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Frank, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knapp, Knox, Law, Lazear, Littlejohn, Loan, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, Nelson, Perry, Radford, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweat, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—73.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement, and ask a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the eighth section of an act entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. THAYER, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1866, reported that the committee, having met, after full and free conference had been unable to agree.

The report was signed by Messrs. THAYER, D. MORRIS, and KERNAN, managers on the part of the House; and by Messrs. HARRIS, HOWE, and WILLEY, managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. THAYER. The House will remember that the disagreement between the two Houses occurred upon the amendment of the Senate, striking out the proviso added to the bill by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] in regard to the Illinois Central railroad. The difference, Mr. Speaker, in opinion upon this question seems to me to be chiefly a difference in the construction of the law which is supposed to impose upon the Illinois Central Railroad Company the duty of transporting the troops and other property of the United States over their road free of charge. With a view to settling this disagreement in some manner which will save the decision of this important question of law upon which the proviso hinges, I will move that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment with the following amendment:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be used for the purpose of paying the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the transportation of the property or troops of the United States: And provided further, That in case it shall be adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States that the Illinois Central Railroad Company are not bound by the act of Congress, approved September 20, 1850, to transport the property and troops of the United States free of charge, then, and in that case, this provision shall be null and void; and for the purpose of enabling the said company to obtain a judgment of the said court upon the said question the said company are hereby authorized to bring a suit against the United States in the circuit court of the United States in the eighth circuit, to recover compensation for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States carried by said company, and the judgment of said circuit court of the United States may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon appeal or writ of error, as now provided by law in other cases; and the Attorney General of the United States is hereby required to appear for the United States in said suit, and defend its interest therein.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a question of so much importance, and involves such large interests to the Government, that we should make at least one more effort to put the question between the two Houses in a course of adjudication. I do not think that this House, unless it becomes absolutely necessary for the safety of this important bill, should abandon an attempt, at least, to enforce the contract which this company voluntarily assumed when it accepted this grant of land. The amendment which I have proposed in lieu of that which was stricken out by the Senate is simply a provision that will put this great and important question in a train for final adjudication by the highest judicial tribunal of the country. I cannot see that either of the parties to this important controversy can, with any degree of justice, object to this. And I hope that before we abandon the assertion of what I consider an important principle we will at any rate make one more effort to secure the interests and the rights of the Government as contemplated when this grant was made.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not believe that the adoption of this amendment would change the result in the committee of conference, and therefore we should not lose time upon it. It seems to me that unless we are to endanger the bill we should have a vote as to whether the House will not recede from its amendment. I do not think that any further conference, so far as I can judge, will reconcile the views of the two Houses on this amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 274) for the relief of John Hastings, collector of the port of Pittsburg;

An act (S. No. 380) supplemental to the act approved 1st July, 1864, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property on the public domain;

Joint resolution (S. No. 89) directing inquiry into the condition of the Indian tribes, and their treatment by the civil and military authorities; and Joint resolution (S. No. 121) to purchase mail pouches or boxes, of Marshall Smith's patent, for the postal service, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment we have pursued this controversy as long as it is profitable. The proposed legislation is on a bill which ought to be free from any sort of legislation that might endanger its passage. In my judgment these provisos attached to appropriation bills are at all times objectionable, and at such a time as this more objectionable than at any other. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] is to submit this as a question of law to be decided by the courts. Technically the law may or may not be on our side; but do we want a lawsuit of this sort? Ought we not rather to permit the Executive Departments to do what is honorable and just?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to the judgment of every member of the House whether, if he had a contract of this kind with any of his neighbors, he would feel that he could, in honor, enforce it. I am not disposed to assert but that the law may be on our side. But no one supposed at the time of the grant to this railroad that we were to have a war which would monopolize its whole capacity and absorb its entire revenues in performing the business of the Government. The road can afford to be liberal with us, but we cannot afford to pursue it and its stockholders regardless of national reputation at home as well as abroad. "It is the letter of the law that killeth and the spirit that maketh alive." What we ought to do in this case I am not quite prepared to say. But to say that the managers of this road have not evinced a spirit of fairness would be, I think, saying too much. They have allowed the entire use of their property, and have furnished men, and paid out their money, for the benefit of the Government. And yet they are willing to take one third less than the Government is willing to pay to any other road for similar services. Under these circumstances I do not think that it is to our credit to push this thing too far.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this matter, unless we can have speedy action on this bill we are certainly in some danger of losing the bill. It is the Army bill, and ought to pass at once. I shall move that the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate. The judgment of the Senate is at least as much against the provision as that of the House is for it. I hope it will be believed on the part of all members of the House that, whatever they may think of the merits of the question itself, we have pushed the controversy as far as it is profitable.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I had supposed, Mr. Speaker, that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] offered this proposition it would be received in a spirit of compromise and without any objection from gentlemen who have been opposed to the original proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON.] The position that was taken was that under the law this railroad company is entitled to be paid. I did not suppose that anybody, particularly my friend on the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] would come in and present this railroad company in forma pauperis, because I have shown to the gentleman from Vermont that this company has made by the war more than it would have made had there been no war. I think this has been fully demonstrated by me in remarks heretofore made by me on this subject.

And now, sir, the only question for us to decide is this: whether we shall have this question fairly and justly adjudicated, that we may know what are the rights of the Government and what are the rights of the road; and I would ask, what is the objection to letting the courts pass upon this question? There is no force in the point which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has urged, that we have not the time to consider this matter now. We have yet seven hours before this session closes. I have seen the most important bills that could possibly be considered by Congress settled by committees of conference in the very last hours of the session. There certainly ought to be no doubt whatever that if we adopt this provision presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] the Senate will concur in it. Let the House adopt this amendment, and it will settle the question not only in regard to this road, but all the other roads. Let me state to gentlemen in States which have land-grant roads that it is important to them to have this question settled.

It is proposed to settle this controversy by the action of the judicial tribunals. I trust that this House will not recede from its position; that this railroad shall not be permitted to go into the Senate of the United States and demand nearly a million dollars before this appropriation bill should be allowed to pass. That is what it amounts to. This railroad goes there in the Senate and says, "Unless you give us this bounty of so much money, we will allow the bill to be defeated." I trust the House is ready to vote upon this question, and therefore I call the previous question.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Will the gentleman withdraw that call for the present?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will do so.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I understand the argument of my friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to rest upon two grounds. And it seems to me that the first and most important one with him is that when he travels between local stations on the Illinois Central railroad they charge him seven cents per mile. With that I have nothing to do. It is a controversy, if my friend thinks the charge too much, between himself and the law of Illinois or the regulations of the railroad.

After that comes the proposition, as I understand it, that the Illinois Central Railroad Company is making too much money, and hence we ought to legislate in some way to prevent the stockholders of that company, the more especially as they are English stockholders, from making so large a dividend. Sir, let me say to him and to this House that had it not been for English and German capital the railroads which now permeate the West and bring it within a stone's throw, as it were, of the great commercial center of this nation would never have been built. It is to foreign capital that we are indebted for the great degree of success and prosperity which those roads have now realized, and because they have realized that success, and because the question is settled, so far as these railroads already built are concerned, my friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] comes here and says that inasmuch as this Illinois Central railroad is owned by gentlemen belonging to a nation which arms, mans, and sends out ships against us—and I am sorry to say that is the case—we should be unjust to the road which they own, so far as they have an interest in it.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] if he supposes it would prejudice the road if it were a fact known to this House that it was owned to some extent by foreign bondholders—such men as Richard Cobden and John Bright among them?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. There is no man who admires Richard Cobden and John Bright more than I do. But allow me to say the argument, it seems to me the ad captandum argument, of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has been that the men who own this road were British capitalists; hence we, as citizens of free America, should do what we could to injure their interests. That is the only inference that can be drawn from the argument which the gentleman used upon the floor of this House yesterday, or when this bill was under consideration.

Now, sir, the proposition is to leave this to a court of law; that is the proposition. It comes from my legal friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THAYER,] a man whom I admire for his legal learning and ability. But let us look and see how we, as the American people, will stand should we adopt a proposition of that character. As a lawyer, and construing the contract between the Government and this railroad company upon pure and simple law, I might possibly agree with the gentleman, and say that when it came before the court, and is subjected to a pure legal construction, it might work just the result which my friend from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] desires. But the whole question is within the American Congress. We do not sit here as mere lawgivers; we do not sit here as mere arbitrators between the people and the strict rules of law. I hope, sir, that we sit here for the purpose of doing justice; and I submit that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not fraught with the spirit which should characterize our legislation.

Mr. SMITHERS. If my friend from Vermont will allow me, I desire to ask him whether there is any principle of equity which allows one party to enjoy the advantages of a grant while withholding from the other party the consideration which was the inducement to that grant.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will answer that question by and by.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. All I have to say is simply this: that, doing equity between the Government and this railroad company, it is impossible for us to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and, doing equity, it is quite preposterous for us, notwithstanding the obligation resting upon that company, to say that we will not pay whatever may be right for the transportation of troops and munitions of war over that road. I wish that I had time to elucidate my proposition; but I must conclude.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I must express my surprise that the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WOODBRIDGE,] who was so swift to pronounce my proposition an absurdity, should have presented to this House an argument of the character of that which he has advanced. Sir, he has yielded the whole question which has been in issue between the parties to this controversy. This matter, when it was previously before the House, was discussed as a question of law; and the gentleman from Illinois, upon my left, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] who made an able argument on the side of the company, put their case upon what he alleged to be a legal construction of the act making this grant. Now, sir, the gentleman from Vermont says that he might agree with me that the law is on the side of the Government; but he makes an appeal to the House in behalf of what he calls "equity." Well, sir, if this company come here begging mercy at the hands of the Government, begging to be released from the contract into which they deliberately entered, they place themselves in an attitude quite different from that in which the advocates of the company presented them when this question was previously before the House.

But wherein consists the absurdity of my proposition? If the gentleman admits that the company have a just claim to the hundreds of thousands of dollars which are being paid to them, as we say, without warrant of law; if the company deny they are liable to this obligation, and I present to the House, as I have presented, a simple method for the settlement of this question of law, wherein is the absurdity of the proposition? I am astonished that a gentleman who was so swift to make such an assertion should have attempted to sustain it by so weak an argument.

What injustice is proposed by the proposition I have put before the House? On the one hand, this company deny their legal responsibility; on the other, it is alleged that they are subject to that responsibility. On that point a disagreement has arisen between the two Houses. The proposition which I have made by way of amendment puts this legal question upon which the parties differ in train for judicial settlement. Why should not that question be thus settled? If this company are not liable, if they are pronounced by the Supreme Court to be not liable, they escape from the burden which we say was imposed upon them by the act which they accepted. If, on the contrary, they do rest under this obligation, why should they not discharge it? The gentleman says that they should not discharge it because of some vague theory of equity which he sets up. Sir, when this company shall come to this House with a claim founded upon any principles of equity, and asking exemption from an admitted liability, I for one, will vote to extend to them every facility for the deliberate examination and decision of their case. But I am opposed to extending this treatment to a company who deny the legal responsibility which they once assumed. Sir, they have no right to occupy this double ground. If they would admit their liability and throw themselves upon the generosity of the Government, we could understand their position and could deal with them accordingly.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was first upon the motion of Mr. MORRILL that the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate.

On the question there were, on a division—ayes 54, noes 41.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 47, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Bliss, Boutwell, Brooks, Broomall, Chanler, Ambrose W. Clark, Coffroth, Cole, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Edger, Edgerton, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Higby, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Kasson, Kellogg, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, Knapp, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McKimney, Morrill, James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, Odell, Pendleton, Pomeroy, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Ross, Schenck, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Voorhees, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Windom, and Worthington—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Beaman, Boyd, James S. Brown, Cobb, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Gooch, Hale, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Marvin, McBride, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Norton, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Scofield, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elith B. Washburn, Williams, Wilson, and Worthington—47.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Baily, Baxter, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Grider, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Hooper, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knox, Law, Lazear, Loan, Longyear, McClurg, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, William H. Miller, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Perham, Perry, Pike, Radford, John H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Shannon, Smith, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Tracy, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—72.

So the House receded from its disagreement.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the House receded from its disagreement; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that we take a recess until nine o'clock. There seems to be no likelihood of anything coming from the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not. I hope that we will have no recess. It is now broad daylight. Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is the question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The motion was disagreed to.

LOCAL STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS.

The SPEAKER. The next business on the Speaker's table is House bill No. 667, to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISQUALIFICATION OF COLOR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 62, to remove all disqualification of color in carrying the mails.

The SPEAKER stated that a call for the previous question was pending on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. EDEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 30, nays 65, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bliss, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Knapp, Knox, Le Blond, Long, Marcy, Middleton, James R. Morris, Noble, John O'Neill, Price, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ross, Scott, Stiles, Strouse, Townsend, and Chilton A. White—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Griswold, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elith B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Brandegee, Brooks, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, English, Ganson, Grider, Hale, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Law, Lazear, Loan, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McIndoe, McKimney, William H. Miller, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Odell, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, Radford, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Smith, Spalding, Starr, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Tracy, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—87.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GRINNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 558) to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes; and an act (H. R. No. 710) to extend the time for the completion of certain railroads to which land grants have been made in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin; when the Speaker signed the same.

COLORED PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the letter of the Secretary of War in reference to colored people going from the District without passes, reported that the committee had had the subject under consideration, and had recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the order of the major general commanding the department of Washington and the twenty-second Army corps, issued on the 12th day of July, 1864, directing that no colored man should be allowed to leave Washington city, going North, without a pass, is a regulation which makes an odious discrimination, in conflict with the law of the United States, which has declared free alike all citizens and residents of the District of Columbia; and that the President is hereby requested to direct said military order to be at once revoked.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of having time for reflection on this subject I move that the House take a recess till nine o'clock.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Speaker, at the closing period of the session, to advise the House as to the condition of public bills necessary to carry on the Government. There are two important bills yet to be acted on.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN's motion, and it was rejected.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. I suggest that the word "odious" in the resolution should read "odorous." [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I suggest that the words "or come to" be added to the resolution so that it will read "no colored man shall be allowed to leave or come to Washington city."

Mr. COX. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would like to inquire whether it is not true that every member of this House has had issued to him a pass by the military commander of this department to go through the defenses of Washington.

Mr. COX. We are white men. [Laughter.] Mr. VOORHEES. I know that I have such a pass. Part of the defenses of Washington lie between here and Baltimore, and we cannot go through them without having military passes.

Mr. UPSON. No man is required to show a pass to go to Baltimore.

Mr. VOORHEES. Part of the defenses of Washington lie between this city and Baltimore.

Mr. UPSON. I ask the gentleman if he has been ever required to show a pass going on the railroad?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will answer that question.

Mr. UPSON. A military pass going from Washington to Baltimore?

Several MEMBERS. Railroad passes.

Mr. ASHLEY. The imputation which my friend from Indiana casts on colored men—

Mr. VOORHEES. I cast no imputation on them. I want to see whether we are on an equality with them. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman had better consult his clergyman if he has any doubt about it.

The question being on the motion to lay the resolution on the table,

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. ORTH and STILES.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 69.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. COX called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 75, nays 24, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Smithers, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Elith B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Worthington—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Eden, Eldridge, Knapp, McKimney, James R. Morris, Morrison, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Townsend, Voorhees, Whaley, and Wheeler—24.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Blaine, Blair, Brandegee, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Edgerton, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knox, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, William H. Miller, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Perry, Radford, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—83.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, announced to the House that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, and agree to the committee of conference asked for by the House on the bill (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes;" and had appointed Messrs. GRIMES, CHANDLER, and MORRILL, as such committee on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, and agree to the committee of conference asked for by the House, on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 141) reducing the duties on printing paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively; and had appointed Messrs. HOWE, ANTHONY, and LANE of Kansas, as such committee on the part of the Senate.

ELLIS NORRIS.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Ellis Norris; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ellis Norris, of Barnstable, Massachusetts, upon the pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 15th of April, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNA E. WARD.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Anna E. Ward, widow of Lieutenant Joseph D. Ward; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Anna E. Ward, widow of Joseph D. Ward, lieutenant of the second regiment of Kentucky volunteers, who died of wounds received in the battle of Buena Vista, Mexico, February 23, 1847, on the pension roll from the 4th of February, 1865, at the rate of seventeen dollars a month during her natural life, or widowhood, and in case of her marriage or death the same to be paid to her children until the youngest reaches the age of sixteen years.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the second Tuesday of December next.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand the bill provides that the pension shall cease when the youngest child shall attain the age of sixteen. But the man died in 1847, some eighteen years ago. According to that the pension would have ceased two years ago.

The SPEAKER. The bill states that the wounds were received in 1847, but does not state when the man died.

Mr. WHALEY. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the case will have to stand or fall upon the report in the case. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The first question being on the motion to postpone,

Mr. PRICE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHALEY and PRICE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fourteen, noes not counted.

So the bill was not postponed.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 600) for the better organization of the subsistence department; when the Speaker signed the same.

MARY A. MILLINGER.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Mary A. Millinger, widow of Christian B. Millinger; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary A. Mil-linger, widow of Christian B. Millinger, captain of company I, eleventh regiment Iowa volunteers, on the pension roll, at the rate of twenty dollars a month, from the 20th of March, 1864, to continue during her widowhood; and in case of her death the same to be paid to her children until the youngest shall have reached the age of sixteen years.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATHERINE MOCK.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Catherine Mock, widow of W. H. Mock; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Catherine Mock, widow of ordnance sergeant W. H. Mock, on the pension roll at the rate of eight dollars a month from the 25th day of January, 1862, to continue during the period of her natural life or widowhood.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHALEY moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I would inquire whether these bills which the gentleman from West Virginia has reported have been examined by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WHALEY. Informally. I have failed to get a quorum of the committee together.

Mr. PERHAM. I think I ought to say, as one of the committee, that I know nothing of these cases. I understand that some members of the committee have examined them. I believe I have attended all the meetings of the committee, but I know nothing about them, whether these bills are right or wrong.

Mr. ODELL. Is it in order to move to reconsider the votes by which these pension bills have just been passed?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. WHALEY. I have not reported these bills as having been acted on by the committee as a committee; but I said I was authorized by the committee to report them. I stated in reply to gentlemen that I was authorized to report them by a majority of the committee. The reports can be read, and the House can judge of the merits of these bills.

Mr. PERHAM. Were they examined in the room of the committee, or somewhere else?

Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman, as a member of the committee, is aware that we have failed to get a quorum of that committee for nearly a month. These bills were not considered in the committee-room. It was not my fault, for I have given, from time to time, notice to members to appear there.

Mr. PERHAM. I think I ought to state further that I was informed a few days ago by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WHALEY] that he had such reports made out, and I told him that if he would bring them around to me I would examine them.

Mr. WHALEY. I have been three different times to the desk of the member, and could not find him there.

Mr. PERHAM. I believe I have been in my seat as constantly as almost any other member.

Mr. ODELL. If it be in order, I move to reconsider the votes by which the House passed the bills reported by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, [Mr. WHALEY.] I did not act intelligibly upon the subject, for I supposed it was the unanimous action of the Committee on Pensions, and I think gentlemen all around me were of the same opinion.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL] will not prevail. I have listened very attentively to the report of the Committee on Pensions, and I am satisfied its chairman [Mr. WHALEY] has examined these claims in reference to the interests of the Government as well as the interests of the claimants; and I am convinced we would be doing gross injustice by reconsidering our vote as proposed by this motion. In support of the report of the chairman of this committee, and in support of the position I assume, I ask the Clerk to read what I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"Child of the patriotic dead,
A nation's land rests on thy head;
A nation's heart beats close to thine,
The country fondly calls thee 'mine!'"

"On battle-fields, as death's cold chill
Steals o'er the heart, the patriot's will Gives up, upon that blood-stained sod,
His child to country and to God."

"What legacy so rich? Who loved so well
As these—bequeathed 'mid shot and shell—
The flesh and blood of him who bore
A freeman's flag on southern shore?"

"Remembered be thy father's grave,
Remembered all he died to save;
And welcome to our hearts and home
The babes he cherished as his own."

"How base the heart, how lost to shame,
That calls thee by a pauper's name;
That, grudging, has an alms to give
For those who died that we might live!"

"Nay, dear one, think not this shall be
The kindness we will show to thee;
But gather round the homestead board
With every blessing bounteous stored."

"The memory of thy father's deeds
Entwined with all thy wants and needs,
Makes all we do but sweet employ,
And gives each heart a lasting joy."

"Close to our hearts, ye noble band;
Yours, for a heritage, this princely land;
In thanks, a nation, with its care,
Will watch and guard you everywhere."

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. To whom are those verses addressed?

Mr. INGERSOLL. To the members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress by one who has some sympathy for those who have suffered in our country's cause.

In quick succession we pass enrollment bill after enrollment bill, in order to draft the husband and father into the military service; and while we are doing that I insist we shall not be indifferent to the claims of their widows and orphans to our protection and gratitude. These war-stricken relics of the heroic dead should not be turned away from these Halls to proclaim to the world that republics are, indeed, ungrateful. To say that we make such ample provisions for the immolation of their husbands upon their country's altars, and so tardy and so inadequate relief for their widows in their time of bereavement, is no compliment to ourselves. I recognize the justice of the claims which these living monuments of the heroism and patriotism of their dead husbands and fathers have upon us; and I implore and warn the House not to disregard them. And, when the chairman of the Pension Committee reports in favor of allowing the small pittance of eight dollars a month to these war-afflicted ones, it pains me to the heart to hear a Representative of a patriotic people object to its consideration, or move its postponement, (which, when understood, means forever.) It becomes us to look after our widows and orphans, and see that their claims upon us are acknowledged and adjusted.

Mr. COX. Whom does the gentleman mean by "our widows?"

Mr. INGERSOLL. "Our widows" are those who have said to their husbands, "Go and fight for liberty and the integrity of our country;" they are those whose husbands fill soldiers' graves at Antietam, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Vicksburg, Mission Ridge, Shiloh, and a hundred other ensanguined fields of this war. "Our widows" are those who have been bereft of all that is dear to them in life by this storm of war, and have thus been doomed to a life of suffering and desolation. These are "our widows," and I insist they shall not be neglected by the Government.

Mr. COX. That explanation is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If we expect to maintain that enthusiasm which has given us brave men for our armies, and success to our efforts to crush the rebellion, we must not only be just to the gallant soldier who offers up his life for our country, but we must care for his bereaved widow and orphaned children. Let us not turn a deaf ear to the widow, who, with a "God bless you" on her lip and a tear of affection in her eye, bade her husband "good-by," as he went forth to battle for the right, and has fallen in the service of his country. Do not let us wrong the dead by denying justice to the living. And these children of war's desolation should be adopted by the Government, and to some extent be made to feel that for the father they have lost they have found a guardian and protector in a grateful country.

"The memory of thy father's deeds,
Entwined with all thy wants and needs,
Makes all we do but sweet employ,
And gives each heart a lasting joy."

You should be thankful that you have it in your power to alleviate to some extent their sufferings. You can do but little at most. You cannot pay for blood. The hero-patriot's blood is above all price. You cannot restore the husband and father; he is gone, and forever. Then, in the name of Heaven, when they ask for bread, do not give them a stone.

Mr. WHALEY. In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL] I wish to say only this: he was sitting within a few feet of me, and heard the reply which I made to the gentleman from Maine, that there had been no quorum of the committee for nearly a month. He also must have heard my previous statement that a report accompanied every bill, and that, whether the cases had been considered by the committee or not, each case must stand or fall on its own merits. While he professes to be a religious man, he has not shown himself a worthy member of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN G. W. KNABE.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill (H. R. No. 785) granting a pension to Captain G. W. Knabe; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides for paying a pension of twenty dollars per month to Captain George W. Knabe, in consideration of disability incurred while over-exerting himself in the line of his duty.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read, when—

Mr. UPSON said: I rise to a point of order. I submit that no report has been made. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WHALEY] has himself said that there has been no formal action of the committee in these cases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia has stated the circumstances. The document will be read as a part of his remarks.

The Clerk then concluded the reading of the document.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that has been read twice, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and reported back with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. UPSON. I move that it be recommitted.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "while over-exerting himself in the line of his duty," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "while engaged in the line of his duty as a soldier."

Mr. WHALEY. I have no objection to that amendment. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. UPSON moved that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 683) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866; and

An act (H. R. No. 795) amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 786) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1866, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and appoint a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY F. B. ZEVELY.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Mary F. B. Zevely; which was laid on the table.

INDIAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. ASHLEY. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 459) to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory.

RECESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House take a recess till nine o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. Say "ten."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, though he dislikes to make suggestions to the House, that, if the miscellaneous appropriation bill which has just gone to a committee of conference, is to pass, there will be little enough time to pass it between nine and twelve o'clock.

Mr. BROOKS. The committee of conference cannot act on that bill in two hours.

Mr. WILDER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, was agreed to.

So the House (at ten minutes after seven o'clock a. m.) took a recess till nine o'clock a. m.

The House, at nine o'clock a. m., (March 4,) resumed its session.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved, as no quorum was present, that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes unless a report should be ready from a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

At the expiration of the time indicated the House again resumed its session.

INDIAN GOVERNMENT.

The SPEAKER stated the pending question to be on the motion of Mr. ASHLEY to take up Senate bill No. 459, to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

DOCUMENTS FOR STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House Senate joint resolution No. 114, authorizing additional copies of public documents to be printed for the Department of State. The State Department feels a great interest in the adoption of this joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

FEEDING REFUGEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. Senate joint resolution No. 85, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Secretary of the Interior $250,000, in lieu of certain bonds for feeding certain refugee Indians, has been passed in another form, and if there be no objection it will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER announced, that under the authority conferred upon him, he appointed Mr. PRUYN an additional member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ADDITIONAL INSPECTORS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I make a privileged report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 667, to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes."

The Senate recede from their amendments.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PRUYN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same: Joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) in relation to certain railroads; and

An act (H. R. No. 657) to amend the third section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1865, and for other purposes," so far as the same relates to witnesses in the courts of the United States.

CHARLES F. ANDERSON.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to take up Senate bill No. 207, for the relief of Charles F. Anderson.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 64, nays 29, not voting 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Bailly, Baxter, Blair, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, Chandler, Coffroth, Cox, Denison, Eden, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Herrick, Jencks, Philip Johnson, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, Law, Le Blond, Long, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Pendleton, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, William B. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scott, Shannon, Siles, Strouse, Stuart, Townsend, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilder, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yeaman—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Boutwell, Ambrose V. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Eliot, Gooch, Higby, Holman, Hulburd, Kelley, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Smithers, Spalding, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, and William B. Washburn—29.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, Brandegee, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Gravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Edgerton, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Hall, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hutchins, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Orlando, Kellogg, King, Knapp, Knox, Lazar, Littlejohn, Loan, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Sloan, Smith, Starr, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Sweat, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—29.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

The bill was accordingly taken up and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and there were, on a division—ayes 59, noes 32.

The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative, making a quorum.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BLAIR moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTHEASTERN FRONTIER.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the special committee on the defense of the northeastern frontier a bill of the House (No. 541) to provide for the defense of the northeastern frontier. I do not desire action on it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I merely wish to say that this bill has the unanimous approbation of the committee to which it was referred. It would have been reported back had the committee been called. It has not been called and we have had no opportunity to report it. In these last hours of the session I do not feel like pressing it to a vote. I do not think a bill of this magnitude should be pressed through in that way. I therefore simply ask that the bill, as amended, may be reported back, laid on the table, and printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that. The bill was accordingly received, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM ROBINSON BOYER.

On motion of Mr. PERHAM, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of a petition for the relief of William Robinson Boyer; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

KENDRICK AND FISHER, AND OTHERS.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of New York, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, on condition of leaving copies thereof, the papers in the cases of Kendrick & Fisher, and of Eaton, Gage & Co.

RAILROAD COMMUNICATION WITH NEW YORK.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill in regard to an air-line railroad to New York was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to call it up.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only wish to say that I will not trouble the House at this time with any action upon the bill. I have given way when I could have gone on, because I was assured by those who had charge of the important public business that it would block up the way to such business. I wish to say to those parties who feel interested in this matter that nothing but the overmastering necessity of the public business has kept me from bringing it forward, and that I intend at an early day next winter to press it with what force I can; and being a measure of such manifest justness and importance, I have little doubt it will pass the next Congress, as it would have passed this had I been able to get it up in proper time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. PRUYN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 139) of thanks to Major General George H. Thomas and the army under his command; when the Speaker signed the same.

JOHN T. JONES.

Mr. WILDER. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill of the Senate (No. 251) for the relief of John T. Jones.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. WILDER. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to do so.

The rules were not suspended.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. COLE, of California. I am authorized by the select committee on the Pacific railroad to report a bill, and as there is not time to pass it through the two Houses this session, I ask that it be laid on the table and printed. It is a bill in reference to which the committee were unanimous, and I report it in hopes that it will receive the attention of members before another Congress. It is a bill granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in the State of California.

The bill was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

CITIZENS OF SALT LAKE CITY.

Mr. KINNEY. I ask unanimous consent to report a bill for the relief of citizens of Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is too late to consider that now.

Mr. KINNEY. It is precisely the same bill that passed last session. The committee would have reported it the present session if they had had an opportunity.

Mr. THAYER. If it does not come from a committee, I object.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled, an act (H. R. No. 682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1866; when the Speaker signed the same.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers touching the revolutionary claim of Jacob Brooker, deceased.

GEORGE J. STUBBLEFIELD.

Mr. HALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have taken up and passed joint resolution authorizing the adjustment of the claim of George J. Stubblefield for chewing tobacco furnished to the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to put in smoking tobacco.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the bill.

Mr. HALE. I move to suspend the rules.

The question was taken; and (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I rise for the purpose of making a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the House to the amendments to the miscellaneous appropriation bill. If it be required the report can be read, but perhaps I can accomplish the same purpose by stating briefly and more intelligibly the substance of it.

Mr. Speaker, owing to an error on my part in reference to the chairmanship of the committee, it so happens that I took the notes of the conference instead of my honorable friend from New York, [Mr. LITTLEJOHN,] and by his courtesy I make a statement of the result.

The items for light-houses, objected to by the Senate, were all agreed to, and also the necessary appropriation for a room for the consultations of the Supreme Court.

The provision in reference to the Gas-Light Company in the city of Washington was also agreed to.

The provision for the repairs of the basement of the Capitol was agreed to by the House. The repairs to East Capitol street, the provision for sweeping Pennsylvania avenue and repairing it, and for a flag pavement before the President's house, and for sewers in Seventeenth street and Twentieth street, were all agreed to be stricken out.

The provision for surveys in one or two of the western Territories was agreed to with this modification, that the rate of pay for the surveys should be stricken out, but the aggregate sum left for the surveys, to be applied according to existing law.

The provision for printing the report of the Academy of Sciences was agreed to, and likewise that of increased pay of revenue agent at New York. Two small items for additional pay of clerks were agreed to. The expenses of the commission under the British treaty in Washington Territory was agreed to.

The appropriation for altering the Senate Hall, amounting to $160,000, was agreed to be stricken out.

The appropriation of five or six thousand dollars was agreed to be appropriated on application of the Coast Survey for fog signal on Long Island sound.

A provision for paying the revisers of the District laws was agreed to.

The appropriation for repairs to the Naval Academy at Annapolis was agreed to be reduced from $100,000 to $50,000.

The Washington aqueduct appropriation was stricken out.

A provision of $2,000 for an additional greenhouse was agreed to.

A provision for the expense of the Nebraska militia, which involved the transfer of the appropriation for their legislative expenses to pay the militia called out to protect them against the Indians, upon the understanding that the session of the Legislature would be dispensed with, was agreed to.

The section of the House bill relating to the organization of certain bureaus in the Treasury Department were all agreed to be stricken out.

An appropriation of $200,000 for additional siege trains, having already been incorporated in another bill, was also stricken out.

Also a provision to pay Brigham Young, and one or two other items of small moment, together with the appropriation for a cob dock at Brooklyn, were stricken out.

A provision for the payment of the interest on the Smithsonian fund in gold—on the ground that it was a debt which existed prior to the conversion of money from gold to paper—was agreed to.

The proposed pay for Pennsylvania soldiers was stricken out.

The compensation to Missouri was agreed to be retained—on the ground that the case was an exceptionable one in every particular, and that the payment of this money involves substantially the peace and perhaps the preservation of the State from the scourge of guerrilla desolation during the summer.

These, Mr. Speaker, cover all the business details of the various amendments of the House and Senate. Having passed over the amendment which was the subject of controversy in the House until we reached this point, we then reverted to it and found that there was a radical diversity of opinion, and perhaps an irreconcilable one, between the representatives of the House and those of the Senate. The gentlemen on the part of the Senate stated that while a majority of the Senate concurred in the principle involved in that amendment, yet that the majority of the Senate had refused upon two votes, deliberately determined, not to pass the amendment as a part of this bill. It was then proposed to them that they should take the section in the form in which it had passed the House, carry it into the Senate and pass it immediately as a separate bill, and send it to the House in order that we might act upon it immediately, upon which condition we were ready to have agreed to recommend the House to allow the bill to pass without this amendment. The gentlemen thought that they could not accomplish that in the present state of the feeling and temper of the Senate, and declined to make the effort. Under these circumstances it remained for a majority of the House committee to determine between the great result of losing an important appropriation bill, or, after having raised a question of this magnitude touching so nearly the right of every citizen to his personal liberty and the very endurance of republican institutions, and to insure its prompt consideration fastened it on an appropriation bill, to allow it to be stricken out of the bill as a matter of secondary importance. The committee thought that their duty to their constituents, to the House, and to themselves, would not allow them to provide for any pecuniary appropriations at the expense of so grave a reflection upon the fundamental principles of the Government.

The situation is a grave one. The President has now by law—a law insanely passed by the last Congress, to repeal which this House early in its first session unanimously passed a bill which to this day the Senate has refused even to consider—the absolute authority to deprive every officer of the United States of his commission at his will, on his own judgment, and at his pleasure or caprice alone. The law does not merely authorize, but it requests, the President to use the power conferred.

There are laws upon the statute-book which subject to trial by courts-martial, composed of these officers, thus dependent upon the will of the President, large classes of our fellow-citizens.

The practice of the Government has introduced into the jurisprudence of the United States principles unknown to the laws of the United States, loosely described under the general term of "the rules and usages of war," and new crimes, defined by no law, called "military offenses;" and without the authority of any statute, constitutional or unconstitutional, and pointing these laws—confined by the usage of the world to enemies in enemies' territory—against our own citizens in our own territory, has repeatedly deprived many citizens of the United States of their liberty, has condemned many to death, who have only been redeemed from that extreme penalty by the kindness of the President's heart, and aided doubtless by the serious scruples he cannot but feel touching the legality of the judgment that assigned them to death.

There have been many cases in which judgments of confinement in the penitentiary have been inflicted for acts not punishable either under the usages of war or under any statute of the United States by any military tribunal; crimes for which the laws of the United States prescribe the punishment have been visited with other and severer punishments by military tribunals; violations of contract with the Government, real or imputed, have been construed by these tribunals into frauds, and punished as crimes; excessive bail has been demanded, and when furnished impudently reduced; and the attempt of Congress to discriminate between crimes committed by persons in the military forces and citizens not in those forces has been annulled, and the very offenses it specifically required to be tried before the courts of the United States have been tried before military tribunals dependent upon the will of the President.

The President, when petitioned humbly, has refused or neglected more than once to stop the illegal proceedings and submit the case to the courts of the United States. "Courts-martial are organized to convict!" is the sinister declaration of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy; and the President still tolerates his presence.

That hand inserted, under the innocent title of a bill to increase the paymasters of the Navy, a section subjecting every agent and servant of the Navy Department to trial by a court-martial, which passed the Senate and the House without discovery or exposure, and now hangs on a motion to reconsider.

It was the settled purpose of oppression disclosed by that act which occasioned this amendment, and forbids its abandonment.

The committee remember that such things are inconsistent with the endurance of republican Government. The party which tolerates or defends them must destroy itself or the Republic. They felt they had reached a point at which a vote must be cast which may break up political parties, or, if it do not, will break up or save a great republican Government. Before these alternatives they could not hesitate. They thought it best, now, at this time, to leave this law standing as a broken dike in the midst of the rising flood of lawless power around us, to show to this generation how high that flood of lawless power has risen in only three years of civil war, as a warning to those who are to come after us, as an awakening to those who are now with us.

They have therefore come to the determination, so far as the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of this House will enable them to accomplish the result, that this bill shall not become a law if these words do not stand as part of it—the affirmation by the Representatives of the States and of the people of the inalienable birthright of every American citizen; and on that question they appeal from the judgment of the Senate to the judgment of the American people.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. Believing, sir, as I do, that this great Republic could not have been given to posterity except by the exercise of the very power of which the amendment of my friend from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] seeks at this time to deprive the Executive, I agreed with the Senate committee, and it was our desire to report unanimously, advising that the House recede from its amendment. We could not agree, however, and hence we have narrowed down the question as much as possible. I propose, therefore, if it be in order, that the House concur in the report of the committee of conference upon all except the amendment known as the Winter Davis amendment, and upon that I move that the House recede, so as to bring the question to a direct vote. And upon these motions I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARFIELD in the chair) put the question, and declared that the previous question was seconded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COBB, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the House No. 807, to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. KERNAN. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. At this late hour of the morning I cannot do so.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. A motion for a call of the House is not in order during the operation of the previous question unless it appears by actual count that a quorum is not present.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The previous question has not been seconded.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact as to which the Chair must appeal to the record. He is informed that the previous question was seconded. The gentleman who occupied the chair at the time will state what occurred.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was occupying the chair, and put the question, and considered that by a very large rising vote the previous question was seconded, and so announced. But at that very same moment a message from the Senate came in, and there was no opportunity for any call for a further division; otherwise I would have entertained a call for a division.

The SPEAKER. The Journal Clerk states that the previous question was seconded.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Globe reporters have the same statement, that the previous question was seconded.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I call the attention of the Chair to the statement of the temporary Speaker, my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that he was prepared to entertain a call for a division.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair put the motion, and announced that in the opinion of the Chair the previous question was seconded, and at that moment a message was announced, so that there was no opportunity for a division to be called.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask the gentleman from Ohio if he called for a negative vote on the question at all. It was not called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the previous question was seconded; but in view of the contrariety of opinion that prevails he will put the question again.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does that cut off my motion for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It does; as the House is now dividing.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I insist on my motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HARDING. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair understands, from the making of that motion, that it is conceded that the Journal is correct, and that the previous question has been seconded.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That may be the decision of the Chair, but it is not the understanding of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets that he was not present, so as to know the actual facts of the case. If gentlemen had been anxious to have the matter settled as the majority determined they would have recognized the propriety of taking the vote over again. The gentleman from Wisconsin, however, moves to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded, and the gentleman from Ohio moves that the House do now adjourn; and upon the latter motion the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 744) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864; when the Speaker signed the same.

ADJOURNMENT.

The question was taken on Mr. PENDLETON's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 7, nays 126, not voting 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Brooks, Henry Winter Davis, Eden, Herrick, Kabbfleisch, and Radford—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hutchins, Ingersoll, Jenckes, William Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knapp, Law, Littlejohn, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Noble, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Seofield, Scott, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, John B. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Townsend, Tracy, Upon, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yeaman—126.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Brandegee, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Cox, Creswell, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Eliot, Farnsworth, Gooch, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Hotchkiss, Philip Johnson, Julian, Knox, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Long, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Middleton, Nelson, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Schenck, Smith, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweet, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Chilton A. White, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—49.

So the House refused to adjourn.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The question recurred on Mr. ELDRIDGE's motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 23, nays 118, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bliss, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Eldridge, Holman, Kabbfleisch, Knapp, Le Blond, McKinney, James R. Morris, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Stiles, Strouse, Townsend, Chilton A. White, and Joseph W. White—23.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Cox, Thomas T. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hutchins, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Littlejohn, Long, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scotfield, Scott, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, John B. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, Worthington, and Yeaman—118.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Brandegee, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Creswell, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ganson, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Hotchkiss, Julian, Knox, Law, Lazear, Loan, McDowell, McIndoe, Middleton, Morrill, Patterson, Robinson, Schenck, Smith, Starr, William G. Steele, Sweat, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—41.

So the House refused to lay the whole subject on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 667) to provide for two assistant local inspectors of steamboats in the city of New York, and for two local inspectors at Galena, Illinois, and to reestablish the board of local inspectors at Wheeling; and also to amend the act approved June 8, 1864, entitled "An act to create an additional inspector of steamboats and two local inspectors of steamboats for the collection districts of Memphis and Oregon, and for other purposes;" when the Speaker signed the same.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. KASSON. I ask leave to make a proposition which ought to be made now, if at all, to gentlemen upon the other side of the House. There is an appropriation in this bill for the support of the patients at the insane asylum, and also for the deaf and dumb, and one for furnishing oil, &c., to the light-houses to protect life and property. I appeal to gentlemen upon the other side of the House to let those provisions, which are intimately connected with what appeals to us all, pass as a separate bill, and then we can continue our contest over the further items of the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand that my friends are willing that the bill which has been acted on this morning shall be laid aside to allow other important matters of legislation to be taken up to which nobody objects. There is no desire upon this side of the House to prevent action in the House on anything but this bill.

Mr. PRUYN. We agree to that.

Mr. KASSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that these three items in the bill shall be passed in a separate bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We have no objection to that, with the understanding that no other items of the bill are to be added.

Mr. KASSON. Only the appropriation for the coast survey.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I am in earnest in this matter, and am determined that not one item of this bill shall pass without the whole of it.

Mr. KASSON. I appeal to the gentleman to allow the appropriation for the insane to be made.

Mr. LITTLEJOHN. I agree with the gentleman from Maryland. I object to any such proposition. This whole bill must pass through, or none of it.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 807) to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that this House do now adjourn, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 2, nays 134, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, and Rogers—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Ashley, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, Chanler, Ambrose W. So the House refused to adjourn.

DUTY ON PRINTING PAPER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the House reducing the duties on printing paper, unsized, to make a report, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House joint resolution (No. 141) "reducing the duties on printing paper, unsized, used for books and newspapers exclusively," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, that the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to said joint resolution.

T. O. HOWE,

J. H. LANE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. B. WASHBURN,

JAMES F. WILSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call the previous question on agreeing to the report.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to lay the report on the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

A MEMBER. What would the duty be under the report of the committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen per cent.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes or as volunteers in the Army or Navy, and to prevent frauds at the District jail, in the city of Washington; when the Speaker signed the same.

DUTY ON PRINTING PAPER—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to lay on the table the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill relating to duty upon paper, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask to be excused from voting upon that question; and upon that I call the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that a committee of two members of this House be appointed to wait upon the President to inquire if he has any further communication to make to Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and Mr. LAW, as such committee.

EXCUSING FROM VOTING.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll upon the motion to excuse Mr. LE BLOND from voting upon the motion to lay upon the table the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill in relation to the duty upon paper.

During the roll-call,

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President, by Mr. NICOLAY, his Private Secretary, informing the House that the President had this day approved and signed a bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 798) to prevent the enlistment of persons charged with crime in the District of Columbia as substitutes or as volunteers in the Army or Navy, and to prevent frauds at the District jail, in the city of Washington.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, from the committee to wait upon the President, reported: that the committee had discharged that duty, and had been directed by the President to inform the House that he had no further business to communicate to them.

EXCUSING MR. LE BLOND FROM VOTING.

The Clerk resumed the calling of the roll upon the motion to excuse Mr. LE BLOND from voting.

The call was suspended after having proceeded as far as the name of Mr. JESSE O. NORTON, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ames, Ancona, Ashley, Baxter, Boutwell, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Dixon, Eckley, Grinnell, Herrick, Hooper, Hurlburt, Kasson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Law, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, Daniel Morris, Morrison, and Amos Myers—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnold, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Boyd, Broomall, Cobb, Coffroth, Cox, Thomas T. SPEAKER'S ADDRESS.

The hour of twelve o'clock m. having arrived, The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the parting hour has come; and yonder clock, which "takes no note of time but from its loss," will soon announce that the Congress of which we are members has passed into history. Honored by your votes with this responsible position, I have faithfully striven to perform its always complex and often perplexing duties without partisan bias and with the sincerest impartiality. Whether I have realized the true ideal of a just presiding officer, aiding, on the one hand, the advance of the public business, with the responsibility of which the majority is charged, and, on the other hand, allowing no trespass on the parliamentary rights of the minority, must be left for others to decide. But looking back now over the entire Congress, I cannot remember a single word addressed to you which "dying I would wish to blot."

On this day, which by spontaneous consent is being observed wherever our flag floats as a day of national rejoicing, with the roar of cannon greeting the rising sun on the rock-bound coast of Maine, echoed and reechoed by answering volleys from city to city, and from mountain peak to mountain peak, till from the Golden Gate it dies away far out on the calm Pacific, we mingle our congratulations with those of the freemen we represent over the victories for the Union that have made the winter just closing so warm with joy and hope. With them we rejoice that the national standard, which our revolutionary fathers unfurled over the land, but which rebellion sought to strike down and destroy, waves as undisputed at this glad hour over the cradle of secession at Charleston as over the cradle of liberty at Faneuil Hall, and that the whole firmament is aflame with the brilliant glow of triumphs for that cause so dear to every patriot heart. We have but recently commemorated the birthday of the Father of his Country, and renewed our pledge to each other that the nation he founded should not be sundered by the sword of treason. And the good news that assures the salvation of the Republic is doubly joyous, because it tells us that the prayers of the past four years have not been unanswered, and that the priceless blood of our brave defenders, so freely offered and so profusely spilt, has not been shed in vain. We turn, too, to-day, with a prouder joy than ever before to that banner, brilliant with stars from the heavens and radiant with glories from the earth, which from

THE BATTLE OF THE LITTLE BLOOD

THE BATTLE OF THE LITTLE BLOOD was fought on the morning of the 10th of June 1864, between the forces of the Confederate States of America and the United States of America. The battle was a tactical draw, but it was a significant victory for the Confederacy in terms of morale and strategic position. The battle was fought in the state of Georgia, near the town of Little Blood. The Confederate forces, led by General Robert E. Lee, were able to repel the Union forces, led by General Sherman, and to secure a strategic position for the future. The battle was a significant event in the American Civil War, and it is remembered as a turning point in the conflict. Message of the President.

SENATE & HO. OF REPS.

MESSAGE

OF THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Again the blessings of health and abundant harvests claim our profoundest gratitude to Almighty God.

The condition of our foreign affairs is reasonably satisfactory.

Mexico continues to be a theater of civil war. While our political relations with that country have undergone no change, we have, at the same time, strictly maintained neutrality between the belligerents.

At the request of the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, a competent engineer has been authorized to make a survey of the river San Juan and the port of San Juan. It is a source of much satisfaction that the difficulties which for a moment excited some political apprehensions, and caused a closing of the inter-oceanic transit route, have been amicably adjusted, and that there is a good prospect that the route will soon be reopened with an increase of capacity and adaptation. We could not exaggerate either the commercial or the political importance of that great improvement.

It would be doing injustice to an important South American State not to acknowledge the directness, frankness, and cordiality with which the United States of Colombia have entered into intimate relations with this Government. A claims convention has been constituted to complete the unfinished work of the one which closed its session in 1861.

The new liberal constitution of Venezuela having gone into effect with the universal acquiescence of the people, the Government under it has been recognized, and diplomatic intercourse with it has opened in a cordial and friendly spirit. The long-deferred Aves Island claim has been satisfactorily paid and discharged.

Mutual payments have been made of the claims awarded by the late joint commission for the settlement of claims between the United States and Peru. An earnest and cordial friendship continues to exist between the two countries, and such efforts as were in my power have been used to remove misunderstanding and avert a threatened war between Peru and Spain.

Our relations are of the most friendly nature with Chili, the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Paraguay, San Salvador, and Hayti.

During the past year no differences of any kind have arisen with any of those republics, and, on the other hand, their sympathies with the United States are constantly expressed with cordiality and earnestness.

The claim arising from the seizure of the cargo of the brig Macedonian in 1821 has been paid in full by the Government of Chili.

Civil war continues in the Spanish part of San Domingo, apparently without prospect of an early close.

Official correspondence has been freely opened with Liberia, and it gives us a pleasing view of social and political progress in that republic. It may be expected to derive new vigor from American influence, improved by the rapid disappearance of slavery in the United States.

I solicit your authority to furnish to the republic a gunboat at moderate cost, to be reimbursed to the United States by installments. Such a vessel is needed for the safety of that State against the native African races; and in Liberian hands it would be more effective in arresting the African slave trade than a squadron in our own hands. The possession of the least organized naval force would stimulate a generous ambition in the republic, and the confidence which we should manifest by furnishing it would win forbearance and favor toward the colony from all civilized nations.

The proposed overland telegraph between America and Europe, by the way of Behring's straits and Asiatic Russia, which was sanctioned by Congress at the last session, has been undertaken, under very favorable circumstances, by an association of American citizens, with the cordial good-will and support as well of this Government as of those of Great Britain and Russia. Assurances have been received from most of the South American States of their high appreciation of the enterprise, and their readiness to cooperate in constructing lines tributary to that world-encircling communication. I learn with much satisfaction that the noble design of a telegraphic communication between the eastern coast of America and Great Britain has been renewed with full expectation of its early accomplishment.

Thus it is hoped that with the return of domestic peace the country will be able to resume with energy and advantage its former high career of commerce and civilization.

Our very popular and estimable representative in Egypt died in April last. An unpleasant altercation which arose between the temporary incumbent of the office and the Government of the Pasha resulted in a suspension of intercourse. The evil was promptly corrected on the arrival of the successor in the consulate, and our relations with Egypt, as well as our relations with the Barbary Powers, are entirely satisfactory.

The rebellion which has so long been flagrant in China, has at last been suppressed, with the cooperating good offices of this Government, and of the other western commercial States. The judicial consular establishment there has become very difficult and onerous, and it will need legislative revision to adapt it to the extension of our commerce, and to the more intimate intercourse which has been instituted with the Government and people of that vast empire. China seems to be accepting with hearty good-will the conventional laws which regulate commercial and social intercourse among the western nations.

Owing to the peculiar situation of Japan, and the anomalous form of its government, the action of that empire in performing treaty stipulations is inconstant and capricious. Nevertheless, good progress has been effected by the western Powers, moving with enlightened concert. Our own pecuniary claims have been allowed, or put in course of settlement, and the inland sea has been reopened to commerce. There is reason also to believe that these proceedings have increased rather than diminished the friendship of Japan toward the United States.

The ports of Norfolk, Fernandina, and Pensacola have been opened by proclamation. It is hoped that foreign merchants will now consider whether it is not safer and more profitable to themselves, as well as just to the United States, to resort to these and other open ports, than it is to pursue, through many hazards, and at vast cost, a contraband trade with the other ports which are closed, if not by actual military occupation, at least by a lawful and effective blockade.

For myself, I have no doubt of the power and duty of the Executive, under the law of nations, to exclude enemies of the human race from an asylum in the United States. If Congress should think that proceedings in such cases lack the authority of law, or ought to be further regulated by it, I recommend that provision be made for effectually preventing foreign slave traders from acquiring domicile and facilities for their criminal occupation in our country.

It is possible that, if it were a new and open question, the maritime Powers, with the lights they now enjoy, would not concede the privileges of a naval belligerent to the insurgents of the United States, destitute, as they are, and always have been, equally of ships-of-war and of port and harbors. Disloyal emissaries have been neither less assiduous nor more successful during the last year than they were before that time in their efforts, under favor of that privilege, to embroil our country in foreign wars. The desire and determination of the Governments of the maritime States to defeat that design are believed to be as sincere as and cannot be more earnest than our own. Nevertheless, unforeseen political difficulties have arisen, especially in Brazilian and British ports, and on the northern boundary of the United States, which have required, and are likely to continue to require, the practice of constant vigilance, and a just and conciliatory spirit on the part of the United States as well as of the nations concerned and their Governments.

Commissioners have been appointed under the treaty with Great Britain on the adjustment of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies, in Oregon, and are now proceeding to the execution of the trust assigned to them.

In view of the insecurity of life and property in the region adjacent to the Canadian border, by reason of recent assaults and depredations committed by inimical and desperate persons who are harbored there, it has been thought proper to give notice that after the expiration of six months, the period conditionally stipulated in the existing arrangement with Great Britain, the United States must hold themselves at liberty to increase their naval armament upon the lakes if they shall find that proceeding necessary. The condition of the border will necessarily come into consideration in connection with the question of continuing or modifying the rights of transit from Canada through the United States, as well as the regulation of imposts, which were temporarily established by the reciprocity treaty of the 5th June, 1854.

I desire, however, to be understood, while making this statement, that the colonial authorities of Canada are not deemed to be intentionally unjust or unfriendly toward the United States; but, on the contrary, there is every reason to expect that, with the approval of the imperial Government, they will take the necessary measures to prevent new incursions across the border.

The act passed at the last session for the encouragement of emigration has, so far as was possible, been put into operation. It seems to need amendment which will enable the officers of the Government to prevent the practice of frauds against the immigrants while on their way, and on their arrival in the ports, so as to secure them here a free choice of avocations and places of settlement. A liberal disposition toward this great national policy is manifested by most of the European States, and ought to be reciprocated on our part by giving the immigrants effective national protection. I regard our emigrants as one of the principal replenishing streams which are appointed by Providence to repair the ravages of internal war, and its wastes of national strength and health. All that is necessary is to secure the flow of that stream in its present fullness, and to that end the Government must, in every way, make it manifest that it neither needs nor designs to impose involuntary military service upon those who come from other lands to cast their lot in our country.

The financial affairs of the Government have been successfully administered during the last year. The legislation of the last session of Congress has beneficially affected the revenues, although sufficient time has not yet elapsed to experience the full effect of several of the provisions of the acts of Congress imposing increased taxation.

The receipts during the year, from all sources, upon the basis of warrants signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, including loans and the balance in the Treasury on the 1st day of July, 1863, were $1,394,796,007 62; and the aggregate disbursements, upon the same basis, were $1,298,056,101 89, leaving a balance in the Treasury, as shown by warrants, of $96,839,905 73.

Deduct from these amounts the amount of the principal of the public debt redeemed, and the amount of issues in substitution therefor, and the actual cash operations of the Treasury were: receipts, $884,076,646 57; disbursements, $865,234,087 86; which leaves a cash balance in the Treasury of $18,842,558 71.

Of the receipts, there were derived from customs $102,316,152 99; from lands, $588,333 29; from direct taxes, $475,648 96; from internal revenue, $109,741,134 10; from miscellaneous sources, $47,511,448 10; and from loans applied to actual expenditures, including former balance, $623,443,929 13.

There were disbursed, for the civil service, $27,505,599 46; for pensions and Indians, $7,517,930 97; for the War Department, $690,791,842 97; for the Navy Department, $85,733,292 77; for interest of the public debt, $53,685,421 69—making an aggregate of $865,234,087 86, and leaving a balance in the Treasury of $18,842,558 71, as before stated.

For the actual receipts and disbursements for the first quarter, and the estimated receipts and disbursements for the three remaining quarters of the current fiscal year, and the general operations of the Treasury in detail, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I concur with him in the opinion that the proportion of moneys required to meet the expenses consequent upon the war derived from taxation should be still further increased; and I earnestly invite your attention to this subject, to the end that there may be such additional legislation as shall be required to meet the just expectations of the Secretary.

The public debt on the 1st day of July last, as appears by the books of the Treasury, amounted to $1,740,690,489 49. Probably, should the war continue for another year, that amount may be increased by not far from $500,000,000. Held as it is, for the most part, by our own people, it has become a substantial branch of national, though private, property. For obvious reasons, the more nearly this property can be distributed among all the people the better. To favor such general distribution, greater inducements to become owners might, perhaps, with good effect and without injury, be presented to persons of limited means. With this view, I suggest whether it might not be both competent and expedient for Congress to provide that a limited amount of some future issue of public securities might be held by any bona fide purchaser exempt from taxation and from seizure for debt, under such restrictions and limitations as might be necessary to guard against abuse of so important a privilege. This would enable every prudent person to set aside a small annuity against a possible day of want.

Privileges like these would render the possession of such securities, to the amount limited, most desirable to every person of small means, who might be able to save enough for the purpose. The great advantage of citizens being creditors as well as debtors, with relation to the public debt, is obvious. Men readily perceive that they cannot be much oppressed by a debt which they owe to themselves.

The public debt on the 1st day of July last, although somewhat exceeding the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury made to Congress at the commencement of the last session, falls short of the estimate of that officer made in the preceding December, as to its probable amount at the beginning of this year, by the sum of $3,995,097 31. This fact exhibits a satisfactory condition and conduct of the operations of the Treasury.

The national banking system is proving to be acceptable to capitalists and to the people. On the 25th day of November five hundred and eighty-four national banks had been organized, a considerable number of which were conversions from State banks. Changes from State systems to the national system are rapidly taking place, and it is hoped that very soon there will be in the United States no banks of issue not authorized by Congress, and no bank-note circulation not secured by the Government. That the Government and the people will derive great benefit from this change in the banking systems of the country can hardly be questioned. The national system will create a reliable and permanent influence in support of the national credit, and protect the people against losses in the use of paper money. Whether or not any further legislation is advisable for the suppression of State bank issues, it will be for Congress to determine. It seems quite clear that the Treasury cannot be satisfactorily conducted unless the Government can exercise a restraining power over the bank-note circulation of the country.

The report of the Secretary of War and accompanying documents will detail the campaigns of the armies in the field since the date of the last annual message, and also the operations of the several administrative bureaus of the War Department during the last year. It will also specify the measures deemed essential for the national defense, and to keep up and supply the requisite military force.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy presents a comprehensive and satisfactory exhibit of the affairs of that Department and of the naval service. It is a subject of congratulation and laudable pride to our countrymen that a navy of such vast proportions has been organized in so brief a period, and conducted with so much efficiency and success.

The general exhibit of the Navy, including vessels under construction on the 1st of December, 1864, shows a total of 671 vessels, carrying 4,610 guns, and of 510,396 tons, being an actual increase during the year, over and above all losses by shipwreck or in battle, of 83 vessels, 167 guns, and 42,427 tons.

The total number of men at this time in the naval service, including officers, is about 51,000.

There have been captured by the Navy during the year 324 vessels, and the whole number of naval captures since hostilities commenced is 1,379, of which 267 are steamers.

The gross proceeds arising from the sale of condemned prize property, thus far reported, amount to $14,396,250 51. A large amount of such proceeds is still under adjudication, and yet to be reported.

The total expenditures of the Navy Department of every description, including the cost of the immense squadrons that have been called into existence from the 4th of March, 1861, to the 1st of November, 1864, are $238,647,262 35.

Your favorable consideration is invited to the various recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, especially in regard to a navy-yard and suitable establishment for the construction and repair of iron vessels, and the machinery and armature for our ships, to which reference was made in my last annual message.

Your attention is also invited to the views expressed in the report in relation to the legislation of Congress at its last session in respect to prize on our inland waters.

I cordially concur in the recommendation of the Secretary as to the propriety of creating the new rank of vice admiral in our naval service.

Your attention is invited to the report of the Postmaster General for a detailed account of the operations and financial condition of the Post Office Department.

The postal revenues for the year ending June 30, 1864, amounted to $12,438,353 78, and the expenditures to $12,644,786 20; the excess of expenditures over receipts being $206,652 42.

The views presented by the Postmaster General on the subject of special grants by the Government in aid of the establishment of new lines of ocean mail steamships and the policy he recommends for the development of increased commercial intercourse with adjacent and neighboring countries, should receive the careful consideration of Congress.

It is of noteworthy interest that the steady expansion of population, improvement, and governmental institutions over the new and unoccupied portions of our country has scarcely been checked, much less impeded or destroyed, by our great civil war, which at first glance would seem to have absorbed almost the entire energies of the nation.

The organization and admission of the State of Nevada has been completed in conformity with law, and thus our excellent system is firmly established in the mountains which once seemed a barren and uninhabitable waste between the Atlantic States and those which have grown up on the coast of the Pacific ocean.

The Territories of the Union are generally in a condition of prosperity and rapid growth. Idaho and Montana, by reason of their great distance and the interruption of communication with them by Indian hostilities, have been only partially organized; but it is understood that these difficulties are about to disappear, which will permit their governments, like those of the others, to go into speedy and full operation.

As intimately connected with and promotive of this material growth of the nation, I ask the attention of Congress to the valuable information and important recommendations relating to the public lands, Indian affairs, the Pacific railroad, and mineral discoveries contained in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is herewith transmitted, and which report also embraces the subjects of patents, pensions, and other topics of public interest pertaining to his Department.

The quantity of public land disposed of during the five quarters ending on the 30th of September last was 4,221,342 acres, of which 1,538,614 acres were entered under the homestead law. The remainder was located with military land warrants, agricultural scrip certified to States for railroads, and sold for cash. The cash received from sales and location fees was $1,019,446.

The income from sales during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864, was $678,007 21, against $136,077 95 received during the preceding year. The aggregate number of acres surveyed during the year has been equal to the quantity disposed of; and there is open to settlement about 133,000,000 acres of surveyed land.

The great enterprise of connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific States by railways and telegraph lines has been entered upon with a vigor that gives assurance of success, notwithstanding the embarrassments arising from the prevailing high prices of materials and labor. The route of the main line of the road has been definitely located for one hundred miles westward from the initial point at Omaha City, Nebraska, and a preliminary location of the Pacific railroad of California has been made from Sacramento eastward to the great bend of the Truckee river in Nevada.

Numerous discoveries of gold, silver, and cinabar mines have been added to the many heretofore known, and the country occupied by the Sierra Nevada and Rocky mountains, and the subordinate ranges, now teems with enterprising labor, which is richly remunerative. It is believed that the product of the mines of precious metals in that region has, during the year, reached, if not exceeded, one hundred millions in value.

It was recommended in my last annual message that our Indian system be remodeled. Congress, at its last session, acting upon the recommendation, did provide for reorganizing the system in California, and it is believed that under the present organization the management of the Indians there will be attended with reasonable success. Much yet remains to be done to provide for the proper government of the Indians in other parts of the country to render it secure for the advancing settler, and to provide for the welfare of the Indian. The Secretary reiterates his recommendations, and to them the attention of Congress is invited.

The liberal provisions made by Congress for paying pensions to invalid soldiers and sailors of the Republic, and to the widows, orphans, and dependent mothers of those who have fallen in battle, or died of disease contracted or of wounds received in the service of their country, have been diligently administered. There have been added to the pension rolls, during the year ending the 30th day of June last, the names of 16,770 invalid soldiers, and of 271 disabled seamen, making the present number of Army invalid pensioners 22,767, and of Navy invalid pensioners 712.

Of widows, orphans, and mothers, 22,198 have been placed on the Army pension rolls, and 248 on the Navy rolls. The present number of Army pensioners of this class is 25,433, and of Navy pensioners 793. At the beginning of the year the number of revolutionary pensioners was 1,430; only twelve of them were soldiers, of whom seven have since died. The remainder are those who, under the law, receive pensions because of relationship to revolutionary soldiers. During the year ending the 30th of June, 1864, $4,504,616 92 have been paid to pensioners of all classes.

I cheerfully commend to your continued patronage the benevolent institutions of the District of Columbia which have hitherto been established or fostered by Congress, and respectfully refer, for information concerning them, and in relation to the Washington aqueduct, the Capitol, and other matters of local interest, to the report of the Secretary.

The Agricultural Department, under the supervision of its present energetic and faithful head, is rapidly commending itself to the great and vital interest it was created to advance. It is peculiarly the people's Department, in which they feel more directly concerned than in any other. I commend it to the continued attention and fostering care of Congress.

The war continues. Since the last annual message all the important lines and positions then occupied by our forces have been maintained, and our arms have steadily advanced; thus liberating the regions left in the rear, so that Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, and parts of other States have again produced reasonably fair crops.

The most remarkable feature in the military operations of the year is General Sherman's attempted march of three hundred miles directly through the insurgent region. It tends to show a great increase of our relative strength that our General-in-Chief should feel able to confront and hold in check every active force of the enemy, and yet to detach a well appointed large army to move on such an expedition. The result not yet being known, conjecture in regard to it is not here indulged.

Important movements have also occurred during the year to the effect of molding society for durability in the Union. Although short of complete success, it is much in the right direction, that twelve thousand citizens in each of the States of Arkansas and Louisiana have organized loyal

State governments, with free constitutions, and are earnestly struggling to maintain and administer them. The movements in the same direction, more extensive, though less definite, in Missouri, Kentucky, and Tennessee, should not be overlooked. But Maryland presents the example of complete success. Maryland is secure to Liberty and Union for all the future. The genius of rebellion will no more claim Maryland. Like another foul spirit, being driven out, it may seek to tear her, but it will woo her no more.

At the last session of Congress a proposed amendment of the Constitution, abolishing slavery throughout the United States, passed the Senate, but failed for lack of the requisite two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives. Although the present is the same Congress, and nearly the same members, and without questioning the wisdom or patriotism of those who stood in opposition, I venture to recommend the reconsideration and passage of the measure at the present session. Of course the abstract question is not changed; but an intervening election shows, almost certainly, that the next Congress will pass the measure if this does not. Hence there is only a question of time as to when the proposed amendment will go to the States for their action. And as it is so to go, at all events, may we not agree that the sooner the better? It is not claimed that the election has imposed a duty on members to change their views or their votes, any further than, as an additional element to be considered, their judgment may be affected by it. It is the voice of the people now, for the first time, heard upon the question. In a great national crisis like ours, unanimity of action among those seeking a common end is very desirable—almost indispensable. And yet no approach to such unanimity is attainable unless some deference shall be paid to the will of the majority simply because it is the will of the majority. In this case the common end is the maintenance of the Union; and, among the means to secure that end, such will, through the election is most clearly declared in favor of such constitutional amendment.

The most reliable indication of public purpose in this country is derived through our popular elections. Judging by the recent canvass and its result, the purpose of the people, within the loyal States, to maintain the integrity of the Union, was never more firm, nor more nearly unanimous, than now. The extraordinary calmness and good order with which the millions of voters met and mingled at the polls, give strong assurance of this. Not only all those who supported the Union ticket, so called, but a great majority of the opposing party also, may be fairly claimed to entertain and to be actuated by the same purpose. It is an unanswerable argument to this effect, that no candidate for any office whatever, high or low, has ventured to seek votes on the avowal that he was for giving up the Union. There have been much impugning of motives, and much heated controversy as to the proper means and best mode of advancing the Union cause; but on the distinct issue of Union or no Union the politicians have shown their instinctive knowledge that there is no diversity among the people. In affording the people the fair opportunity of showing, one to another and to the world, this firmness and unanimity of purpose, the election has been of vast value to the national cause.

The election has exhibited another fact not less valuable to be known—the fact that we do not approach exhaustion in the most important branch of national resources—that of living men. While it is melancholy to reflect that the war has filled so many graves and carried mourning to so many hearts, it is some relief to know that, compared with the surviving, the fallen have been so few. While corps and divisions and brigades and regiments have formed and fought and dwindled and gone out of existence, a great majority of the men who composed them are still living. The same is true of the naval service. The election returns prove this. So many voters could not else be found. The States regularly holding elections both now and four years ago, to wit: California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, cast 3,982,011 votes now against 3,870,222 cast then, showing an aggregate now of 3,982,011. To this is to be added 33,762 cast now in the new States of Kansas and Nevada, which States did not vote in 1860, thus swelling the aggregate to 4,015,773 and the net increase during the three years and a half of war to 145,551. A table is appended showing particulars. To this again should be added the number of all soldiers in the field from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, Indiana, Illinois, and California, who by the laws of those States could not vote away from their homes, and which number cannot be less than 90,000. Nor yet is this all. The number in organized Territories is triple now what it was four years ago, while thousands, white and black, join us as the national arms press back the insurgent lines. So much is shown affirmatively and negatively by the election. It is not material to inquire how the increase has been produced or to show that it would have been greater but for the war, which is probably true. The important fact remains demonstrated that we have more men now than we had when the war began; that we are not exhausted nor in process of exhaustion; that we are gaining strength and may, if need be, maintain the contest indefinitely. This as to men. Material resources are now more complete and abundant than ever.

The national resources, then, are unexhausted, and, as we believe, inexhaustible. The public purpose to reestablish and maintain the national authority is unchanged, and, as we believe, unchangeable. The manner of continuing the effort remains to choose. On careful consideration of all the evidence accessible, it seems to me that no attempt at negotiation with the insurgent leader could result in any good. He would accept nothing short of severance of the Union—precisely what we will not and cannot give. His declarations to this effect are explicit and oft repeated. He does not attempt to deceive us. He affords us no excuse to deceive ourselves. He cannot voluntarily reaccept the Union; we cannot voluntarily yield it. Between him and us the issue is distinct, simple, and inflexible. It is an issue which can only be tried by war, and decided by victory. If we yield, we are beaten; if the southern people fail him, he is beaten. Either way, it would be the victory and defeat following war. What is true, however, of him who heads the insurgent cause is not necessarily true of those who follow. Although he cannot reaccept the Union, they can. Some of them, we know, already desire peace and reunion. The number of such may increase. They can at any moment have peace simply by laying down their arms and submitting to the national authority under the Constitution. After so much, the Government could not, if it would, maintain war against them. The loyal people would not sustain or allow it. If questions should remain, we would adjust them by the peaceful means of legislation, conference, courts, and votes, operating only in constitutional and lawful channels. Some certain, and other possible, questions are, and would be, beyond the executive power to adjust; as, for instance, the admission of members into Congress, and whatever might require the appropriation of money. The executive power itself would be greatly diminished by the cessation of actual war. Pardons and remissions of forfeitures, however, would still be within executive control. In what spirit and temper this control would be exercised can be fairly judged of by the past.

A year ago general pardon and amnesty, upon specified terms, were offered to all, except certain designated classes; and it was, at the same time, made known that the excepted classes were still within contemplation of special clemency. During the year many availed themselves of the general provision, and many more would, only that the signs of bad faith in some, led to such precautionary measures as rendered the practical process less easy and certain. During the same time also special pardons have been granted to individuals of the excepted classes, and no voluntary application has been denied. Thus, practically, the door has been, for a full year, open to all, except such as were not in condition to make free choice—that is, such as were in custody or under constraint. It is still so open to all. But the time may come—probably will come—when public duty shall demand that it be closed; and that, in lieu, more rigorous measures than heretofore shall be adopted.

In presenting the abandonment of armed resistance to the national authority on the part of the insurgents as the only indispensable condition to ending the war on the part of the Government, I retract nothing heretofore said as to slavery. I repeat the declaration made a year ago, that "while I remain in my present position I shall not attempt to retract or modify the emancipation proclamation, nor shall I return to slavery any person who is free by the terms of that proclamation, or by any of the acts of Congress." If the people should, by whatever mode or means, make it an executive duty to reenslave such persons, another, and not I, must be their instrument to perform it.

In stating a single condition of peace, I mean simply to say that the war will cease on the part of the Government whenever it shall have ceased on the part of those who began it.

Report of the Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 5, 1864.

SIR: In submitting the annual report of the transactions of this Department and of the Navy, with those of the several bureaus for the year, it affords me pleasure to assure you that the condition of affairs is satisfactory, and that the discipline and efficiency of the service continue to be faithfully maintained. After many years of peace and comparative inactivity, the officers and sailors of our Navy were suddenly called to the performance of extraordinary and exacting duties, and, during nearly four years of exhausting civil war, they have manifested their attachment to the Union and their fidelity to the national flag by rigidly enforcing a gigantic blockade of our coast, by vigilantly patrolling the great national rivers of the interior, and by a succession of ocean and coastwise expeditions, achievements which have not only added to our naval renown but greatly promoted our national integrity and strength.

When the change of administration took place in March, 1861, the war had already been virtually begun—the forts, and arsenals, and custom-houses, and mints, and navy-yards, and national property within the rebel States had been seized without resistance. The retiring Administration manifested its inability to assert the national authority, and its disinclination to vindicate the national supremacy, and closed its term, and that of the Thirty-Sixth Congress, without any preparatory measures for the tremendous convulsion which was even then shaking the Union to its center and threatening our existence as a nation.

In six weeks after I had entered upon the administration of this Department, a blockade, extending over more than three thousand five hundred miles of our coast, was ordered; and for this stupendous work, pronounced to be impracticable by the highest foreign authorities, we had a feeble Navy, reduced to the lowest peace establishment, composed largely of sailing vessels, most of which were dismantled or dispersed abroad. Of the limited number of seamen authorized by law, only about two hundred were available at all our naval stations and receiving ships. Many of the officers became demoralized and deserted. In this enfeebled condition, without men, or ships, or ordnance, or resources placed at its disposal, the Department was called upon to establish and enforce the most extensive blockade that was ever undertaken to be effectually maintained by any nation.

To make available every naval vessel, to recall our foreign squadrons, to increase our force by building new vessels, and by procuring for naval purposes, from the merchant service, every steamer which could be made a fighting vessel, to enlarge at once the capacity of the navy-yards, to put in requisition the foundries and workshops of the country for supplies of ordnance and steam machinery, to augment the number of seamen, and to supply the deficiency of officers by selecting experienced and able shipmasters and others from the commercial marine, were among the important and responsible duties which were precipitated upon the Department at that exciting and interesting period.

The measures promptly and energetically adopted caused an immense navy to spring into existence, not to carry on a maritime war, for the rebels had no navy to stimulate our sailors to glorious deeds, nor commerce to reward their activity; but men, and ships, and ordnance, and supplies were speedily collected for the onerous naval duties needful to sustain our national unity and preserve our national rights.

Besides instituting the extensive blockade of the coast, naval expeditions were organized at the earliest possible period to assert and restore the national authority at important points within the insurrectionary region. The first of these expeditions was organized and sailed from Hampton Roads in August, under the command of Rear Admiral Stringham, and resulted in the capture of Hatteras, and was the first reconquest of a strong position which was effected on our coast. This was followed a few weeks later by the victory of Rear Admiral Du Pont at Port Royal, which secured a commodious harbor for the ships of the South Atlantic squadron. The achievements on the lower Mississippi, where Rear Admiral Farragut dashed open the gates of the passage to New Orleans, and restored to the Union the commercial metropolis of the South, were accomplished the following spring. Those three important expeditions, comprising, in each case, a larger fleet than had ever been fitted out on this continent, and two of them seldom surpassed in naval annals, were planned, organized, and carried into execution in the first year of the war, in addition to an immense blockade, which was at the same time so vigilantly and rigorously enforced that the rebels even then felt and complained of its exhausting severity. Other harbors and places have from time to time been seized and occupied, the last being the bay of Mobile and the fortifications at its entrance, effected by the same distinguished officer who had thrown open the lower Mississippi to uninterrupted navigation two years before. Nor have the prowess and skill of our Navy in this unhappy contest, involving the integrity of the Union and our national supremacy, been felt upon the seaboard alone. On our inland waters, at Fort Henry, at Donelson, at Shiloh, at Island No. 10, at Memphis, at Arkansas Post, at Vicksburg, at Port Hudson, and at almost every important place on the Mississippi, the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and other rivers of the Southwest, the Navy has been active in reestablishing the national authority. A fleet of more than one hundred vessels has been put afloat on those waters, and most of them are now patrolling those rivers in the national cause.

It has been the policy of this Department, rigidly adhered to under all circumstances, and from which it has not allowed itself to be diverted, never to permit the efficiency of the blockade to be impaired during these domestic troubles. Hence no large squadrons have been maintained on foreign stations. Cruisers and men-of-war have been sent out or ordered to important points to protect American interests, and capture or destroy the few predatory rovers which from time to time have ventured abroad to depredate on our commerce.

THE BLOCKADE.

The blockade of a coast line of three thousand five hundred and forty-nine miles in length, greater in extent than the whole coast of Europe from Cape Trafalgar to Cape North, is an undertaking without precedent in history. During our last war with Great Britain, when that Power had eight hundred naval vessels in commission, not a single port of the United States was thoroughly closed. The most serious attempts of the great maritime Powers have consisted in endeavors to interdict trade at a few of the principal ports of a belligerent. Immediately after closing the ports of the States in rebellion, and giving that act the character of a blockade, the efforts of this Department were directed toward securing several harbors at comparatively equidistant points, as bases of operations for the several squadrons, where our naval vessels could receive their supplies and maintain themselves at their stations and on their cruising ground, without returning to northern ports for repairs and refittings. To have done this would not only have endangered the efficiency, but in some instances might have involved an abandonment of the blockade. To this end there were set on foot various coast expeditions which have resulted in our taking possession of or closing all the ports excepting Wilmington. From various causes, Cape Fear river is more difficult to blockade than any port on the coast of the United States. The two main entrances are forty miles apart, and these two are subdivided into several others, each of which affords an entrance to vessels. The water shoals gradually and regularly to the shore line, and numerous isolated batteries are erected along the coast, so that a blockade runner of light draught is not under the necessity of making directly for the entrance, but can, by the lead, run close under the land protected by the batteries, and pass in over the bar at leisure. When coming out, a steamer will select her own time, thus securing every advantage, and she can pass either up or down the coast before making an offing, or she may proceed straight out to sea, trusting for her escape to the night and favoring darkness and mists, and the fact that she is under full speed, while the steamers blockading must have low steam.

Almost every vessel employed in violating the blockade has been constructed in England with great skill, regardless of cost, and with sole reference to engaging in this illicit trade, the profits of which are almost as remunerative as those attending the slave trade, a kindred traffic, that all Christendom discountenances, and the most powerful maritime nations have combined in vain to suppress; yet the slave trade is carried on within limits which measure but a fraction of our extended blockade. The cupidity of English merchants, aided by their vast resources, together with the advantages derived from those triangular depots of blockade runners and of rebel supplies—the ports of Halifax, Bermuda, and Nassau, ports which will always be in sympathy with the enemies of this country—has induced them to engage in this trade. The illicit traffic with the rebels, who are making war upon our Government, belongs to that code of commercial morals which prompted the smuggling of opium into China, and the rule of those who engage in it is to trade, legally or illegally. If it be illegal, it is the business of the Chinese and Americans, not of Englishmen, to prevent it.

Many who have failed to make themselves acquainted with the facts connected with the Wilmington blockade have been free and severe in their censures of the manner in which it has been conducted. The intelligent officers of the naval and merchant service who have labored with untiring zeal and assiduity, and watched with sleepless vigilance through weary months of winter and summer, and in all weathers, stimulated by the hope of benefiting their country and receiving its thanks, as well as by every inducement to fame and pecuniary reward, if successful, do not concur in the opinion that the port of Wilmington can be entirely closed by blockade.

Convinced, as this Department always has been, that it is necessary to take possession of the entrances, so as to permit our armed vessels of light draught to go inside, no opportunity has been omitted to impress the necessity of joint naval and military operations for that purpose. The Navy has been at all times ready to perform its part in such an expedition; but the Army has not yet been able to unite in a conjoint movement. Neither branch of the service can expect to be successful in an attack upon this position independent of the other. Were there deep water at Wilmington, as at New Orleans, Mobile, and Port Royal, either of those operations could be repeated at that point, but by reason of the shoalness of the water, an exclusively naval operation cannot be relied upon to be successful.

WESTERN GULF SQUADRON.

An object earnestly cherished by the Navy, but which had been delayed for Army coöperation, was the possession of the bay of Mobile. In anticipation that this would receive early attention, Rear Admiral Farragut rejoined his squadron in January; but the operation was still further postponed for military demonstrations in Texas and on Red river.

Commodore Bell, who had been left in charge, actively coöperated with the Army in its movements for the occupation of certain points in Texas.

The possession and occupation of Brownsville, briefly mentioned in my last report, was followed by a like movement at Brazos, Avansas, and Cabello passes, in all of which the naval forces detailed by Commodore Bell, and placed under command of Commander J. H. Strong, afforded all required assistance.

Prior to the occupation of the left bank of the Rio Grande, the mouth of that river had been made the rendezvous of vessels of various nationalities engaged in violating, indirectly, the blockade; the demoralized condition of Mexico, and the mutual rights of the two countries on the river and at its entrance, affording unusual facilities to the illicit traders. Commander Strong reported some sixty vessels anchored in the Mexican waters of the Rio Grande, carrying on an extensive trade, chiefly in cotton, with the rebels through Matamoros, which had thus suddenly become a great commercial mart. This traffic, which had been prosecuted with success, in consequence of our inability, under treaty stipulations, to completely blockade the Rio Grande, was effectually stopped by the occupation of Brownsville, which was followed by the President's proclamation of February 18, 1864, relaxing, conditionally, the blockade of that port.

But this possession of the several ports of Texas was of short duration. After a few months' occupation the military forces were withdrawn, and the duty of guarding that extensive coast was thus again devolved exclusively upon the Navy. Under orders of August 18 to Rear Admiral Farragut, the blockade was resumed on the 9th of September, and has been since maintained.

The bay of Mobile, guarded at its entrance by two imposing fortifications constructed by the Federal Government in former years, was difficult to blockade, and was one of the principal ports for illicit trade with the rebels. It had been the steady purpose of this Department to get possession of that bay as soon as operations on the Mississippi would permit the detachment of a sufficient coöperating military force for the expedition. But repeated coöperative movements having this purpose in view were commenced, and then abandoned for Army operations elsewhere. In the mean time the rebels, availing themselves of this delay and of the advantages of this position, proceeded to the collection and construction of a formidable navy, with a view of raising the blockade.

The information received was of such a character that the Department deemed it important that Rear Admiral Farragut should resume his command, which he did, and on the 18th of January arrived off Mobile. It was no part of the plans or intentions of that officer or of the Department to await the offensive movements of the rebel commander. To attack, not to defend, was his policy; and it was with some impatience that he awaited the means to justify him in putting that policy into successful operation. Knowing the disadvantage of attacking iron-cased vessels with wooden ones, and that, too, in the face and under the guns of heavy fortresses without a coöperating land force, he deferred the movement until the necessary elements of success could reach him. But in the mean time he stood ever ready to meet and measure his strength with the iron-clad fleet of Buchanan, should it venture to come out. Thus he constantly threatened an attack on Mobile, thereby aiding the Army in its general movements elsewhere.

Military coöperation was secured in the early part of August, and two iron-clads from James river and two from the Mississippi having reached him, Rear Admiral Farragut, at 5.40 o'clock on the morning of the 5th of August, got his fleet under way and entered Mobile bay, passing between Forts Morgan and Gaines. Silencing their guns as he passed, he encountered the rebel squadron, which by 10 o'clock was dispersed, captured, or destroyed. This engagement, in many respects one of the most remarkable on record, and which added new luster even to the renown of Rear Admiral Farragut, was not without serious loss on the part of his fleet. The most serious of these was the destruction of the iron-clad Tecumseh, one of his most formidable vessels, by a torpedo, early in the action, and the loss of her gallant commander, T. A. M. Craven, and nearly all of her brave officers and crew. It was from the Tecumseh that the first shot was fired at Fort Morgan. The total casualties, not including those of the Tecumseh, were fifty-two killed, and one hundred and seventy wounded.

After the capture of one of the rebel gunboats by the Metacomet, and the retreat of two others under the guns of Fort Morgan, the iron-clad ram Tennessee, bearing the flag of the rebel Admiral Buchanan, maintained the contest. For awhile the action was fierce and sanguinary. The wooden ships defiantly encountered the Tennessee, although her armor was impervious to their guns, while our iron-clads grappled fiercely with their formidable antagonist. The Manhattan, with one of her 15-inch shot, broke through the armor of the Tennessee, and a monitor shot also disabled the steering gear, and thus rendered her helpless. At ten o'clock she surrendered. Twenty officers and about one hundred and seventy men were captured in this vessel, and ninety officers and men in the Selma. The capture of these two vessels, and the retreat of the two remaining rebel gunboats under the guns of Fort Morgan, terminated the glorious battle of the 5th of August.

On the following day one of the iron-clads shelled Fort Gaines with such effect that Colonel Anderson, the commander, sent a communication to Rear Admiral Farragut offering to surrender. General Granger, commanding the United States military forces, was sent for, and the terms of capitulation were signed by the respective parties on board of the Hartford.

From this time onward movements were in progress for capturing Fort Morgan, and on the 23d of August, at day dawn, a bombardment was opened from the shore batteries, the monitors and ships inside, and the vessels outside the bay. At six a. m. of the 23d a white flag was displayed by the rebels, and at two o'clock p. m. the fort was unconditionally surrendered to the Navy and Army of the United States. A naval shore battery did good service on this occasion.

Fort Powell had been already attacked on the night of the 5th and blown up, the guns falling into our hands.

The capture of Forts Powell, Gaines, and Morgan, and the destruction of the rebel fleet, gave us possession of the bay and closed the port to all ingress or egress of blockade runners. This was all that was contemplated. Possession of the city of Mobile could not make the blockade more effectual, and without a sufficient coöperating land force, which could not then be spared, to take and hold the place, further demonstration was not advisable.

To obstruct naval operations the bay had been strewn with torpedoes, and as late as the 13th of September Rear Admiral Farragut wrote the Department that he was still engaged in removing them. One hundred it was reported had been placed in the bay by the rebels.

EAST GULF SQUADRON.

The limits of the Eastern Gulf squadron have been extended so as to embrace within its cruising grounds the waters of the Bahamas and the vicinity of Cuba.

On the 7th of August Acting Rear Admiral Bailey, whose health was suffering from the debilitating influence of the climate, turned over the command of the squadron by permission of the Department to Captain Theodore P. Greene, the officer next in rank, and came North. Captain Greene continued in command until the 12th of October, when he was relieved by Acting Rear Admiral C. K. Stribling.

Notwithstanding the sanitary precautions adopted for the health of this squadron, many of the vessels failed to escape the infection of the yellow fever, so much and so justly dreaded, and had to seek a northern climate during the summer. The system of promptly ordering vessels to a healthier locality the moment they become infected has been in its effect salutary, the ravages of the disease have thereby been checked, and the ship's complement soon restored to the usual standard of health.

Although the squadron was temporarily reduced by these withdrawals, no serious interruption took place in the disposition of the blockade, which has continued to be effective. Less frequent captures, and other indications, demonstrate that the traffic and communication with the Florida coast has pretty much ceased.

The monotony of blockade life has, in repeated instances, been broken by boat expeditions and armed incursions for the destruction of salt manufactories, which abound on the Florida shore, many of which are the public property of the insurgents. These expeditions, although apparently unimportant when compared with the great naval achievements which have given renown to our sailors in neighboring waters, have nevertheless inflicted serious injury upon the rebels, by exhausting their resources, and have developed the zeal and energy of our officers and seamen. A number of such expeditions have been organized during the year and conducted to a successful issue with little loss of life, and without relaxing or neglecting the special and paramount service of the blockade.

In May an expedition was planned by the rebels for capturing or destroying one of our blockading steamers off Appalachicola. The organization consisted of some hundred men led by rebel naval officers. Information of the proposed movement was timely received, and a joint naval and military force was dispatched against the party and succeeded in capturing some of them, with six of their seven boats, their ammunition, flags, and accompaniments. Detailed reports of this affair, as well as of others, which are creditable to the officers and men engaged in them, form a part of the appendix to this report.

SOUTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON.

The coast under blockade by the South Atlantic squadron is about three hundred miles in extent, and a considerable portion of it is a network of inlets and sounds. Within the limits of this command are two of the chief seaports of the insurgents—Charleston and Savannah—cities of wealth and marts of commerce in other days, but the war which they commenced, and which they still continue to wage against the Union, has caused each of them to be sealed up, and has destroyed their wealth and prosperity.

The craving for commerce and luxuries at Charleston, which the rebellion has not extinguished, with the increasing hazards of running the blockade at Wilmington, have prompted some reckless adventurers to expose their fortunes in efforts to elude the squadron of Admiral Dahlgren. Several valuable steamers having been lost in these attempts, the efforts were for a time almost entirely discontinued.

Charleston and Savannah, besides being among the best defended points on the Atlantic coast, possess advantages for a navy, on which the insurgent leaders felt much reliance in the early days of the rebellion. There they have had armored vessels, and rams, and torpedo-boats, or "Davids" and "Divers," elements with which they threatened to achieve success over the open warfare of the naval forces of the Union. Charleston, disaffected without cause, and aspiring without enterprise, having, after long and persistent efforts, succeeded in seducing others to engage with her in assailing the national Government, and attempting a dismemberment of the Union, fails to become either a naval or commercial emporium. She has dragged down others without elevating herself, and is fast becoming a waste.

No formidable independent operations, in the form of naval conflicts, have been made by the squadron during the year. A steady, unrelenting blockade has been rigidly enforced, with no attractive and exciting incidents, but which has been effective and exhausting upon the rebels.

In February a detachment of vessels was sent to the St. John's river to aid a military force intended to be thrown into Florida. Rear Admiral Dahlgren accompanied the expedition in person, saw the proper coöperative arrangements made, and assigned an adequate naval force, which is holding possession of all points on the St. John's occupied by our Army. In March a diversion was made at Bull's bay. In May a force was detailed to coöperate in an effort to sever the railroad between Charleston and Savannah. A detachment of iron-clads crossed Stono bar in July to assist General Foster in a demonstration upon the rebel works on Stono river and James island. Rear Admiral Dahlgren conducted the naval force in person. In these and other military movements the Navy has been always active and ready to extend cordial coöperation to every Army operation.

In February permission was given to Rear Admiral Dahlgren to leave his squadron in command of Commodore S. C. Rowan. On resuming his duties in May, he found that General Gillmore had been called, with the greater part of his army, to another field, leaving behind, however, a sufficient defensive force when sustained by the Navy. The withdrawal of so large a portion of the military force, necessarily put a stop to further serious demonstration against Charleston.

The retention of the harbor, as well as the entire safety of that coast, depended thenceforward mainly on the iron-clads. They were indispensable for the continued possession of Morris Island by our troops, and they could not have been withdrawn without putting in jeopardy the blockading fleet which, as well as the land force, would have been assailed by the armored rebel vessels. The capability of the monitors to hold position off Morris Island had been controverted by the former intelligent commander of the squadron, who denied its practicability, and had deemed it his duty in June, 1863, to enter a protest against it. His representations, with those of the officers therein in command of the iron-clads, that those vessels could not remain off the harbor, nor nearer to that point than North Edisto, with other suggested difficulties, caused the Department to consider well its purpose before carrying out the original order, that the monitors should remain inside the bar and off Morris Island, as the only effectual method of entirely closing the port, and making any further demonstrations.

The views of the Department were sustained by other naval officers of judgment and ability. Younger officers also made a voluntary tender of their services, as well as some of those who had doubted, each offering to take the risks which the great stake justified; while the sailors, always ready for any service or to encounter any hardship, imitated and emulated their example.

The result has been that Rear Admiral Dahlgren has kept these vessels for seventeen months where it was insisted they could not remain, to the great injury of the original seat of the rebellion. The work has been irksome and laborious, unremunerative, and perhaps not sufficiently appreciated, for it has been quiet and undemonstrative, without those occasional captures which, before taking possession of the harbor, enlivened and rewarded the officers and crews.

Intelligence that the rebels were strengthening Fort Sumter, building bomb-proofs, and mounting heavy guns on the channel faces, led Rear Admiral Dahlgren early in the summer to entertain the thought of attacking that fortification and attempting the passage with his iron-clads. It was a question of great responsibility, for the assault, if made, would draw upon the vessels the concentrated fire of many powerful batteries; he therefore called a council of his officers in command, and, after a full discussion, a large majority deemed it, under the circumstances, unadvisable. It was consequently abandoned.

Several creditable incursions have been made at various points within the limits of this command, resulting in the discomfiture of the rebels. Details of these, as of those of the other squadrons, are appended to this report. Occasional assaults have been made upon our vessels off Charleston by torpedo-boats, and in one instance with success, by sinking the steam sloop-of-war Housatonic, but fortunately with little loss of life.

NORTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON.

The number of vessels and officers and men employed in the North Atlantic squadron exceeds that of any other, and its importance is certainly not less. In addition to blockading the only remaining port of commercial intercourse in the rebel States, on this squadron has devolved the duty of guarding and holding possession of the great inland waters of North Carolina and Virginia, and an extensive coöperation with the armies which are threatening Richmond and its vicinity.

In order to secure the most thorough and efficient discharge of duty that is possible in every department of this squadron, and especially that of the blockade off Wilmington, Acting Rear Admiral Lee, by direction of the Department, established four divisions of the squadron, namely: one on James river, one in the sounds of North Carolina, and two off Cape Fear and adjacent inlets, each of which was placed under an experienced officer, and Acting Rear Admiral Lee removed his headquarters in July from Hampton Roads to Beaufort.

For some months previous to May last the rebels had been left in quiet possession of James river for a considerable distance below Richmond, but the progress of the Potomac army toward the rebel capital was the signal for active operations in another quarter. On the 5th of May Major General Butler moved his army from Newport News, under convoy of a naval force which had been assembled for the purpose, up James river, and made the following night a successful landing at Bermuda Hundred and City Point. The movement was quietly performed, and the landing was promptly effected. The absence of a military or naval force on the James river had been improved by the rebels to plant in its bed formidable torpedoes, by which two of the light-draught boats were destroyed.

From the landing of the army of the James in May, a naval force competent to meet the armored vessels and rams of the insurgents, had they made a demonstration, has been maintained on the upper waters of the James. On various occasions sharp but brief engagements have occurred between our vessels and the rebel batteries forming the defense of Richmond.

The naval force had anticipated an encounter with the rebel fleet which had been in the course of preparation for two years, but the military commanders, out of abundant precaution, ordered obstructions to be placed in the channel by sinking vessels for the protection of the large transport fleet that was in attendance upon the Army, and which it was apprehended might be disturbed and perhaps endangered in the narrow waters, were a demonstration to be made by all or any portion of the rebel navy. The security of the transports was justly deemed of vital importance to the Army, and required to be placed beyond any contingency. Hence this obstruction of the river, in addition to the protection afforded by our iron-clads and other naval vessels, was doubtless a wise military precaution, although it restricted the movements of the Navy.

The operations in the sounds of North Carolina have been interesting and important. It had been a cherished idea of the rebel leaders to repossess themselves of the sounds, and to regain the principal places on them, which had been wrested from rebel authority early in the war by the united efforts of the Army and Navy. Preparations were long in progress for the construction of armored vessels, and others of light draught, on the Roanoke and Neuse rivers, with intent to descend and drive out from the sounds our fleet of slightly-built wooden boats, recapture Plymouth, Newbern, and other points held by our arms, and reestablish rebel power in that quarter. These schemes, though partially successful at the commencement, soon closed in disaster.

Delays in the completion of the armored vessels ordered by the Department, and especially intended for service in shallow waters, which were inaccessible to the monitor vessels already built, jeopardized our possession of the sounds. There was also the want of an adequate military force in that quarter.

On the 17th of April the rebels besieged Plymouth, and two days after the rebel ram Albemarle descended the Roanoke river and attacked the wooden gunboats lying off that town. On the 20th the defenses were carried, the garrison became prisoners, and the rebels obtained possession of the upper sound. In consequence of Army reverses, vigorous measures were immediately taken by this Department to prevent further disaster. Captain Melancthon Smith, an officer of much naval experience, was sent to the sounds with vessels of heavier armament, and instructed to take command, attack the armored ram at all hazards, and use all means to destroy her. On the 5th of May the ram came out of Roanoke river, and Captain Smith engaged her with his gunboats. The action continued from 4.40 to 7.30 p. m., when darkness intervened, and the Albemarle retreated up the river. Shot fell from her armor apparently without effect, and the efforts to run her down were unsuccessful. Her consort, a small Army steamer which had been captured and converted into a naval vessel, was recaptured.

On but one subsequent occasion did the Albemarle make her appearance, and then she quickly retired on being fired at. As there was no known cause to prevent her making another demonstration, a competent naval force was always in readiness to meet her. But the inactivity of awaiting her movements was irksome and paralyzing, and her destruction by other means became an object.

Lieutenant W. B. Cushing, a young officer who had on previous occasions gained the admiration of the Department by his daring and adventurous heroism, was selected to destroy the Albemarle by a torpedo, properly arranged in a light picket boat, to be placed at his disposal. The torpedo is the invention of Chief Engineer W. W. Wood, and possesses extraordinary power. It was arranged and applied to the picket boat at the suggestion and under the direction of Rear Admiral F. H. Gregory and his able assistants. Lieutenant Cushing was directed to have the means for carrying out the views of the Department prepared, and when these were completed it was quickly and brilliantly executed. With fourteen brave officers and men, who volunteered for the service, he, on the night of October 27, ascended the Roanoke to Plymouth, assailed the ram at her wharf, though guarded by a military force on shore, as well as by her crew, and sunk her. Only himself and one of his party escaped death or capture.

This daring and successful exploit removed the reliable defense of Plymouth. Commander Maccomb, senior officer in the sounds, promptly availed himself of the advantages of Lieutenant Cushing's achievement. With the naval force at his command he pressed on to Plymouth, drove the rebels from their rifle-pits and batteries, and on the 31st of October took possession of the place, capturing a few prisoners, thirty-two cannon, small-arms, and ammunition, thus reestablishing the Union supremacy in the sounds of North Carolina.

From July, 1863, when the rebels were driven from Morris Island by the combined forces of Rear Admiral Dahlgren and Major General Gillmore, and the Navy thereby gained command of the entrance to, and possession of Charleston harbor, so that monitor vessels could remain inside, blockade running ceased almost entirely in that quarter, and was transferred to, and vigorously prosecuted at Wilmington.

This locality possesses singular natural advantages to resist a blockade, to which the rebels have added others in the way of earthworks, with powerful guns, to cover the blockade runners, and to open on our vessels whenever they come within range. These shore batteries were made to command the several channels and the numerous inlets in that quarter.

The difficulties of closing this port entirely, while rebel forts command the channels, and which none of our ships with heavy broadside batteries can approach, by reason of the extreme shallowness of the water, can be rightly appreciated by those only who are familiar with the locality, and have had experience on that station. Without a coöperating land force, it is not expected that we could close the port of Wilmington. There has been no time within the last two years when the Navy has not been ready and anxious to perform its part in such an expedition, for the possession of the entrances to Cape Fear river is a necessity to stop entirely all ingress to or egress from that place. Running the blockade at that point has been made a matter of business by foreign capitalists, as well as by the rebels. Such has been and is the stringency of the blockade, that articles of commerce command fabulous prices throughout the whole insurrectionary region, thereby stimulating the cupidity of reckless neutrals. But while a successful trip begets large profits, the blockade has not been violated with impunity. Heavy losses have befallen most of those who have been engaged in the illicit trade. Sixty-five steamers, the aggregate value of which, with their cargoes, will scarcely fall short of thirteen million dollars, have been captured or destroyed in endeavoring to enter or escape from Wilmington. Over fifty such results have occurred since Rear Admiral Dahlgren anchored his monitor fleet inside of Charleston bar and closed that port to commerce.

Some idea of the difficulty of closing the main entrances to Cape Fear river, which are nearly forty miles apart, can be formed when it is considered that with fifty of our steamers, some of them the fastest in the service, stationed and distributed by naval officers of intelligence and experience, off those entrances, blockade runners, watching their opportunity, and availing themselves of dark nights, good pilots, and extraordinary speed, succeed in getting into and out of Wilmington.

Acting Rear Admiral S. P. Lee, who for two years has been in command of this squadron, discharging his arduous duties with intelligence and fidelity, was relieved by Rear Admiral Porter, who took command of the North Atlantic squadron on the 12th of October.

MISSISSIPPI SQUADRON.

The events of the year have furnished additional proof of the wisdom of the policy which dictated the organization of a powerful and efficient squadron on the rivers of the interior. Its usefulness has been demonstrated on many occasions and in various ways: Whether in conveying transports laden with soldiers or supplies destined for the Army, or merchandise and produce of the people; in assisting in repelling attacks upon weak military posts; in rendering more safe the navigation of the streams to commerce and travel; in independent naval expeditions, or in coöperating in extensive military movements, its importance has been manifested.

To obtain possession of the Mississippi, and constantly patrol that great stream from Cairo to New Orleans, is in itself a work of vast magnitude. By it the rebel combinations have been broken, and their organization severed, as it were, by an impassable gulf. The Ohio, Tennessee, and Cumberland rivers have likewise been patrolled. Thus loyal citizens in their vicinity have been protected, refuge has been afforded to those escaping from anarchy and oppression, and partisan bands have been dispersed.

To insure a systematic and vigorous execution of the duties devolving on the squadron, the waters traversed by it have been divided into ten naval districts, each under the command of an experienced officer. While the vessels in each district have their appropriate field of duty, they are held ready to support each other when occasion requires, and can be readily concentrated when an emergency demands it.

The squadron is composed, to a great extent, of boats that had been employed in the carrying trade, but which have been purchased, strengthened, and fitted for war purposes. They are necessarily inferior to naval-built vessels in strength; they are lightly armed, and consequently more liable to disaster. But their cost is greatly inferior to that of iron-clad vessels, or those of heavy structure for ocean service. The most extensive operations of the Mississippi squadron during the year have been in connection with the military expedition on the Red river, which, with the attending incidents, form an interesting page in the annals of the war. The failure of this conjoint expedition to accomplish the important results desired and anticipated are attributable to causes beyond human control, and to the want of success on the part of the military arm of the service. So far as the Navy was concerned, the expedition was chiefly one of coöperation with the Army. It possessed, however, within itself the elements of success under ordinary circumstances, and had not natural obstacles intervened, its history might have been not less brilliant than the record of other achievements of this squadron.

On the 7th of March Rear Admiral Porter had assembled at the mouth of Red river a formidable fleet of iron-clad vessels and of light-draught wooden boats for coöperation with the Army, and was there joined by a portion of Major General Sherman's force in transports, under the command of General A. J. Smith.

The joint forces moved up the river on the 12th of March to form a junction with Major General Banks at Alexandria. In their progress some of the vessels branched off into the Atchafalaya, while the main portion continued up Red river. The rebels were driven in turn from Simmsport and Fort DeRussy, the latter falling again into our possession, with its guns and munitions of war and a few prisoners. Some of the fleetest vessels were dispatched to Alexandria with the hope of cutting off the rebels in their retreat, but without success. That place was occupied by our forces, and about the 1st of April both Army and Navy commenced to move up the river toward Shreveport. A part only of the naval force could proceed further up the river than Alexandria, and it was with difficulty they reached that point. But the assistance of the gunboats was so essential to success, that some risks had to be taken, and extraordinary exertions were made to pass the vessels over the falls so as to give the required coöperation. Main force had to be used to haul the gunboats. But Grand Ecore was reached without accident, and occupied without opposition. There were at this time indications of the usual rise of the season in the river, and everything promised success. Twenty-three heavy guns had been captured from the rebels since the entry into that river. Springfield landing was designated as the point for the next junction of the coöperating forces, and it was reached at the appointed time, three days after leaving Grand Ecore, by six gunboats and twenty heavy transports. Here they learned that the Army under General Banks had met a reverse, and was falling back to Pleasant Hill, some distance below. Rear Admiral Porter was therefore compelled to turn back, with the full knowledge that in retracing his steps he would be interrupted at every assailable point. The rebels, flushed with their success against the Army, availed themselves of every opportunity which offered for harassing the gunboats and transports.

Their cavalry and artillery taking advantage of the winding stream moved rapidly from point to point, attacking on every available occasion. But the gunboats successfully fought their way, and from time to time repelled their assailants with terrible slaughter.

On the 14th of April Rear Admiral Porter got back to Grand Ecore, where he found the vessels which he had left at that point still detained above the bar. The river instead of rising as customary at this season had fallen during his absence. The Army was preparing to move back upon Alexandria; the water having so receded there was little hope of getting the vessels out, and destruction apparently awaited the best portion of the squadron. But, in the words of the admiral, "Providence provided a man for the occasion." Lieutenant Colonel Joseph Bailey, acting engineer of the Nineteenth Army corps, an intelligent and efficient officer, devised a plan for the construction of a series of dams across the rocks at the falls; thus by artificial means to supply that which nature withheld—a sufficient depth of water for the passage of the vessels. Extraordinary as was the project, and received with incredulity, the mind that conceived it was enabled to carry it into successful execution. Men were set at work; woodcutters collected; quarries opened; and after some weeks the undertaking was accomplished. The dams were built, the vessels passed safely over the falls to the delight of the assembled Army and Navy who had mutually participated in the work, and on the 16th of May Rear Admiral Porter had the satisfaction of announcing that the fleet was relieved from danger. There is probably in naval history no other instance of such peril and difficulty so successfully and skillfully surmounted.

Congress very appropriately acknowledged the meritorious services of Lieutenant Colonel Bailey on this occasion, and they have been still further recognized by his promotion.

Interesting details of this and minor expeditions on the Washita, Arkansas, Black, and Yazoo rivers, will be found in the official appendix to this report.

Rear Admiral Porter, having been for nearly two years on arduous and exhausting duty in this command, received leave to return East in the summer, and was subsequently detached in order to take command of the North Atlantic squadron. Captain A. M. Pennock, senior officer on the station, was left in charge. On the 1st of November Acting Rear Admiral S. P. Lee assumed command of the Mississippi squadron, and entered on the discharge of his duties.

POTOMAC FLOTILLA.

The limits of the Potomac flotilla embrace also the waters of the Rappahannock, and at present and during the year have been under the command of Commander Foxhall A. Parker. Upon the flotilla has devolved the duty of arresting the contraband trade attempted to be carried on across the Potomac from Virginia with the lower counties of Maryland, and extending from Alexandria to Chesapeake bay, including the bay itself. It has also been necessary to patrol and guard the Rappahannock. The small craft, which are the vehicles of this traffic, and adapted to it, are well calculated to elude detection. Those engaged in it are reckless, unscrupulous, and unprincipled, so that on no station are greater vigilance and more unceasing watchfulness required than on the part of the officers and men of the flotilla. It is scarcely possible to wholly prevent this species of illicit traffic and blockade running. With so long a line of communication to be patrolled, opportunities will sometimes be found by the contrabandists, who are ever on the watch, and who are aided by sympathizing associates on either shore, to elude detection and capture. Numbers have, however, been captured during the year while in transit; others have been ferreted out and their boats have been destroyed.

At all times and on all occasions the flotilla has given its active and willing coöperation to the military movements. While the Army was in the vicinity of Fredericksburg last spring and summer, the services of the smaller steamers on the Rappahannock were efficient and invaluable. They opened communication with the military forces; cleared large numbers of torpedoes from the river; drove the rebels from its banks; conveyed transports with troops and supplies going to the Army and returning with the wounded and sick from the battle-field. The vessels which are employed in this service are of light draught, and their construction is necessarily slight, consequently those who serve on board of them in a hostile country are exposed to more than ordinary peril. But whether in clearing the banks of the Rappahannock of sharpshooters, or removing from its bed dangerous torpedoes, no less daring and energy have been exhibited than by others in vessels of larger proportions and with greater protection.

PACIFIC SQUADRON.

There has been no material change in the strength of this squadron within the past year. The new steamer Wateree joined it, and orders have been given detaching the Narragansett and ordering her to the Atlantic States.

Acting Rear Admiral Charles H. Bell, having had command of the squadron for three years, has been recently relieved by Acting Rear Admiral George F. Pearson; the transfer took place at Panama on the 25th of October.

No hostile craft has made its appearance in the Pacific, and our commerce has been carried on in its usual channels without interruption, other than that necessarily caused by the measures of foreign Powers in an attitude of hostility toward each other.

The blockade of Mexican ports on the Pacific by the French fleet rendered it important for Acting Rear Admiral Bell to remain several months in that quarter with his flag-ship, in order to look after the interests of the United States. An exception in favor of the steamers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, made in the declaration of blockade, gave them the continued use of the harbor of Acapulco as an intermediate depot, and the presence of the flag-ship, or some other one of the vessels at that port, has aided in giving protection to the property of the company against the acts of lawless persons, and inspired those on board the steamers with a feeling of security from assaults of insurgent cruisers from seaward.

About the middle of April Acting Rear Admiral Bell proceeded from Acapulco to Panama, and thence to Callao, at which port he arrived on the 25th of May, 1864.

Difficulties had arisen between Peru and Spain, which resulted in the seizure, by the naval squadron of the latter, of the Chincha Islands, and it was essential that our extensive fleet of guano vessels frequenting that quarter should have within reach an armed vessel of their own country to give aid and security in the event of unnecessary interruption of their interests. The threatening attitude of these two Powers induced Acting Rear Admiral Bell to remain with the flag-ship at Callao from May until the 5th of October. The remaining vessels of the squadron have visited the Mexican and Central American ports, and it is not known that they have failed in any respect to respond to all proper appeals of our countrymen for aid and encouragement, or to observe and scrupulously regard the rights of, and courtesies due to, friendly nations.

Rumors or reports of a rebel privateer fitting out at Victoria, Vancouver's Island, drew to that quarter the United States steamer Narragansett from San Francisco. The probability of such a scheme being carried into effect was ascertained to be not greater than that which had but a short time previously drawn the United States steamer Saginaw to that locality. After cruising, therefore, a short time in the straits of Fuca and Puget sound, and receiving the friendly assurances of her Britannic Majesty's authorities that every effort would be made to discountenance and arrest any proposed violation of neutrality, the Narragansett returned to San Francisco.

WEST INDIA SQUADRON.

The West India squadron, as an organization, has been discontinued. Acting Rear Admiral James L. Lardner, who had command of it at the date of my last annual report, arrived at Hampton Roads, in the Powhatan, on the 3d of October, in pursuance of orders of the Department.

The principal objects for which this squadron was created had ceased to be prominent, and the chief duties originally assigned to it have been transferred to the East Gulf squadron. There have been no depredations committed in that quarter during the past year. The vessels of the squadron have, in turn, given safe convoy to the California steamers over the most exposed section of their route. This convoy has been since, when expedient, extended over the entire route, by detailing an armed vessel to accompany each steamer.

PIRATICAL CRUISERS.

The three English-built piratical cruisers which, under the rebel flag, have, during the last two years, roamed the seas, robbing and destroying our merchantmen, shunning all armed antagonists, and have found refuge and protection, and too often supplies and other assistance in neutral ports, have terminated their predatory career. Their unrestrained warfare has undoubtedly had the effect of diminishing American tonnage, and caused a transfer of American shipping to English and other flags. Whether the maritime nations of the world will be ultimately benefited by this policy of fostering rebel belligerents may well be doubted. We have been compelled to encounter it as one of the incidents of this extraordinary and unnatural conflict. While notoriously engaged in plunder and in the wanton destruction of our merchant sailing ships, these English-built, and almost exclusively English-manned, rovers have never, during their entire piratical career, and of all their many captures on various seas, sent in for adjudication and condemnation a single ship or cargo. The less bulky and more valuable portions of their robberies were taken on board the corsairs to be sold or covertly transferred in neutral ports, while the stolen chronometers and a few mementoes were retained as memorials of their achievements. All else was destroyed.

The Alabama, eluding our naval vessels at the Cape of Good Hope and straits of Sunda, after committing sundry devastations, returned westward and proceeded to the French port of Cherbourg. Information of her arrival was communicated to Captain Winslow, of the Kearsarge, then at Flushing, who at once proceeded off the harbor, and at twenty minutes past ten a. m. on Sunday, June 19, the Alabama was discovered standing out accompanied by a French iron-clad steamer and the English yacht Deerhound. When the Alabama was descried the Kearsarge was about three miles from the entrance of the harbor, and to avoid any question as to the line of jurisdiction, as well as to draw the Alabama off the shore, so that if disabled she could not flee in for protection, the Kearsarge stood seaward until she had attained the distance of about seven miles from the shore. At fifty minutes past ten she came quick about and approached the Alabama, and at fifty-seven minutes past ten the Alabama commenced the action with her starboard broadside at one thousand yards range. At eleven the fire was returned by the Kearsarge, and the vessels came fairly into action at about nine hundred yards distance.

Captain Winslow says it was soon apparent that Semmes did not seek close action, and fears were entertained that after some fighting he would make for the shore. To defeat this Captain Winslow determined to keep full steam on, run under the stern of the Alabama and rake; but the Alabama, by sheering and keeping her broadside to the Kearsarge, was forced with a full head of steam into a circular track.

On the seventh rotation the Alabama headed for the shore, disabled and at the mercy of the Kearsarge. A few well-directed shots brought down her flag, a white one was displayed, and the fire of the Kearsarge was reserved. The Kearsarge replied, steamed ahead and laid across the bows of the Alabama for raking. The fire of the Kearsarge being again reserved, boats were lowered and an officer in one of them came alongside at ten minutes past twelve and surrendered the Alabama, which he said was in a sinking condition, and at twenty-four minutes past twelve she went down.

The launch and second cutter of the Kearsarge, the only boats not disabled, were sent to receive the officers and crew of the sinking vessel, and Captain Winslow requested the Deerhound, which came alongside, to assist in the rescue. The pilot-boats were also engaged in picking up the crew. Six officers and sixty-four men were brought on board the Kearsarge. At ten minutes past three the Kearsarge let go her anchor in seven fathoms water.

The Alabama is reported to have discharged three hundred and seventy or more shot and shell in this engagement, but inflicted no serious damage on the Kearsarge. Thirteen or fourteen took effect in and about the hull, and sixteen or seventeen about the masts and rigging.

The Kearsarge fired one hundred and seventy-three projectiles, of which one alone killed and wounded eighteen of the crew of the Alabama, and disabled one of her guns.

Three persons were wounded on the Kearsarge. The number of killed and wounded on the Alabama is unknown. Seventeen of the wounded, two of them in a dying condition, were brought on board the Kearsarge. One hundred and fifteen officers and men of the Alabama's crew reached the shores of England and France.

The battery of the Kearsarge consisted of seven guns, namely, two 11-inch, one 30-pounder rifle, and four 12-pounders. That of the Alabama consisted of eight guns—one heavy 68-pounder, of nine thousand pounds weight; one 100-pounder rifle, and six heavy 32-pounders. In the engagement the Alabama fought seven guns and the Kearsarge five.

This has been the only fair and open sea fight which our naval men have been able to secure, as yet, during the war; and it occurred in the English Channel, in sight of the two great maritime Powers of Europe. In size, armament, and complement of men, the combatants were as near equal perhaps as could have been arranged. Most of the crew of the Alabama were Englishmen, and the gunners admitted to have been picked men of her Majesty's gunnery ship the Excellent.

Some latent remains of pride which belong to the profession, and which animated his earlier and more honorable life while sailing under the American flag, undoubtedly had an influence in inducing the pirate commander to meet a naval antagonist, after his long career of robbery and plunder of unarmed vessels, in the vain hope that it might, if successful, restore to him some portion of the respect he had forfeited, and at the same time relieve him of some of the debasement he has never ceased to feel; even when applauded by those foreign partisans who hated the country he had deserted. But the same dishonor marked his conduct on this occasion as during his whole ignoble career. Before leaving Cherbourg he deposited the chronometers and other trophies of his robberies on shore. When beaten and compelled to surrender, he threw overboard the sword that was no longer his own, and abusing the generous confidence of his brave antagonist he stole away in the English tender, whose owner proved himself, by his conduct, a fit companion for the dishonored and beaten corsair.

Having surrendered, he cannot relieve himself of his obligations as a prisoner of war until he shall be regularly exchanged. He, and each of his surviving officers and crew, whether received upon the Kearsarge or the Deerhound, are, and will be, held to be prisoners of war and amenable to the laws which govern civilized communities. A predatory rover may set the laws of nations, as well as those of his own country at defiance, but in doing so he must bide the consequences.

The Florida originally sailed from England under the name of Oreto, and under that name she was, on reaching Nassau, brought before the court through the efforts of the American consul, who was satisfied that she was in the rebel interest and intended as a rebel cruiser. The neutral authorities decided in favor of the vessel, which was permitted to proceed. Leaving Nassau she went to Green Cay, where she received on board the armament sent out for her from England, ran into Mobile, changed her name to Florida, and has since, fleeing from all naval vessels, carried on predatory war on American commerce, capturing and destroying unarmed merchantmen, without ever sending in a vessel for adjudication.

In February last, availing herself of a dark night, she escaped from Brest, eluding the Kearsarge, which was off that port. In June she visited the neutral port of St. George's, Bermuda, and remained there nine days, receiving all the coal and supplies necessary for a long piratical cruise. Leaving St. George's on the 27th of that month, she remained outside, but in sight, for three or four days, boarding all vessels that approached the island. On the 10th of July she captured the Electric Spark, near our coast, while several vessels were cruising for her, but she escaped, and was next heard from at Teneriffe, on the 4th of August. Subsequently, entering the bay of San Salvador, Brazil, she encountered the steamer Wachusett, commanded by Commander Collins, to whom she surrendered, and by whom she was brought in a leaky and dilapidated condition to Hampton Roads. Here, while at anchor, an Army transport came in collision with the shattered vessel, which sunk a few days after near the wreck of the Cumberland.

The Georgia, another English-built naval vessel which cruised under the rebel flag, repaired to Cherbourg in February, and thence proceeded to the Mersey, where she changed owners. Her armament was removed from her and she left Liverpool for Lisbon. On the 15th of August Commodore T. T. Craven, of the Niagara, fell in with her in latitude 39° 16' north, longitude 90° 39' west, sailing under the English flag. Commodore Craven took possession of the vessel as a lawful prize, and putting a prize crew on board of her, he sent her to the United States.

The Tallahassee, an English-built blockade runner from Liverpool, which port she left in the early part of the spring under the name of the Atlanta, was engaged in violating the blockade, running between Bermuda and Wilmington. I am not aware that any valid transfer of ownership of this vessel has ever taken place, but am induced to believe she is now, while depredating on our commerce, registered as a British vessel in the custom-house at Liverpool. Whatever may be the fact in that particular, this English-built neutral vessel, which had been previously engaged in the unneutral employment of carrying supplies to the rebels who are waging war upon our Government, came out of Wilmington early in August, armed, officered, and manned for predatory warfare, and, under the command of J. T. Wood, formerly of our Navy, commenced the piratical work of destroying peaceful merchant ships, robbing them of money and other valuables, and retaining as trophies of his heroism the stolen chronometers. Information of the operations of this vessel reached the Department on the 12th of August, and orders were immediately sent for all the available vessels within convenient distance to start at once in pursuit. Several vessels proceeded to sea that evening, and within forty-eight hours sixteen vessels from New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Newport, and Hampton Roads were in search of her. But she reached Halifax in safety. Instead of remaining there nine days getting supplies, as did the Florida at Bermuda, the authorities would permit her to receive only a limited quantity of coals, and she was therefore but a short time in that port. The Pontoosuc arrived in pursuit of her a few hours after her departure. She was, at last accounts, in Wilmington.

The foregoing tabular statement exhibits the number and description of vessels that have been constructed, or put in the course of construction for the Navy since the institution of active measures for the suppression of the rebellion. Some of them have been built by contract; others by the Government, in the several navy-yards. If we add to the number of those constructed under similar circumstances, and within the same period, that have been lost by shipwreck, in battle, &c., namely: the sloops Housatonic and Adirondack, and the iron-clad Monitor, Weehawken, Keokuk, Indianola, and Tecumseh, the aggregate would be 210 vessels, 1,675 guns, and 256,755 tons.

Picket boats, and small craft built for especial purposes, are not embraced in this statement.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL VESSELS.

At the commencement of the rebellion the Navy consisted of sailing vessels, a few paddle-wheel steamers, and screw vessels with auxiliary steam power. Among the latter, the principal and most important were the steam frigates, which, on account of their great draught of water, were unsuitable for any other purpose than that of cruisers on foreign stations as flag-ships, for which, indeed, they were intended. These vessels had been built to meet the conditions of their day; some of them, the Mississippi for instance, had been in service more than twenty years. When constructed the principal object in view was armament, not speed, and they were equal, if not superior, to the vessels of other naval Powers. For attacks on forts, when accessible to naval attacks, or to protect troops in landing, they can still render service. Time was required to repair and place in proper condition such of these vessels as were dismantled, and also those which were recalled from service abroad. The sailing men-of-war had become useless for fighting purposes. In the emergency that devolved upon it at the beginning of hostilities, the Department resorted to the commercial marine, and purchased every available merchant steamer that could advantageously be converted into a naval vessel, and be used to enforce the blockade.

The want of a class of small, heavily armed, propeller vessels was felt, and the Department immediately proceeded, on its own responsibility, and without any appropriation or authorization by Congress, to contract for the construction of twenty-three gunboats, of which the Unadilla, Pinola, and Wissahickon may be taken as the type. Some of these vessels were afloat, armed, and manned within four months from the date of contract, and participated in the attack on Port Royal; others took part on the lower Mississippi in passing the forts and in capturing New Orleans. These gunboats continue to maintain a good reputation, and their steam machinery gives satisfaction. Well adapted as they are in guarding our coast, a larger description was needed for ocean service, and four vessels of the class of the Ossipee, mounting each two guns of eleven inches, were built. There were also four vessels of slightly less tonnage constructed, carrying the same armament, of which the Kearsarge is the type. The Shenandoah is the type of six vessels, mounting each three 11-inch guns, all of which sustain a high reputation. The heavy guns mentioned constitute the principal armament of the several classes named, but they each have in addition from two to six guns of less caliber. All of these vessels are screw steamers, suitable for sea cruising; but for the shallow sounds and bays, the rivers and bayous, often narrow and tortuous, another and different class, drawing less water, was found to be necessary, and for them competition was invited. To turn in these frequently restricted channels is difficult, and sometimes impossible, and the necessities of the case suggested the principle of a fighting vessel with a double bow and rudder at each end. Twelve paddle-wheel steamers constructed on this principle were built, some in the navy-yards and others by contract. The Port Royal and the Sonoma are types of this class. An additional number, amounting to twenty-seven, of these double-bowed paddle-wheel vessels have been built, almost all of them by contract. The Sassacus, which was distinguished in the attack on the rebel ram in Albemarle sound, the Metacomet, conspicuous in Mobile bay, and the Eutaw, are types of these vessels. Eight of this class are built or building of iron, and will have strength sufficient for sea service as well as for inland waters. One of them, the Waterer, sent round Cape Horn, reached San Francisco in September last, and is on duty in the Pacific.

In order to have armed vessels suitable for naval operations on the Mississippi and its tributaries, the Department invited plans and propositions from ship-builders and others acquainted with those waters, and the vessels built on those rivers have been chiefly from the plans submitted by parties thus invited. Two of these vessels, built at St. Louis, participated in the action with the rebel ram Tennessee, and have done good service in Mobile bay.

The entire class of monitor or turreted vessels has been brought into existence during this war, and the coast and harbor iron-clads have been serviceable in James river, at Charleston, and at Mobile. Modifications and improvements have been made in this class of armored vessels.

The pressure for iron-clads of light draught, which could ascend the rivers and penetrate the sounds and bays along our coast, was felt to be a necessity. The operations of our armies in the vicinity of the inland water and adjacent to the rivers required the constant presence of gunboats. But the men thus employed, as well as the magazines and machinery of the vessels, are exposed, especially in the narrow streams with high and wooded banks. Some vessels, and not a few valuable lives, have been lost by these exposures, and in order to afford all possible protection to the gallant men who encounter these dangers, the Department considered it a duty to provide armored vessels of light draught for their security. Contracts were entered into for the construction of twenty vessels on the monitor principle, each to carry two 11-inch guns, in order to be efficient, and to draw but seven feet of water.

It was ascertained, however, when the first two approached completion that their draught of water was more than was intended. The heavy armor and the two 11-inch guns, with the machinery to give them proper speed, involved the necessity of enlarging the capacity of each of them. When making these necessary alterations it was deemed advisable, under applications from some of the commanders of squadrons for boats that should present but a small rise above the surface of the water, to dispense with the turrets in five of these light-draught vessels, with a view to special operations. The remaining fifteen were ordered to be enlarged by raising their decks, thereby giving them additional tonnage and greater draught, and making them more efficient, but in other respects carrying out the original design. This work is now being performed, and more of the vessels are near completion.

The exigencies of the times and the necessities of the war have stimulated the inventive faculties of our countrymen to vast improvements in vessels, in engines, in ordnance, and projectiles. That in some instances they are not at first entirely successful is not surprising. Mistakes and even failures will occur. In nearly every class of vessels that has been built, and especially those that are armored, more or less alterations have been found necessary while they were being constructed. Only two of the monitor class of vessels—the Dictator and the Puritan—are proposed for sea service. Their success, of which the inventor and builder is sanguine, is among the experiments that the period and the exigencies of the country have imposed upon the Department.

Four turreted vessels have been built in the navy-yards of wood and cased with iron, differing therein from the original monitors, which are exclusively of iron. One of them, the Monadnock, now in commission, has performed her trips from Boston to Hampton Roads with entire satisfaction, giving assurance that this experiment, deviating in essential respects from others, is likely to be successful. The draught of water of the Monadnock is twelve feet, and with two independent screws she has a speed of ten knots. Four other similar vessels of a still more formidable and invulnerable character are building.

The only sea-going iron-clad ships, besides the two turreted vessels already mentioned, are the New Ironsides, built in 1862; the Roanoke, one of the old frigates which has been armored, and the Dunderberg, a casemate vessel. For this vessel the contractor has promised a speed of fifteen knots at sea.

The Department has, on several occasions, invited propositions for iron sea-going armored ships, but Congress having declined to make the necessary appropriations, no measures have been taken for their construction.

The vessels recently built, and at present constructing in the navy-yards, are of wood, the smaller class of them being gunboats, eight of which are of the class of the Nipsic, of 600 tons, mounting one heavy pivot and four broadside guns. There are four of the class of the Nantucket, of 900 tons, mounting one heavy pivot, with six broadside guns. In addition to these there are four vessels of the class of the Algona, with a tonnage of 1,350 tons, and proportionate armament. All of these vessels have very considerable steam power, and will, as some of them have already proved, be efficient cruisers at sea.

The immediate wants of the blockade having been supplied by the vessels built and altered in the navy-yards, and by purchase of the best merchant steamers capable of bearing heavy armament, the attention of the Department has been bestowed on larger and more imposing ships, such as would be formidable not only for home defense but for foreign service. The position and influence of a nation among the great commercial and maritime Powers of the world are to a great extent dependent on its naval ability. Limited appropriations have already been made by Congress for vessels of this character. Each succeeding year of this war has produced from foreign ship-yards steamers of greater speed to run the blockade, and the reliable preventive of this illicit trade must be found in vessels of increased steam power. By making them of sufficient size they will be formidable, not only to neutral violators of our laws, but to any enemy. Of the vessels on which some sacrifice of armament has been made to obtain speed there are seven building, three of which are already launched, and the others will soon be ready. Two of these vessels are being built by contract, and five in the navy-yards. This class of vessels is represented by the Ammonoosuc and the Chattanooga. There are also in progress of construction twenty vessels with steam machinery of rather less power, but which are to be much more heavily armed. Ten of these, of the class of the Illinois, the Guerriere, and the Java, have covered gun decks, and will carry twenty heavy guns. Two will have a plating of thin iron as a protection from shells. The remaining ten, of the class of the Contocook and Manitou, building in the navy-yards, are of less size but with equal machinery and intended for greater speed. As all of them will be provided with masts and sails, they can be cruising vessels and used on foreign stations.

STEAM MACHINERY.

As our Navy has become not only exclusively a steam Navy, but a very large one, with an enormous consumption of coal and great expenditure for the construction and repair of machinery, it becomes a matter of the first consequence that only the best machinery be obtained for it. This problem is one of very difficult, costly, and slow solution. The great maritime countries of England and France have not yet solved it, either in the commercial or war marine, and at this hour the best authorities do not agree upon it. So many conditions enter into the problem that as prominence is given more or less to one or the other different conclusions are reached. It is evident that as the question is purely a practical one, it can only be answered by extensive experience and accurate observations. Mindful of the importance of this matter, the Department, notwithstanding the great pressure upon its resources by the war, has kept it in view and promoted by every means the acquisition of the necessary information. The proportions of hulls have been varied with a view to determine the relative development of speed in proportion to given power; machinery has been constructed upon different types and systems, and the Department has encouraged all offers from citizens, as well as from its own officers, to build new machinery that gave promise of improvement. The Navy at this moment contains marine machinery on an extensive scale of every kind; their results are in its log-books, from which can be determined their various merits, both for general service and for particular applications.

In the new screw gunboats machinery has been used designed by Corless, of Providence, Rhode Island; J. Ericsson, of New York; William Wright, of Woodruff & Beach's establishment, at Hartford; Merrick & Sons, of Philadelphia, and the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Department. This was competitive machinery to be of equal power propelling the same hull.

In the double-bowed paddle-wheel steamers machinery has been employed designed by Merrick & Sons, of Philadelphia; by E. N. Dickerson, and by the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

In the large sloops-of-war, of three thousand tons and over, competitive machinery is being placed by the above parties, and by J. Ericsson.

In the frigates and sloops of the old Navy, and in some of those built during the early part of the present Administration, machinery was employed designed by most of the principal establishments in the country. The Fulton Iron Works and Morgan Iron Works, of New York; Messrs. Woodruff & Beach, of Hartford, Connecticut; Harrison Loring, and the Atlantic Works, of Boston; Merrick & Sons, of Philadelphia; the Vulcan Works, of Baltimore, and the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

In these vessels nearly every variety and type of engine, of valve gear, of rate of expansion, of surface condenser, of screw propeller, and of boilers, have been thoroughly tested; but the results thus far show that the machinery designed by the Steam Engineering Bureau of the Department has not been surpassed, perhaps not equaled, by any of its competitors, while in many cases their results have been greatly below it.

In its iron-clads the Department has experimented by the construction of different classes and sizes, both in wood and iron, propelled by one screw, and by two screws, working independently of each other. In its most recent constructions, of the Miantonomah class, a wooden vessel designed by the naval constructors and built at the navy-yards, with Ericsson turrets, and machinery designed by the Bureau of Steam Engineering, a high rate of speed, perfect ventilation, impregnability, and the enormous battery of four 15-inch guns, have been combined in a vessel of the moderate size of fifteen hundred and sixty-four tons, drawing only twelve feet of water. These vessels are free from the disadvantage of fouling, which so greatly reduces the speed of iron ones.

Others of this type, but of increased tonnage, are in process of construction, to have still higher speed and be adapted to coast service.

In the steamers bought from the commercial marine of the country, and in the captured blockade runners, now adapted for naval service, are to be found every variety of machinery, both screw and paddle-wheel, constructed either in this country or Great Britain. So far as the exigencies of the war would permit, the different types of machinery have been submitted to careful experiment to ascertain their relative merits. Nearly every variety of boiler and of expansive gear, of rate of expansion, and of saturated and superheated steam, has been made the subject of accurate experiment, and it is believed that the files of the Department contain the latest and most reliable information on these subjects. A chief engineer of the Navy has been sent to Europe to collect information on these topics in addition to the published accounts and official reports.

Nearly all the kinds of coals of the seaboard States have been the subject of careful experiment, with a view to ascertain their comparative value for naval purposes. A board of engineers has also experimented with petroleum as a substitute for coal in naval steamers.

As opinion appears to have settled upon the horizontal and the vertical tubular boilers as the only ones proper for naval service, the Department has had one of each kind manufactured, according to designs furnished by a board of nine engineers, employed in the principal private steam-engine manufacturing establishments of the country, and by the Bureau of Steam Engineering, for the purpose of accurate experiments to determine their respective merits. These experiments will be of the most elaborate nature, and will, it is presumed, enable a choice to be made. They are now in progress.

A commission of nine, on practical engineering, has been appointed by the Department, consisting of three from the Academy of Science, three from the Franklin Institute, and three on the part of the Department—all eminent in physical science—to devise the proper apparatus and make the necessary experiments therewith, to ascertain by practical results the economy of using steam with different degrees of expansion. These experiments, which are now in progress, will be as elaborate and as complete as it is possible to make them. And under the practical conditions of steam engineering, it is believed they will indisputably set at rest the amount of gain to be obtained from using steam with different measures of expansion, and also determine the relative merits of different kinds of valve gear, steam pressure, &c., besides settling many incidental questions of great importance.

Nothing has been left undone in the way of ascertaining and putting in use all valuable improvements in steam machinery, and no occasion neglected of experimentally determining the data necessary for correct opinion.

The competitive engines and boilers now under construction and trial will furnish information which will be of great public utility.

NAVY-YARD FOR IRON VESSELS AND MACHINERY.

The introduction of steam as a motive power for naval vessels is causing a revolution in maritime warfare which the ablest minds have long predicted would be the result of this agency, but which is not yet to its fullest extent appreciated. It changes the whole character of blockade, and in future wars it will be found that a few fast privateers by steam will harass or annihilate the commerce of the most powerful belligerent nations.

Our country has been compelled by this civil war to take the initiative in organizing a vast steam navy with which to establish and enforce the blockade of our whole coast from the Chesapeake Bay to the Rio Grande; and also to suppress the depredations of semi-piratical privateers, built by skilled English mechanics in English ship-yards, and manned by Englishmen, which, under the rebel flag, have roved the ocean, destroying our merchant shipping, and have found refuge and supplies in English and neutral ports.

When hostilities commenced, our Government had provided no suitable navy-yard with machine shops and foundries to manufacture the necessary machinery for our rapidly increasing and expanding Navy; but the Department was compelled to rely on the few private establishments, which it could divert from other engagements, for the immense work that was calling out the resources of the nation.

Great embarrassment was experienced in consequence of this neglect of the Government at the very commencement of the war, and although the naval service and the country are suffering constantly from this neglect, measures for the establishment of a suitable navy-yard for the construction and repair of iron vessels, their armature and steam machinery, are still delayed.

As early as March, 1862, and on several occasions since, I have had the honor to present my views to Congress on this subject. The earnestness and frequency with which it has been brought forward must find an apology in its great importance.

It has never been the purpose of the Department, in any of its suggestions or recommendations, to increase the number of our navy-yards, nor to alter their local distribution. The yard which we now have at Philadelphia is altogether inadequate to our present or future wants. It was proposed, therefore, to substitute a new one on the Delaware, in the vicinity of Philadelphia. League Island, within the limits of that city, if adopted as a site, must gradually absorb the works at the present yard, which would then be discontinued.

All of our present navy-yards, it will be remembered, were established for the construction and repair of wooden sailing vessels. Steam and armored vessels have superseded these, and the inability of our present establishments for the work imposed by this war has been the source of inexpressible anxiety, and often of great disappointment and public injury. To relieve the navy-yards from work which they have but limited means to execute, and to secure necessary repairs, the Department has been compelled to establish stations for machinery and means of refitment at Mound City, Memphis, New Orleans, Ship Island, Pensacola, Key West, Port Royal, Beaufort, Norfolk, and Baltimore. But these and all the private establishments of the country, besides other calls upon them, have been insufficient to keep the present Navy in necessary order, so that, if to the duty of blockading there were added ocean conflicts with a naval Power by which our ships would be often disabled, the sad spectacle would be presented of our naval vessels laid up in time of war for want of a proper establishment with the shops and means to repair them.

Our country, whose strength and power among nations must ever be identified with and maintained by its Navy, and which possesses in such abundance the means of creating and sustaining one, has not, in all the navy-yards combined, the appliances possessed by single establishments in England and France. Were there outside of our navy-yards establishments to perform promptly the requisite work in time of war, I should not at this time again press the subject of a navy-yard for iron work for the construction of vessels upon the consideration of our authorities. But although the Department has generally been ably and zealously seconded in its efforts by private contractors, yet the fact that there is no customer but the Government for much of this heavy class of iron work, forbids us to expect that individual enterprise will be prepared to execute it without full remuneration for all the outlay for shops, tools, and machinery which may be required in preparation. Besides this, unlimited time is taken by them for the completion of the work. It may be proper to mention, as an instance of the delay to which the Government is subjected, that in October, 1862, contracts were made with a manufacturer of reputation and ability for making and setting up the turrets of the Tonawanda and Minatomah, which were to have been completed in February, 1863, but they will probably not be finished until February, 1865, two years after the expiration of the time specified in the contract. At the commencement of hostilities this Department had equipped, and at its immediate disposal, three vessels of war. Those which were laid up, and those which were recalled from abroad, had to undergo extensive repairs, for which no provision had been made. The Government has not even at this time an establishment where a shaft can be made for our steamers or a plate for our iron-clads. The frontage or wharfage at all our navy-yards, so important for repairs, is less than is required at each of them.

Our next contest may be with a naval Power which will attempt to direct upon our shores a course of operations similar to those which we have applied to the southern coast for suppressing the rebellion. One yard, at least, where iron vessels, iron armor, and iron shafting can be manufactured, is now imperatively necessary. Among the considerations that should control the selection of a site for such a yard and establishment, which shall become the depot for materials collected in years of peace, with which to build and repair our naval vessels, and where will be aggregated machinery and tools such as at present are not to be found in this country, and which, when once procured, could not, if destroyed, be easily or readily replaced, will be its absolute safety from attack by sea or land. So far as is possible we should avail ourselves of natural advantages in obtaining the indispensable security for such an establishment, without depending entirely on fortifications and artificial means, which would be more costly than the navy-yard itself.

The additional military defenses of Portsmouth, England, rendered necessary by the proximity of that great naval station to the ocean, and its consequent assailability by modern ordnance, are now being constructed at an expense of $50,000,000.

A navy-yard, if we have one for naval iron work, should be established on fresh water, for this is essential to the preservation of iron vessels, which cannot be laid up in salt water during peace. Ready access to coal, iron, and timber, is also important, for these essential articles should be always available on the inland waters without exposure to an enemy by coastwise transportation. The vicinity of a large city where skilled artisans can be obtained without difficulty, and the facilities of markets and tenements are abundant, should be considered. A foundation of gravel would, for the purposes of machinery, be preferable to stone. An extensive water frontage must also be secured. For such a depot and establishment, where costly machinery and material would accumulate during years of peace, the advantages of an interior location are most manifest. These favorable conditions are to be obtained nowhere else so completely as on the Delaware river; and the position of League Island, within the limits of the city of Philadelphia, presents probably a stronger combination of the points that are necessary than any other location.

It is to be regretted that competition for supposed local benefits should interfere with, retard, and perhaps entirely defeat the Government in its efforts to secure so important a national establishment. If in such a conflict for sectional favor the country should lose forever the best situation for such a navy-yard and establishment, the result would be always deplored. The Department has studiously avoided the controversy which has arisen in consequence of the efforts to secure a navy-yard at New London, which is foreign to the question of enlarging or substituting a more commodious establishment at Philadelphia. A multiplicity of small yards, similar in character, crowded into one section of the country, was not the object or purpose of the Department in the suggestions and recommendations which it has from time to time urged upon Congress. There are already three navy-yards east of the Hudson, and should Congress deem it advisable to add another to that section or elsewhere, it is to be hoped that such determination will not interfere with or prevent the Government from having a proper establishment for the construction of iron vessels, iron armor, and iron work of every description for naval purposes in the immediate vicinity of the iron and coal region of the more central portions of the Union. Such an establishment as the Department has advised on the Delaware would not add to the number of yards, but would be a mere substitution, without one dollar's expense to the Government for land, of the more commodious and extensive grounds and water front of League Island, in place of the present limited and restricted site at Philadelphia, which is wholly inadequate and insufficient for the purposes of a yard for even wooden ships.

Among the reasons which impel me again to introduce this subject, and earnestly press it upon the immediate attention of Congress, is the fact that the great Pennsylvania Central railroad has moved with a view of obtaining a portion of the least valuable part of League Island for a depot. The objections urged against that position for a navy-yard, with its workshops, have no weight with this company, which requires shops and heavy work, and knows its own interest. Unless, therefore, this free gift of over six hundred acres of land, with a water front of twenty-three feet depth, extending for more than two miles, within the limits of Philadelphia, should be accepted during the present session of Congress, it will probably pass into private hands, and the most desirable and available position in this country for such a yard will be diverted to other purposes, and lost forever to the Government. As a measure of ordinary prudence, it is most earnestly recommended that the offer of League Island be without delay accepted. When plans for its improvement shall be submitted, and an appropriation asked, with a view of transferring the works at the present yard to the new location, Congress can then exercise its discretion in determining the amount of expenditure proper for this purpose.

NAVY-YARD ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

By an act of Congress, approved June 30, 1864, the Secretary of the Navy was "authorized and empowered to appoint a commission, consisting of one naval officer, one officer of the engineer corps, and one civilian, to select the most appropriate site for a navy-yard or naval station on the Mississippi river, or upon one of its tributaries, and to report to the next session of Congress." In pursuance of the authority conferred on me by this act, a commission has been constituted, and is now engaged in making the required examinations. Rear Admiral Charles H. Davis, who has had experience as commanding officer of the Mississippi squadron, was appointed senior member of the commission. The Secretary of War having been requested to name a suitable officer of the engineer corps to be associated on this commission, and having named and detailed Lieutenant Colonel A. H. Bowman for the purpose, that officer was appointed. George W. Blunt, a civilian of nautical reputation and ability, of the city of New York, is the third gentleman of the commission.

NAVAL RANK.

There is in the naval branch of the public service no rank corresponding with that of lieutenant general. Congress has established the grade of rear admiral, which corresponds with that of major general, and it would be an act of recognition eminently deserved, and which would be fully appreciated by the gallant men of the Navy, were Congress to authorize the appointment of a vice admiral. Such honors and preferments stimulate heroes.

Among eminent commanders in our naval service, of whom the nation may well be proud, we have one who, all will acknowledge, merits by his achievements as high rank as that of any naval officer in any country.

On the occasion of the recent brilliant victory in the bay of Mobile, more glorious, perhaps, in some of its incidents, even than the memorable conflict that gave us the possession and ultimately restored the free navigation of the Mississippi, it was, beyond question, the spontaneous sentiment of the country that the veteran hero who had illustrated our naval annals by these grand successes was worthy of the highest honors, and should be promoted to the highest naval rank. In recommending, therefore, that the office of vice admiral should be created, and the appointment conferred on Rear Admiral David G. Farragut, I but respond, as I believe, to the voice and wishes of the naval service and of the whole country.

The attention of Congress, through the Naval Committee, has heretofore been called to the fact that the number of officers on the active list in the grades of commodore, captain, commander, and lieutenant commander, is not equal to the number of vessels of the different rates required by law to be commanded by officers of these grades. A small increase was recommended, as well as an alteration in the law relative to filling vacancies in the grade of admiral in time of peace. My letter on this subject, with the accompanying draft of a bill, making provision also for the incorporation into the regular service of a few volunteer officers who, by zeal, ability, and service during the war, have merited this reward, will be found in the appendix to this report.

ENLISTMENT

The enactments of the last session of Congress in regard to enlistments have been in their operation beneficial to the naval service, and in a great degree have corrected the unfortunate legislation of the preceding session. Not only the full complement of men required has entered the service, but a surplus of many thousands of landsmen have offered, who could not be received. But the want of seamen is still felt. Large numbers of that valuable class were induced to enter the Army when high bounties were given to the soldiers and withheld from the sailors. Many thousand trained seamen, under those extraordinary inducements, enlisted in the Army before the legislation for the two branches of the public service was equalized. Although the law now authorizes their transfer to the Navy, a very considerable portion of them still remain in the Army, where landsmen would be of equal service. Seamen are experts, and cannot be procured by draft, or secured for an emergency like the present, any more than engineers or accomplished gunnery officers.

Stimulated by patriotic impulse, men may volunteer to serve their country in any capacity, but they cannot be made available as seamen without training and experience at sea.

The organization of a man-of-war is very different from that of a merchant vessel. A first-rate sailor will soon make himself at home on board of any ship; but the division of duties—the system of petty officers, the exercise at quarters and in boats, the discipline, the observances, and the thorough and complete system of a man-of-war, are unknown out of naval ships. There are no means by which to teach landsmen to become sailors except on shipboard, and there is difficulty in inducing native Americans to enter either the naval or merchant service. In other countries the field of adventure is restricted; here the avenues are many, besides ocean life. I am not aware that any State but Massachusetts has a nautical school. Encouragement is given to the young in every other calling; but the naval and merchant service, in time of peace, depend almost entirely upon the foreigners and the homeless for mariners to sail their ships. These men who hardly touch the shores without finding themselves the victims of land sharks, and who scarcely receive a thought in the vast and generous sanitary operations, put in motion by wealth and beneficent patriotism, have enriched our country by their labors in commercial employments; and in danger, privation, and hardship have adhered with unwavering fidelity to the flag, never disappointing us, and never giving us defeat.

With a view of doing some measure of justice to this meritorious but too much neglected class, and as a preliminary step toward their elevation and usefulness, the Sabine has been fitted up for the purpose of a school-ship for boys. This is, in fact, a revival, with some modifications, of the apprentice system, which, while it was continued, worked beneficially for the sailor and the country. Some measures are requisite to elevate the condition and the character of this class now, when the sailor is neither flogged nor taught to become a drunkard, two important steps in the right direction toward making him a man to be trusted on shore as well as afloat.

Commencing as apprentices on the school-ship, it would be well to open to the sailor boy the way to promotion by giving him an opportunity, if he shall deserve it, of entering the Naval Academy. From among the apprentices on the school-ship a selection of one half of the midshipmen annually appointed might be made with great advantage to the service of the country. These apprentices, in their preliminary training on the school-ship, will have developed their capabilities and aptitude for the profession, and in transferring them to the Academy there will not be the manifold errors which attend so large a portion of those who are appointed under the present system. Were each congressional district authorized to place two or more apprentices on the school-ship, and the annual selection of midshipmen, or one half of the midshipmen, directed to be made from these apprentices, it would be most beneficial to the sailor, as well as the schools and the service. It would popularize the Navy, and open to those who may have enlisted the highest positions and honors of the service.

NAVAL ACADEMY.

Congress having, by the act approved May 21, 1864, directed that "the United States Naval Academy shall be returned to and established at the Naval Academy grounds in Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, before the commencement of the academic year 1865," it will be necessary that preparations should be commenced for putting the buildings and grounds in order as early in the ensuing spring as the War Department can leave them. The School and the service will be benefited by having the institution permanently established, and when this is effected it will be enabled to pursue its career under circumstances more favorable to the efficient training of the midshipmen.

The able Superintendent, Commodore George S. Blake, has preserved his connection with the School during its unsettled state, and its management, under many disadvantages, has been creditable to him and his associates.

CADET ENGINEERS.

Preliminary measures have been taken to carry into effect the law of the last session of Congress authorizing the education at the Naval Academy of cadet engineers, to be selected from youths not over eighteen years of age, who shall have been engaged at least two years in the fabrication of steam machinery. A circular has been issued and printed in the papers of the great manufacturing cities, inviting applications in conformity to the law.

Before this plan shall be put in operation, it is respectfully submitted, in view of the radical changes which have been wrought by steam as a motive power for naval vessels, whether steam engineering should not be made to constitute hereafter a necessary part of the education of all midshipmen, so that in our future Navy every line officer will be a steam engineer, and qualified to have complete command and direction of his ship. Hereafter every vessel-of-war must be a steam-vessel. Those designed for ocean service will be furnished with sails in order to economize fuel while cruising; the present and future Navy will therefore combine sails and steam as motive power, and seamanship and steam-engine driving will each be necessary to make the finished professional officer. The officers to sail and navigate a ship and the officers to run the steam engine are about equal in number.

The Department is not aware that any line officer, whatever attention may have been given by him to the theoretical study of steam, is yet capable of taking charge of an engine, nor are steam-engine drivers capable of taking charge of a man-of-war, navigating her, fighting her guns, and preserving her discipline. When vessels were propelled exclusively by sails, there were but two officers, excepting in flag-ships, the surgeon and paymaster, who were not line officers. But under the present naval system a new and additional corps is introduced, as many steam engineers being required for a vessel as there are line officers; and, while cruising under sail, or lying in port, or performing any duty when the engine is at rest, one half of the officers are, by existing regulations, idle and incapable of participating in duties that are often laborious and oppressive on the officers of the line, comparatively speaking. The engineers would willingly share these duties were they acquainted with them. But half the officers of a steamship cannot keep watch, cannot navigate her, cannot exercise the great guns or small-arms, nor, except as volunteers under a line officer, take part in any expedition against the enemy. On the other hand, the other half of the officers are incapable of managing the steam motive power, or of taking charge of the engine room in an emergency, nor can the commander of a vessel, though carefully taught every duty of a sailor and drill officer, understand, of his own knowledge, whether the engineers and firemen are competent or not.

The remedy for all this is very simple, provided the principle were once recognized and adopted of making our officers engine drivers as well as sailors. It would not be expedient to interfere with the present status of line officers or engineers—the change would be too radical; but we should begin by teaching each midshipman to be able to discharge the duties of line officers and steam engineers; to combine the two in one profession, so that officers so educated can take their watch alternately in the engine room and on deck.

Objections may be made that the duties are dissimilar, and that steam-engine driving is a specialty. The duties are not more dissimilar than seamanship and gunnery. When seamanship was the only education given to an officer it was not believed he could ever learn to teach sailors to drill, and a sergeant of marines performed the duty which is now so admirably discharged by the graduates of the Naval Academy. When gunnery became a specialty, it was inconsiderately and unwisely proposed to have a corps of ordnance officers ingrafted upon the naval service, a separate organization which should draw to itself the knowledge so necessary to each, and therefore proper to be distributed among all the officers.

Fortunately our naval officers are taught seamanship, gunnery, and the infantry drill, and the service thereby saved from distinct organizations in these respects, which would inevitably have impaired its efficiency. It only remains to commence at this time, and as preparatory to the future of the Navy, to teach the midshipmen steam engineering as applied to running the engine. This would be independent of the art of designing and constructing, which is purely a specialty and nowise necessary in the management and direction of the ship. And to this specialty, as a highly scientific body of officers, would the present corps of engineers be always required as inspectors and constructors of machinery. With the adoption of the suggestions here made we shall in due time have a homogeneous corps of officers who will be masters of the motive power of their ships in the future as they have been of seamanship in the past. By this arrangement there will be in each ship double the number of officers capable of fighting and running the vessel without additional appointments or expense. Innumerable other advantages commend the plan as worthy of trial, and it is presented for favorable consideration. The work can be commenced and carried forward at the Naval Academy without any additional appropriation, and the authority of Congress is invoked in behalf of the suggestions here submitted.

PRIZES AND PENSIONS.

The number of vessels captured by the squadrons since the last annual report, and reported to the Department prior to November 1, is 324, classified as follows: schooners, 105; steamers, 88; sloops, 40; brigs, 3; barks, 3; small boats, 85. The total number of captures since the commencement of the rebellion is 1,379, namely: schooners, 652; steamers, 267; sloops, 171; brigs, 33; barks, 29; ships, 15; yachts and small boats, 117.

The gross proceeds arising from the sale of condemned prize property amount to $14,396,250 51; expenses, $1,237,153 96; leaving for distribution, one half to the captors, and one half to the United States as a naval pension fund, $13,190,841 46.

Annexed to this report is a table giving the names of vessels captured, date of capture, name of capturing vessel, &c. Also a list of cases already adjudicated, showing the gross proceeds of sale, the expense of condemnation, and the net amount for distribution.

A joint resolution of Congress, approved on the 1st of July last, authorized the Secretary of the Navy to invest so much of the naval pension fund as was not required for the immediate payment or pensions in the registered securities of the United States. Under the authority conferred upon me, I have invested $5,000,000, as provided in the resolution, and on the 1st of January next there will be the further sum of $2,000,000, which can be invested without interfering with the prompt payment of pensions. This amount will yield an annual income of $420,000, sufficient for the payment of the entire pension roll. It affords me no little gratification to be able to state that our brave officers and seamen, besides realizing handsome sums for themselves, have created a fund, the income from which will, doubtless, be ample for the payment of the authorized pension to those who have been wounded, and to the widows and orphans of those who have been killed in the service, or died from disease contracted in the line of duty, without calling upon the national Treasury.

The pension roll on the 1st of November, 1864, was as follows:

769 invalids with pensions amounting to...	$50,401 10
840 widows and orphans amounting to.....	139,253 00

1,609 persons receiving a total amount of....	$189,654 10
